He was comforted. He hardly knew himself how great was the estimation in which he held Ethel—how strong was his reliance upon her, how great his trust in her. A few words from her worked wonders in him. He left the house that afternoon happier than he had been for many days.

THE SMOKE PROBLEM.

How the People of Butte, Mont., Abated a Nuisance.

"The smoke nuisance, of which many cities are at present complaining, was summarily settled by the people of Butte, Mont., so far as it affected that place," says a writer. "Butte is built on the side of a long hill which is surmounted by a busy hive of copper and silver mines and mills. Just below the town is a suburb called Meadville, where the copper smelters are located. The ore is first of all roasted in great heaps outside the smelting furnaces in order to remove the sulphur. When the atmosphere is all cool the smoke rises and settles gradually over the town. It is very much worse than soft coal smoke, because it is full of sulphur, which is not only bad smelling but dangerous. After an hour or so in this air one's throat becomes irritated and the air passages become clogged. These conditions make the way easy for pneumonia, a disease viewed in the past by Butte people with greater alarm than cholera. Often this sulphurous smoke became so dense that it was impossible to see across the narrowest street, and the people were forced to go about with lanterns.

"The people of Butte tried every way to get rid of this dangerous nuisance. They held meetings, passed resolutions and petitioned mining companies city councils and Legislatures. They made pleas and threatened boycotts, but all without avail, for, once started, a smoke nuisance grows like a green bay tree, and is as hard to kill as pigweed. Each winter the pneumonia swept through the camp like a scourge, and the spring brought hundreds of new graves to bear evidence of the cold avarice of mining corporations.

"One day last year, when the smoke was bad, several old-timers were standing on the corner of Main street discussing the situation. Among them was Gen. Charles S. Warren, widely known for his ability to make an after-dinner speech and hold an ace full.

"'In the old days the boys would have cleaned out these roast heaps mighty quick,' said one.

"'What's the matter with doing it now?' said the General.

"'Nothing,' cried the others in a chorus.

"The news quickly spread that the citizens were going to solve the smoke problem, and in ten minutes the street in front of the court-house was packed with crowds of cheering people. The General made a short speech and a great procession was started for Meadeville. It grew as it passed along, until nearly all of Butte was on the march. At Meadville a few superintendents and owners were flying about with threats of injunctions, but they were silenced when the General cried:

"'To h——ll with you people whose families live East. We have got wives and children here.'

"And then the work of destruction commenced. Big dynamite cartridges were dropped in the roast heaps, and up went the ore with the costly plants for treatment. When heaps worth more than $60,000 had been spoiled the crowd returned home and awoke next morning to find an entire freedom from sulphurous fumes. This practically settled the smoke problem, and now the companies are building stacks on the hill to carry away the smoke or are moving their smelters."

CAPITOL KITCHENS.

A VISIT TO THE BASEMENT OF THE SENATE.

Ovens Which Will Roast Oxen and Gridirons Big Enough for Sheep—Glimpses of Our Big Brained Statesmen at the Dining Table.

What Senators Eat.

Congress wants new kitchens. A committee of the House has been appointed to investigate the matter, and the members are by no means satisfied with the dark rooms and old-fashioned cooking utensils with which the basement of that part of the Capitol is furnished. The restaurants of Congress do as big a business as any high-toned eating houses in the United States. Nearly a thousand people are fed daily at the tables of the House restaurant, and fully five hundred have their stomachs tickled by the appetizing viands dished up in the restaurant of the Senate. The Senate of the United States recently put in new kitchens, and there is no club house in the world that has a better culinary apparatus. Our greatest statesmen are more particular as to their bills of fare than they are as to the bills before Congress. They want all the latest frills in the fashion of their dishes, and they use everything that modern invention can supply to help them in their cooking. I have spent some time this week in sampling the good things of the restaurants and have made a study of the Senate kitchen. The latter cannot but be interesting to the women of the United States. They are away down under the ground. You go through winding stairways into the sub-basement of the Capitol.

The kitchens, storerooms and bakeries of the Senate form one of the busi-

est parts of the Capitol building. It takes about thirty employes to run them. You see white-aproned, white-capped men everywhere, and there are cooks and dish washers, oyster shuckers and bakers, making up a corps large enough to run a big summer hotel. The main room of the kitchen proper is 15 feet wide by 100 feet long. It contains two ranges, each big enough to roast an ox, and it has patent steamers and baking machines here and there about it. In one corner is the biggest soup pot in Washington. It will hold about two bushels of liquid and it is the size of the largest apple butter kettle. It is made of the brightest of red copper and it is used for keeping the stock for the making of the soup. Nickel-plated steam pipes run through it and the liquid is always hot. A little further over there is a copper pot of about half this size, heated in the same way, in which the cranberry sauce and apple sauce which is eaten by these Senators is cooked, and near this is a patent turkey roaster. It would make your mouth water to know just how good the turkeys cooked by this process are. They are roasted by steam, and the roaster is a double iron box about as big as the average dry goods box, within the walls of which steam is conducted by nickel-plated pipes, thoroughly roasting the mallard ducks and the twenty-pound turkeys which are laid away within it. Another feature of this kitchen is the grill. It is a gridiron so large that you could lay the largest sheep upon it and broil it. This rests over a bed of red-hot charcoal, and the fire is such that the steak or chop can be well done in five minutes. This grill is kept going about six hours a day, and the juicy meat which comes from it has made most of the gray matter which you will find in the alleged brains of the Congressional Record.

The dining rooms of these Senators are worth looking at. Their walls and ceilings are frescoed. They sit around the finest of damask cloths on chairs of oak, cushioned with green leather. Their dishes are china and their forks are of silver. The most of them prefer steel knives, and silver is only used for the cutting of fruit. The common dining room is apart from that used by the Senators, and there is a pie and oyster counter presided over by waiters. At these the statesmen now and then take a snack, but the most of them are good livers, and they take a full meal at noon every day in the year.

Funny to Watch 'Em.

It is funny to watch them eat and to see "Upon what meat these our Caesars feed that they may grow so great." Take Don Cameron. He looks like a dyspeptic, and as he sits in the Senate he chews his red mustache as if he were hungry. He is as lean as a rail, and you would never suppose that he was one of the biggest eaters of the Capitol. He likes rich food, and he washes his lunch down every day with a pint of champagne. One of his favorite dishes is calves' liver and bacon, and he smacks his lips three times a week over a chafing dish stew. Senator Stewart of Nevada is another man who is fond of a chafing dish stew, and there is a baker's dozen of Senators who think that oysters served in this way form a dish for the gods. Senator Stewart cooks his oysters himself. He call for a dozen of the finest selects and these are brought to him at the table and a chafing dish is set before him. There is no water used. The oysters are stewed in their own liquor in a large glass of the best sherry wine, and in addition he puts in a big lump of butter and the yelks of two eggs, and then salts and pepers to taste. It is one of the richest dishes known to public men and is very productive of gout.

Senator Hawley knows what is good, but he usually takes a light lunch. His favorite dish is chicken soup, and after this he has a piece of apple pie and a glass of milk. If he has a friend with him he spreads himself out over the whole bill of fare, but when alone his lunch is a light one. Senator Sherman is another pie eater. His favorites are apple and custard, and he always takes a glass of milk with his lunch. Senator Frye lunches on apple pie and a cup of tea. Peffer of Kansas confines himself to a bowl of bread and milk or an oyster stew. Joe Blackburn and Arthur P. Gorman are both fond of good living. Senator Hoar of Massachusetts has the reputation of being a light feeder. He is, however, one of the richest gourmands of the Senate, and he is fond of filling his round stomach with a chafing dish stew, and he dotes on sweetbreads served up in butter. There is nothing too good for Senator Wolcott. He wants his food highly seasoned and he is very fond of pheasants and other game. He likes a nice porter-house steak served so rare that the blood runs down its sides. He eats a big meal every noon and the day is cold indeed when you find wrinkles in his stomach. All of these Western men live well. Hansbrough and Dubois want the best that the cooks can provide. Senator Perkins of California is a great feeder, and his colleague, Senator White, picks out a half dozen dishes and eats them all. These men seldom dine alone and the average statesman likes company at his meals. Henry Cabot Lodge usually brings a party in with him, and Tom Reed, Julius Cæsar Burrows and Doliver, of

SENATOR VEST AND THE OYSTER.

Iowa, come to the Senate and eat their lunches together.

Senator Cush Davis is one of the big fish eaters of the Capitol. He likes anything that comes from the water, and he feeds his brain on black bass five times a week. The New York Senators usually come to lunch together, and they are both good feeders, though Hill merely nibbles at the dishes he orders, while Murphy eats all of the best and lots of it. Power, of Montana, is a dyspeptic. He has no stomach to speak of, and he looks at his victuals with such a vinegar aspect that his milk has to be boiled before it is brought to him for fear it will sour. His regular lunch is a bowl of boiled milk and a plate of brown bread well toasted. He breaks the toast into the milk and dishes it up with a spoon. Senator Stockbridge, of Michigan, wants the best he can get, but he never drinks anything but water or milk. Turpie, of Indiana, lunches on oysters and wants fruit every day. Vance, of North Carolina, is satisfied with a sandwich, and Dan Voorhees eats enough country sausage and cakes to give any other statesman the gout. Wilson, of Iowa, usually dines off a glass of milk and a piece of apple pie, and Roger Q. Mills can fill up his bread basket with chicken salad and feel like a king.

National Capital Notes.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND signed the Federal elections repeal bill, and it is now a law.

THE gold reserve in the Treasury Friday lacked but $6,256 of the $100,000,000, of which it should consist.

MISS LAURA HOUGHTALING, of Asheville, N. C., a niece of Senator Stockbridge, died at his residence in Washington.

SECRETARY OF THE NAVY HERBERT has appointed a board to examine Lieut. Filleth, of Portsmouth, N. H., as to his sanity.

THE distillers are laboring with the Senate Finance Committee to secure an extension of the bonded period, which they say is absolutely necessary.

COL. DAVID B. HENDERSON, of Iowa, who lost one leg at the knee during the war, was compelled to undergo an operation on the wounded member. He stood it well and is recovering rapidly from its effects.

A BILL is said to be before the House Committee on Appropriations having for its purpose the control of the National Soldiers' Homes by the War Department. Veterans generally do not approve of the bill.

CARROLL L. RIKER, of Chicago, made a bid for the entire issue of bonds offered by Secretary Carlisle. His proposition was of an extraordinary character and his bid was ignored by the Treasury Department. Riker has filed a petition in the Supreme Court seeking a mandamus to compel Secretary Carlisle to issue $50,000,000 in bonds to him, according to the terms of his bids.

CHAIRMAN BLANCHARD says that the river and harbor bill will probably not be ready to report to the House for at least three weeks. Speaking of the size of it he says that it will be a very small bill, probably carrying about $10,000,000. There have been but a few improvements projected or now under way that have not been advocated by the members in whose districts they are situated. All this argument will not have much effect upon the committee, as the determination has been reached not to have any more new improvements provided for in this bill and to cut the appropriations for projects now under way to the lowest possible figure.

ANARCHY'S WEAPONS.

Bombs Used in Paris and in Barcelona Spain.

Dynamite bombs are the weapons used by anarchists in their warfare on society. Of two notable bombs, that used recently by Anarchist Vaillant in the French Chamber of Deputies, when over two score people were injured, and the bomb hurled by Jose Codina in Barcelona, Spain, when over a score of people in the Lyceum Theater were killed, we print illustrations. The Vaillant bomb was merely a tin can charged with solutions of different acids. The interior contained nails, which, when the explosion occurred, were scattered through the building wounding many. The bomb thrown in Barcelona was manufactured by Anarchist Sorasol, now under arrest, and was a good specimen of mechanical art.

A CANE HANDLE BOMB.

Among the extraordinary methods employed by the anarchists to destroy those against whom their enmity is directed are canes and umbrellas that hold concealed in their handles a deadly bomb, quite small, it is true, but with sufficient power to destroy. The plan is to take the cane or umbrella into the theater, store, or stock exchange and lay it upon the floor or counter. The setting of it upright in its natural position will cause it to explode with fatal result.

The explanation is that the head of the cane holds two glass vessels oblong in shape, and each filled with an explosive liquid harmless in itself so long as it is kept away from the other. The cane is carried by the anarchist in perfect safety by being held horizontally. But when lifted up and placed against the wall the fluid in the upper bottle runs into the lower, and the explosion takes place.

WEATHER AND DISEASE.

An Important Investigation on the Effects of Climatic Conditions.

Secretary Morton has opened a new field of usefulness for the weather bureau in directing that it shall collect data respecting the relation between certain climatic conditions and the prevalence of certain epidemics of disease, such, for instance, as the present visitation of la grippe, says the Philadelphia Record.

That such relation does exist is something more than a matter of moral certainty. The archives of medical science both at home and abroad teem with evidence showing the public health is largely dependent upon atmospheric conditions; but the investigation of the vitally important subject from the meteorological standpoint, and on a comprehensive national scale—which in time might readily develop into an international system—could not fail to let loose a flood of light from a new quarter upon a question of importance to human health, happiness and progress.

Indeed, it is not impossible that the sanitary researches of the weather bureau might constitute in time its most valuable function in a specific sense if not in the popular estimation, and it seems likely, too, that its evolution in this direction might be practically accomplished with little if any appreciable enlargement of its expenditures.

Succeeds Gen. Grant.

The new Assistant Secretary of War, Joseph Bodwell Doe, who succeeds Gen. Grant, resigned, was born in Janesville, Wis., in 1855, and for the past three years has been at the head of the States militia, having been appointed brigadier general by Gov. Peck. He is a lawyer by profession and is a forceful and eloquent orator, a man of fine executive ability, and of attractive personality. He first became connected with the National Guard of Wisconsin in 1878, and his new appointment raises him to a position next to the highest in the whole War Department.

GEN. J. B. DOE.

Origin of Fashions.

Mrs. Newrich—I never can remember how many cards to leave when calling.

Old Gentlemen—The rules are very simple, madame. You hand one to the servant, and then on departing leave as many cards on the plate as there are adult members of the family, adding two of your husband's cards, and occasionally dumping in a few for good measure. Do not be niggardly in dealing out cards, as that suggests vulgar poverty.

"I am ever so much obliged. Are you Mr. McAllister?"

"No, madame. I am Mr. Bristol, the card manufacturer."—Puck.

THE weak point in the testimony of the man who claimed before Justice Blume, of Chicago, that he owned a disputed goat by alleging he brought him up on a bottle was the presentation of the bottle in court. The idea that the animal would not have eaten the bottle after drinking the milk was so ridiculous that the goat was given to the other man, who claimed to have picked him up derelict on the pewawee, a pronunciation of prairie that is humbly commended to the folklore societies as rich in hidden philogical significance. Great and novel theories of the origin of all animals, including goats and men, have been built on less basis than may be contained in that.

THE AUBURN COURIER

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....FEBRUARY 22, 1894.

THE income feature of the tariff bill is likely to be retained by the senate.

BIDWELL, the Ft Wayne A. P. A. editor has been arrested on the same charge of slander again. This time it is a criminal case

RAINY LAKE, Minnesota, is the center of a newly discovered gold field. Miners are flocking in from all directions, though the mercury is often at 20 below. The best mines seem to be on the north side of the lake, in Canada.

PECKHAM, the second man nominated or the U. S. supreme bench from New York, was defeated by the senate last Friday. Hill was the cause of it. If he keeps on in this way, he will not make many friends for his presidential boom

THE ship Brother Jonathan that was wrecked near San Francisco in 1865, has been located after many years of search. It is lying in rather deep water and is not much broken. There is about a million in gold in her, which it is believed will yet be saved.

ALBERT LAHM was last week appointed postmaster of Indianapolis. The term of the present officer, Thompson, has not yet expired, but the democrats were tired of waiting and got Senator Turpie to hurry things up by preferring charges of partisanship against him.

BUD STONE, who killed the entire Wrsten family, six in all, in the south part of the state, was hanged last Thursday night at midnight, in the state prison south, at Jeffersonville. This is the first execution under this very sensible law, which puts all executions into the state prison.

EX-GOV. JAMES E. CAMPBELL, of Ohio now a resident of New York City, is a bankrupt. The expenses of his several campaigns and the loss of his law practice by being in politics and in office, are assigned as the cause He will come back to his old home at Hamilton, Ohio, and begin life over again, and take up the law again.

VICE PRESIDENT STEVENSON gave his first casting vote last week. The senate had voted 27 to 27 on the proposition to compel the Rock Island road to stop its trains at Enid and Round Pond in the territory of Oklahoma. So he voted to make the trains stop, as the towns have over 2,000 people each.

THE Wilson bill puts coal on the free list, so that the poor in the eastern states may get cheaper fuel. But republicans fight to keep the tax on coal, though it affords "protection" to none but those who are able to own coal mines. And what is true of coal is true of many other things. The entire republican policy has always been against the poor and in favor of the rich.

THE income tax that passed the House recently provides for a uniform rate of 2 per cent on any income over $4,000 This 2 per cent remains the same, no matter how much the amount. We still believe, however, that Judge McClellan's plan would have suited the people affected by such a law better than this one and would have been at least as fair. In that plan the rate was graduated, so that while a man with a very great income would still pay a heavy tax, the lighter rate made it more acceptable. It took a business view of the matter

THE South Bend Times, Hon. John B Stoll's paper, keeps up its reputation as a keen political observer, in the following remarks on the situation in this district: "It is now pretty generally understood that a determined effort will be made to defeat congressman McNagny of the twelfth district, if he should have the temerity to present himself as a candidate for renomination. Of all the democratic papers in the district less than a half dozen are favorable to McNagny. His vacillating course in the matter of appointments has alienated many of those who were formerly his most devoted adherents

SENATOR TURPIE, in his speech favoring the repeal of the Federal Supervisor laws, gave our Judge Woods, and the "Blocks of five" boodlers, this neat cut: "We have had a political judge in Indiana now in the succession, much distinguished for his rulings pro and con upon the subject of these laws, who has devoted very great attention to the practical administration of them. What is the consequence? The consequence in such a case is that this judge, a man sitting to decide questions of life, of property, of character every day in his court, finds himself in closest alliance with the most unscrupulous, the most unprincipled actors in the local party politics of Indiana, and that the judge's chambers upon the recurrence of every political campaign become headquarters for the management and administration of the political party to which he is allied, and the same feeling pursues such a one from his chambers to the bench. There has never been any ruling in favor of a political opponent indicted in our court; always against him. There never has been any conviction of a republican for any political offense in our court—not a single one. Eighty republicans were indicted, indicted upon full hearings, upon lawful information and upon full evidence, for violation of the election laws. The indictments were quashed, and what is known as the "general jail delivery" occurred in Indianapolis, and all the defendants were discharged."

COUNTY POLITICS.

Every second year, about this time of the year, the democracy of DeKalb county look to the old reliable COURIER for a few remarks. We enter on this pleasing task this year with more than ordinary pleasure. The coming campaign bids fair to be a warm one, and if we have a fight of any sort, it might as well be that sort. There is nothing that stirs up the rock-ribbed democracy so much as a red hot fight. There is nothing that brings out the vote better; there is nothing that will make us bring out our best material, like the prospect of an earnest struggle.

This brings us to the point as to candidates. Quite a number of names have come out into prominence since we mentioned this matter two or three weeks ago. Each of the places to be filled has a name or two mentioned as a possible or a probable candidate. Beginning with representative, we have heard of but one, and that is Dr. T. G. Matheny. However, we have not spoken with him about it and do not know whether he will seek the place or not. We believe he would be a good man. For clerk, we have heard the name of W. H. Less, of Waterloo, and it is said that Sol Barney, of St Joe, may yet decide to enter into the race. For auditor, we are told that F. A. Borst, the present deputy auditor, Frank P. Seiler, of Fairfield, and possibly W. L. Blair, of Butler, may be in the race. For treasurer, we have heard so far, from but one, Mr. Warren McNabb, of Garrett. For recorder, there is George L. Lanning, of this place, and possibly, though we are not sure, M. Kiplinger, of Waterloo, and Wm. Whetsell, of Franklin. For sheriff, the present incumbent, Geo. Ralston, will have no opposition, we presume, as we have always given the sheriff a second term, as we do all the two year places. So we see that Surveyor VanAuken is also entitled to a re-nomination, as he also has conducted his office in a highly satisfactory manner. As to coroner, we have heard nothing, but presume Mr. Miser can have it again if he desires it. For the very difficult position of commissioner, we have no definite word. We have merely heard friends of several parties speak of this man, or that, as suitable. In this way, for the north district we have heard mentioned, Fred. Gfeller, Allen Shultz and B. F. Cornelius. In the southwest district, we have heard R. S. S. Reed mentioned and J. Wm. Wagner, of Garrett, but we do not know that any of those named would take the office, as the pay is very light when compared with the fault-finding.

In studying over the above list of names, we feel free to say they represent good men. We can willingly support any of them, believing, as we do, that they would be honest and efficient. It would not be right for the COURIER to discriminate in favor of one democrat and against another democrat in the matter of a nomination. But when the nomination is secured, the COURIER will make the strongest fight it can for the nominee just as it has always done, no matter whether its especial friend "got there" or not. The COURIER has always made the leading fight for the party in this county and it has never been more in earnest than it is to day. It will be at the front of the fight till the polls close in November, as it has always been.

Democrats all over the county ought to read over this list of names and study for the good of the party and the good of the public. Of course, other names will be brought out as time goes on, but we must study them all and get only the best. Let us make a strong ticket—a good ticket—DeKalb deserves a good ticket, and if we do not get a good one, who is to blame? Why, the people themselves who select the delegates, or else delegates who at convention select the candidates. Let us make no mistakes.

Perhaps we did not make one matter as plain as we should in regard to the renomination of some officers. It has always been our custom to give two-year men the second term, say treasurers, sheriffs and surveyors. But as to surveyors, we have gone further. This is a difficult office, requiring a high grade of education and special abilities, and in such cases, we have continued this officer a number of terms. The special fitness govers, just as we have usually conceded the clerkship to an attorney because his duties are almost as difficult, in a legal point, as that of judge or prosecutor. It makes a great deal of difference to the people of the county who is their surveyor, more so, perhaps, than any other office.

And now a closing word: It is high time to organize for the campaign. Start the ball rolling.

Frank Jones and wife are the happy parents of a little girl born Wednesday, Feb 14.

Miss Katie Braun has been sick with a very sore throat, requiring pretty severe remedies.

Little Gracie Braun, daughter of Geo. Braun, has been very sick with measles during the past week.

The ladies connected with the M. E. church will give a supper in the Abbey block Saturday eveningg Feb. 24. Tickets 10 cents.

Friday evening a party of ladies and gentlemen to the number of twelve improved the snow and lovely moonlight by driving over from Auburn to visit Geo. Morell and wife. They brought the oysters and other fixtures, and Mr. Phil. M. and Mrs. Morell, always ready to do their part, saw nothing was lacking towards a grand good supper. With games and conversation a jolly time was had, and the "wee sma hours" had come before they separated.

Rev. Leeper, pastor of the Second Presbyterian church of Fort Wayne, preached four evenings in the Presbyterian church of this place last week. Friday evening when the writer had the pleasure of hearing him, the audience room was well filled with attentive listeners. His sermon was from these words, "And they will with one consent begin to make excuse" The reverend gentlemen is a fine speaker and showed clearly that none but flimsy excuses can be offered for not being a christian.

A little girl aged about four years living in Waterloo, on account of sickness in the family, was obliged to eat her supper alone with her father. Presently she said, "Papa do you know God sees us all the time?" "Yes," he replied. "He sees every single thing we do. Did you know that?" "Yes, again he said. "Well, He knows all of our names and they are written down in a book and whenever we do anything wrong He puts a cross against our name," then after a brief pause, "And I don't believe many people will get to heaven."

In the wrestling match at Clark's hall Thursday night between W. D. Lanville, of this place, and James Morgan, of Cincinnati, under the direction of the Garrett City Athletic Association, the former came out victorious, throwing his opponent three straight falls.

Death entered the household of Mr. and Mrs. Chris Beehler Thursday morning and claimed for its victim Bernice, their fourteen-month-old daughter. She was sick but a few hours and the doctors say it was an affection of the throat and lungs. Bernice was an unusually bright child and the blow is indeed a hard one for the parents to bear. The COURIER, with their host of friends extends its sympathy.

Herman, the 14-year old son of Mr and Mrs. J. Wm. Wagner, died very suddenly at the home of his parents on Franklin street Saturday morning. He arose in the morning, ate a hearty breakfast and afterwards went out of doors and played around his father's barn for a time. Coming in the house he got a box and his penknife and started to play, when he complained of being ill. He was carried to a bed and in less than thirty minutes was a corpse Herman had never been a healthy child, and during the holidays was very ill and his demise was expected daily, but for the past two weeks he has been as well as usual. A short service was held at the house Sunday, after which the remains were taken to Mansfield, Ohio, for interment. The family has the sympathy of a large circle of friends.

About two weeks ago two tough looking female characters came to Garrett and rented a house on Peter street. It was thought at the time that they were "crooked," but they were always quiet and orderly and gave the officers no chance to interfere. Last Thursday night a store was broken into at Waterloo and it was thought the robbers came here. Friday morning Deputy Sheriff Blum came over and with the assistance of Marshal Dare, they directed their steps toward that "resort" thinking perhaps they would find the Waterloo thieves there. They did not find their men, however, but they found out it was a house of ill repute and the two women were arrested on that charge and taken before Squire Stoner, who imposed a fine of $15 each and costs, in default of which payment they were sent to jail. Edward Stronse was arrested on a charge of frequenting a house of ill fame and fined $10 and costs which amounted to $17, which he paid. We hope this will be a lesson to all "crooked" people to stay away from Garrett.

CYCLING NEWS.

Cyclers will wear shoes on their feet the coming season.

Don't attempt to fill the tires of your pneumatic at the town pump. Let some of the free advertisers fill it with gas for you. They have an over abundance.

If you are interested in cycling, it will prove valuable to you to secure a copy of "Gospel on Wood Rims." It must be emphasized that this is not a racing fad. It is the result of years of experience on the road, and it will stand up under all conditions where the steel rim will go, and will ride faster and with more ease to the rider.

Century runs will be indulged in during the coming summer. Why not?

It will not be fashionable to stick a pin in your tire to see if it is pumped up If you try it once, take our advice and never try it again.

E. E. Benedict, superintendent of the Auburn Bicycle Repair Shop, is now prepared to do all kinds of fine nickel plating. This will save inconvenience in sending away for such work.

Whitewash will not be used on the face by the smart set. To cover the effects of fast riding, such as a flushed face, White Faun flour will be an excellent thing Only $5 a barrel this year.

The "Model E" Sterling Special, a 26 pounder, has just arrived at the Auburn Cyclery. They say it's built like a watch.

"When I examined the numerous woman's wheels at the New York Cycle Show, I was convinced that there would be but little cause for complaint this year."

"They are applying electricity to wheels now." "The boys and girls will hail that." "Why so?" "So many sparks. you know."

"Well, I made a good deal of money last season." "How's that?" Why, in buggy hire. You see, I bought my girl a wheel. Saved $200."

We note the interest ladies are already showing in the elegant line of wheels at the Auburn Cyclery It is rumored that more of the fair sex will be seen on wheels during the coming season than ever before. American women in the West do not intend to be outdone by Eastern or European riders of this silent steed of steel.

Many of the Auburn boys will wear bicycle uniforms during the riding season. This will make wheeling more comfortable and be in keeping and good taste.

Our Art Portfolio.

We have a limited number of those lovely books, "Glimpses of the World's Fair." Each contains 180 fine photo pictures of that many views in the grounds, the buildings, the midway, etc., etc. Cut out and bring in two coupons, No. 1 and No 2, in the COURIER, with 25 cents, and get this book. The books cost us 25 cents besides express, and we let them go to COURIER readers for cost.

There is not a furniture establishment in the west that will furnish you the best made furniture at as low prices as the Foster Furniture Co., Ft. Wayne. There is talk between the small boys of Auburn of having a bicycle club of their own during the coming season. Good enough! but we should like to see the business men organize. Ft Wayne, Kendallville and Wanseon all have flourishing clubs, numbering from 40 to 100, and in each case these organizations are composed of the best citizens. Out of the two hundred or more wheels in our town, there could be a club formed and maintained that would make as good showing as any in the state.

The COURIER is always springing pleasant surprises on its readers or putting in something new and original. This week we show a copy of a report made by Gen. Robert E. He left in 1845 to go into the Mexican war, where he distinguished himself at Chapultepec and in other battles. His great mistake was in going over to the confederacy in '61. The Central Life Meeting.

As mentioned last week in these columns, the district meeting of the Central Life Insurance Company was held here on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of last week. The different local agents of the territory under the control of Dr. J. D. Baer of Detroit, meet somewhere in his territory each year. The meeting was in Auburn five years ago, and since then has been held in various other towns of Northern Indiana. The one last week was held at the Swineford House, and we believe every agent in the district was present. As usual, subjects of interest and value to them, were brought up and discussed, and where needed, there was full instruction given It was a valuable business lesson and greatly appreciated by the men who are engaged in this line of business. In the evening of Thursday there were present by invitation, besides the agents, Dr. J. B. Casebeer, who is the company's examining physician, and the editors of the Dispatch and COURIER. The earlier hours of the evening were spent in a social way, and were followed by an excellent supper, such a one as the Swineford is in the habit of spreading before its guests. There were four tables "even full," and after leaving the dining hall, they were called into "executive session" by Dr. Baer. Each agent as called on, made a brief speech and statement of the past year's work, together with the indications for business the coming year. Each was encouraged and cheered on by the Doctor who is always the moving spirit and inspiration of these meetings. He believes in life insurance as he does in his bible, and he makes each agent feel that not only is life insurance a business but it is a duty to be scrupulously done. And we would gather from the sentiments expressed by the members that they were imbued by the same feeling. Several allusions were made to the many death losses the company has made in this section, where it is needless to tell our people, all these losses have been promptly paid Dr Casebeer also made a very interesting speech in regard to the work in his line of duty. The two newspaper men were also called on and each made some remarks. Mr. Campbell's talk was particularly amusing, for he had been a life insurance agent a few hours himself. There was a short business session Friday forenoon, when the meeting adjourned.

Before adjourning, they passed the following

PROF. DOLBEAR says a powerful search light could project a beam to Mars in four minutes which could be seen and responded to if they have the apparatus that we have.

LOST children in Japan do not long remain astray. It is the custom for parents to label their children with their addresses, so that in case they wander any wayfarer may send them home.

A WRITER says that a man with a wife and two children cannot live decently in New York City for less than $5,000 a year. Nevertheless fully two-thirds of the New Yorkers do live on less, and the majority of them probably labor under the hallucination that they are living decently at that.

MUCH of the underrated danger endured by whalers is to be removed by the advent of a new sort of harpoon. When the weapon enters a whale it administers a dose of 720 electric shocks a minute, rendering the animal insensible, and an easy prey to its captors. This is a decided improvement on the other way of getting towed along half under the water at a rate of fifteen knots an hour with the prospect of colliding with an ice-floe, or being smashed to atoms by a whack from the monster's tail.

THE total wealth of this country in 1880 was $43,642,000,000; in 1893, $62,600,000,000; money in circulation in 1880, $973,382,228; in 1890, $1,429,251,270. Interest bearing debt in 1880, $1,723,993,100; in 1890 only $725,313,140; national bank capital in 1880, $463,000,000; in 1890, $667,250,000; savings bank deposits in 1880, $891,961,141; in 1890, $1,654,826,142; total value of manufactures in 1880, $2,711,579,999; in 1890, $4,860,285,837; total value farm products in 1880, $3,475,000,000; in 1890, $4,500,000,000; miles of railroad in 1880, 92,296; in 1890, 166,702 miles.

THE editor of an Exchange is a genius. He proclaims it in an editorial. "We have struck a new scheme," he says. "On the green shade we wear over our eyes when reading proofs or grinding out copy, we have printed: 'I am very busy.' When a man that we don't care to talk to comes in we stoop still lower over the desk, so that he can see it and take the hint; but when the other kind of a man, a good fellow, comes in, we push the shade up over our bald spot, where he can't read the legend, smile benignly at him, and open the conversation by asking him for a cigar."

THE Patent Office is a self-supporting institution. The fees demanded in advance for the examinations cover the entire expense of making investigations, while the final fees, which must be paid or the patent will not be issued, help out the cause to such an extent that the office makes about $100,000 a year over its expenses. The past fiscal year was not a good year, yet there were over 45,000 applications for patents, and over 25,000 were granted. Some idea of the inventiveness of Yankeedom may be gained from the fact that in fifty years nearly 900,000 patents have been applied for, and over 500,000 issued.

"IT is a curious paradox," says an exchange, "that the large-handed man loves small things, details, exquisitely finished objects, and is microscopic in his tendencies, while he whose hands are small delights in colossal things of every sort, loving ostentation and display, immense houses, majestic estates, and all else that is upon a great scale. His handwriting is large and perhaps full of flourishes, while that of the large-handed man is small and precise." This is true of so prominent an example as President Cleveland, who, a large man with large hands, writes with remarkable fineness, and a page of his script is destitute of unnecessary lines.

DURING the last six years no murderer has been hanged in Chicago, until Painter was hanged recently. In this time there have been committed at least 100 murders. Hangings have evidently been too few. We have a glorious country but Justice has a bandage over her eyes. Escape from the gallows is too frequent. Criminals are given too light sentence. If every devilish human being who plans the destruction of human life, knew that his life must be given for the life he took, there would not be so many murderous cranks seeking whom they can destroy. Not the severity of the punishment, but the certainty of it is what deters. Hang every murderer for the next five years and murder in the first degree would be a rare occurrence.

STEAL a chicken and you are a thief. Steal $1,000 from your employer and you are an embezzler. Steal $5,000 from the Government and you are a defaulterer. Rob your competitor on the stock exchange of $10,000 and you are a financier. Rob him of $100,000 to $500,000 and you are a wizard or a Napoleon of finance. Wreck a railroad and gather in the money and you are a "magnet." Wreck a great railroad system and you are a "railroad king." Conduct a negotiation by which a strong nation plunders a weak nation of thousands upon thousands of square miles of territory and makes the weak nation pay millions of money indemnity for the wrong it has suffered, and you are a diplomate. Truly says the Religious Herald, "the times are out of joint."

WHILE the prevailing hard times have had their bitter results for a great many, they will serve, in the opinion of our leading financeers, says an Exchange, to impress upon the American people the lack of one characteristic they sadly need, and that is thrift. The world has never seen a nation so reckless of ordinary economy as our people. The amount we have wasted collectively in one century of growth would have endowed a country nearly as rich as we are to-day. Our people have always manifested the same free and easy disposition in the matter of expenditure, the same unwillingness to deny themselves immediate satisfaction for the sake of greater benefits later, and there are not a few of the unemployed to-day who could easily have saved enough to tide over the present period of suffering with but little real self-denial and an ordinary amount of prudence. If the prevailing distress in so many quarters teaches the much-needed lesson of reasonable economy the country will gain more than it has lost from the disciplining it has received. But, like the boy who was chastised as a reformatory measure, we fail to appreciate the lesson while we are struggling with the infliction which may result in our future good.

AFTER many experiments with those considered most successful, and a study of the subject in the light of anatomy, physiology, and natural coincidences, I regard palmistry as without basis in science or sense, so writes Rev. J. M. Buckley, D. D., in the Century. That no two hands have ever been absolutely similar is indisputable. When critically examined, no to leaves or flowers, though of the same species, appear exactly alike; much less would such complex organizations as human hands be found without difference. General conclusions can therefore be drawn from the shape and size of the hands as to strength, suppleness, circulation of blood, temperament, and the size of the form to which they belong. But even here a large margin must be allowed for departures from general rules. Huge hands are sometimes the mortification of small and otherwise beautiful women, while giants are found with small feet and hands. Sometimes large feet and diminutive hands are possessed by the same persons. Walker and Darwin observed that the hands of the children of laboring men are larger from birth than those of persons whose ancestors have lived idle lives, or have been engaged in vocations not requiring the use of the hands. Though such children might become renowned for idtellectuality or proficiency in art, the large hand might be transmitted to several generations. What is justly allowed to chirognomy is true of every other part of the body, in its proportionate relation to the sum of human activity. With these rational conclusions the votary of palmistry will not be content. It is mystery he seeks, and a power to read the past, present, and future, which nature has denied to man. The sole and sufficient cause of different lines in different persons is the difference in the shape and size of the hands, elasticity of skin, strength and use of the muscles, and external pressure. Therefore hands of different persons aae not alike, nor both hands of the same person. For lines to be an indication of anything mental, moral, or emotional, it would be necessary for them to be evolved under the influence of nerves connected with the brain centers, in which the said intellectual and moral qualities inhere; but superinduced from the periphery, they can mean nothing except more or less of different motions and use.

One Thing Machinery Can't Do.

Many attempts have been made to supplant the glass blower by machinery, says a trade journal, but up to this time none have attained commercial importance. Either the cost of production has been found to be higher than by the time-honored method or the ware produced was not of a quality up to the demands of the market. This is more especially the case in the kinds of bottles used to contain effervescent drinks, which must be capable of withstanding a pressure of several atmospheres without failure. This, in fact, is the critical point in the automatic manufacture of bottles, since the difficulty has always been to obtain a distribution of the glass forming the walls of the bottle as uniform as in the hand work. The attempt has been made to press the body and bottom separately, and to unite the two by fusing them together, but the bottles made in this manner were very heavy and of a poor appearance. The bottle machine invented by Ashby, England, aroused much interest and was much talked of, several companies being formed to engage in bottle manufacture by this method, but none, if they still survive, have successive, in putting any great amount of ware on the market of the world.

Saloons as Castles.

Judge Guttman of Albany, N. Y., in a recent decision said that a man's saloon is his castle, and while he must not sell liquor on Sunday there is no law forbidding him from keeping his saloon open that day.

CHRONICLE OF A YEAR

EDITOR FENNO TELLS THE STORY OF 1789.

Washington's Progress from Virginia to New York and What Happened During the Journey—First American Congress Meeting—Day of National Espousals.

From an Old Newspaper.

On Wednesday, April 15, 1789, appeared the first number of the "United States Gazette, a national paper to be printed at the seat of the Federal government and to comprise as fully as possible early and authentic accounts of the proceedings of Congress—its laws, acts, and resolutions communicated so as to form a history of the transactions of the Federal Legislature under the new constitution."

A file of the Gazette for the year 1789 constitutes a veritable antique in the way of American journals. The pages are stained and faded, their color is that of an antique proper, but the matter is invaluable. If all other literature of the period were to be destroyed the entire political and social fabric of the time might be reconstructed from this fragment. Properly approached it becomes an adequate revelation of the post-revolutionary spirit. The political atmosphere in which it is involved is refreshing, invigorating, and delightful. It is, in fact, a poem, a political poem—or, better still, a political pastoral, for it is the pastoral period of our political history that it reflects. Booms, barrels, bosses, machines, and all the other refinements incident to a highly developed political system were at that time unheard of. A beautiful simplicity characterized all political life and activity. The more one reads the Gazette the stronger becomes the conviction that the politics of the time was essentially bucolic and idyllic. One notes a certain joyous, breezy, outdoor sunlight quality about it. There was the shepherd, Washington; his flock, the people; the shepherdess, the new constitution.

It was a desire to describe the charms of the new constitution that afforded Mr. John Fenno, editor of the Gazette, an excuse for starting his paper. Editor Fenno believed that the new constitution would, as Carlyle says, "march." Washington had made the Declaration of Independence "march." Why should he not make the new constitution "march?" It will be remembered that things were "marching" very badly over in France about this time.

The Day of National Espousals.

On the eve of the inauguration of Washington Editor Fenno prints the following double-leaded editorial in his paper:

"We have heard much of the birthday of our Columbia. Her natal hour is dated on the 19th of April, 1775.

"To-morrow is the day of her espousals—when, in the presence of the King of kings, the solemn compact will be ratified between her and the darling object of her choice.

"May she date from that moment the brightest scenes of freedom and happiness, under the auspices of the wise and glorious administration of the President of her affections."

One remarks some differences between this and the modern election editorial. Editor Fenno does not speculate as to whose head will fall into the basket first; he says nothing about appointments; he does not present this man's "claims" on a certain position, nor does he urge the "peculiar fitness" of Mr. Blank for a particular office.

Nothing could be more unique, more charmingly ingenuous, than this idea of the marriage of Washington to the new constitution. Let us expand it. Washington, the hero, after having proved himself worthy by many victories on land and sea, is chosen by Columbia as her bridegroom. Columbia wears a diadem of thirteen stars. The hero comes to her and, amid manifestations of the greatest joy on the part of the people, she marries the "darling object of her choice." There is matter in it for an epic; but the age of epics—alas!

There is one more paragraph to the editorial. In it Editor Fenno describes the spectacular effects which have been prepared for the celebration of the espousals:

"In the evening fireworks, prepared under the direction of the ingenious Col. Bauman, will irradiate the hemisphere, which, in conjunction with well-fancied illuminations in various parts of the city, will conclude the scene with a splendid exhibition."

Headquarters at Newburg.

One of the historical places in the city of Newburg, says Harper's Young People, is Washington's headquarters. It is a very pretty little building, overlooking the Hudson River. On the west side is a low porch, which is the entrance to the historical room, having seven doors and one window. It originally was the dining-room. It contains one of the high old-fashioned fire-places. Hanging to its black sides are a kettle once used by Lafayette and a few cannon balls. Near by is an almost life-size portrait of Gen. Washington, embroidered in silk. To the right is Washington's bed-room. In this room are some chairs and a table brought from Holland in the year 1682, also portraits of Gen. and Mrs. Washington, and two very much worn flags. In the next room are Mrs. Washington's spinet and Washington's chair. The housekeeper's room is where the old ammunition and guns are kept. The walls are literally covered with guns and muskets. In here are several links of the chain which was placed across the Hudson to prevent the passage of British ships during the war. Several other rooms are filled with minor curiosities.

The next floor can hardly be called a story, for it is only a small attic. Here repose ancient spinning wheels and knapsacks. Amidst the dust of ages on the floor lie several pairs of slippers. The stairway and hall are decorated with old oil portraits. The grounds around the building are laid out as a park. Cannons and balls are arranged around. Near by is a monument of Washington. From here there is a splendid view of the river and Storm King, and all the mountains stand forth in their glory. Altogether this is a very pretty, pleasant and interesting place to visit.

NEW WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

A Magnificent Work of Art for the City of Philadelphia.

Philadelphia will soon have the finest monument in America. It is now twelve years since Prof. Rudolph Siemering, one of the most famous German sculptors, began work on a monument to Washington for the "city of brotherly love," and the work is now complete in Berlin. The base of the monument is octagonal and about thirty feet in diameter. The whole structure, including the equestrian figure on the pedestal, is fifty feet high. The statue represents Washington in his Continental uniform as he marched at the head of his troops. The cloak is thrown back from his body, as though blown back by the wind, and the whole statue is full of action. The figures about the pedestal and the base of the monument are even more artistic than the monument itself. Ascending the first steps, you reach a second platform, around which lie great figures emblematic of American life and America. There are two of these figures at each corner of the monument. Ascending one flight of steps, you pass between reclining statues of an Indian hunter and an Indian fisher-girl mending her nets. Below them are magnificent bronze statues of buffalo and deer, and on other parts of the base are other animals emblematic of America. At another corner Columbia, in the shape of a beautiful woman, with a horn of plenty in her hand, reclines on the pedestal of the monument, and there is a magnificent statue of America, with the famous officers of the Revolution offering her the laurels of their victories. The statue is the largest one of Washington in existence, and the monument, when set up, will be the finest in America.

Festival of the States.

Notwithstanding all the attention paid the 22d of February, it is not the holiday of the nation, but the festival of the States. In 1845, urged on by Mrs. Harrison Gray Otis, Massachusetts led the way in making it a legal holiday throughout her borders by legislative enactment, and since that time all the States of the Union except six have followed this example, the District of Columbia being included by Congress as late as 1880. With an obvious propriety this day is marked all over the world by our legations and often by foreign governments. Thus in 1882 the United States of Colombia took notice of the 150th anniversary of Washington's birth in words which may fitly close this account of the spontaneous honors paid our great hero. After testifying to its "reverent respect and profound admiration," the resolution "recommends to Colombians the singular example of eminent virtues which characterizes in history the prominent figure of the founder of the first of the republics of the new continent."

At the End of a Century.

On the centenary of Washington's birth in 1832, Congress proposed to remove his body to the crypt prepared for it under the dome of the Capitol, but John A. Washington, then the owner of Mount Vernon, refused to allow it to be done, and the government was obliged to content itself with the purchase of the portraits by Peale and Vanderlyn and the commission for the well-known statue of Greenough, intended for the rotunda. This was also the occasion for the fortunate selection of the design for the Washington monument. Divine service was held in the Capitol, there was a dinner at the famous Brown's Hotel, where Daniel Webster spoke for an hour, a ball "for the gentry" at Carusi's saloon and "another for mechanics and tradesmen" at the Masonic Temple

WASHINGTON'S APPEARANCE.

Dr. James Thatcher Gives His Impressions of the Commander-in-chief.

Dr. James Thatcher, who met Washington at West Point in 1778, wrote: "The personal appearance of our Commander-in-chief is that of the perfect gentleman and accomplished warrior. He is remarkably tall, full six feet, erect and well proportioned. The strength and proportion of his joints and muscles appear to be commensurate with the pre-eminent powers of his mind. The serenity of his countenance and majestic gracefulness of his deportment impart a strong impression of that dignity and grandeur which arch is peculiar characteristics, and any one can observe in his countenance the idea of wisdom, philanthropy, magnanimity and patriotism There is a fine symmetry in the features of his face, indicative of a benign and dignified spirit. His nose is straight, and his eyes incline to blue. He wears his hair in a becoming cue, and from his forehead it is turned back and powdered in a manner which adds to the military air of his appearance. He displays a native gravity, but devoid of all appearance of ostentation. His uniform dress is a blue coat, with two brilliant epaulettes, buff-colored under clothes, and a three-cornered hat, with a black cockade."

Unable to Identify.

Papa: And then George Washington said to his father, "Father, I cannot tell a lie."

Bobby: So his father wouldn't tell a lie either?

Papa: Oh, I don't know about that. Why?

Bobby: Else he'd have spotted George's.—Life.

A Cook's Last Wish.

A Paris restaurant-keeper, recently deceased, left 250,000 francs to two nephews on condition that, instead of melancholy memories that no one would believe, they should for one year each day affix a copy of one of his culinary receipes to his gravestone, so that even after his death he might benefit his fellow men. No less than 365 prescriptions were found among his papers. Unfortunely, the Paris Tombstone Commission, which examines and decides upon the inscriptions to be placed upon cemeterial monuments, refused to admit the fulfilment of the culinary philanthropist's last wishes. What aggravates the nephews' grief is the unpleasant fact that the court has now decided that they cannot get those 250,000 francs their uncle left them under certain conditions.

Wealth of the Whole World.

In 1885 Professor Adolph Soetbeer, of Gottingen, Germany, published an essay on the production of the precious metals, since become a famous reference book. He gives a table of the estimated "total monetary supply of the precious metals," at the close of 1885, in which he places the supply of gold at 13,364,000,000 marks, and that of silver at 7,843,000,000 marks, a total of 21,207,000,000 marks, equal to about $5,300,000,000. Since then the coinage has gone on merrily, so that now perhaps there are $6,000,000,000 of gold and silver coin. That would give about $6 to each man, woman and child on the earth, accepting the usual estimate that the population of the world is, in round numbers, 1,000,000,000.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

THE REPUBLICAN PANACEA.

A Medicine that Stimulates the Patient, Yet Reduces His Fever.

The protectionist says to the manufacturer, "We give you a protective tariff that you may get higher prices for your goods." That is the object of a protective tariff, or the manufacturers would not clamor so much for it. To the consumers of these same goods—the farmer, the lawyer, the mechanic, the doctor—he says, "We will give you a protective tariff that you may get goods you buy of the manufacturer cheaper." And to the laborer he says, "We give you a protective tariff that you may get higher wages from the manufacturer." And the people are asked to believe him in each case.

Let us suppose the object of the protective tariff was to enable lawyers to charge larger fees for their legal services, and as a lawyer I was to say to my clients: "You ought to favor this law, for while it enables me to charge you larger fees, it also enables you to get my services more cheaply." Let the miller say to his customers: "You should favor this law because it enables me to take more toll from you, and at the same time give you more meal." So with the physician. So with the mechanic who builds your house. This argument would not work at all in any of these cases, but just apply it to the manufacturer and it acts like a charm. It is a wonderful antidote.

It seems to be a kind of medicine which stimulates the patient, yet reduces his fever, acts as a powerful laxative, yet produces constipation; feeds the system, yet depletes the patient; a fat, and yet an anti-fat; a wine that may be taken for the stomach's sake when it is sick, yet a powerful emetic; it is a narcotic, and yet an atropine; it brings smiling happiness and solid comfort to those who toil in the workshops, and yet it is prolific of strikes and lockouts; it richly rewards labor, yet fills the land with paupers and tramps. There is nothing in all nature like it. It is centripetal, yet a centrifugal force. It contracts and expands under the same influence and condition. Administered to a Democrat in perfect health, in full doses, he begins forthwith to preach the gospel of Republicanism.

It does these things, and is all this and more; it gives the men who make the goods higher prices, and the men who buy them cheaper goods. Surely there is nothing else like it on earth, or in the waters under the earth. Heaven alone, and I speak it not sacrilegiously, can produce such another panacea, a compound which will produce exactly the opposite effect upon similar subjects under like conditions. This theory of raising the price of goods for the men who sell, and lowering them for the men who buy, reverses every rule given us in nature by nature's God.

With His rule in nature, we know how to apply remedies; the doctor can write his prescriptions; the farmer sow his grain, and expect like to produce like; he can propagate his stock with intelligence; the mariner can guide his vessel; the astronomer can calculate the coming eclipse, and Old Probabilities can himself guess at the weather; it may be sometimes the guess is wide of the mark, but this new gospel of protection reverses all laws, and bids farewell to all the rules where the principle is engrafted. Better stick to nature and to nature's law. Say, if you wish, protection benefits the manufacturer for the time being—that is, it temporarily benefits him—and none will controvert it, and the contention ends. The logic, so called of the protectionist is thus reduced to absurdity.—Hon. James D. Richardson, of Tennessee.

Senate May Be Mended.

The Representatives of the people have just passed, after months of preparation, full hearings and thorough debate, a measure of tax reduction and tariff reform. It received the largest majority given to any tariff bill in the House since the close of the war. It executes the mandate of the people. It redeems the pledge of the Democratic party. And yet there are Senators, says the New York World, who claim and are apparently to be granted the privilege of amending the bill so as to restore taxes on iron, coal, sugar and perhaps other articles. They do this not upon any pretense that it will benefit the whole people to tax these articles; they do it because they are interested personally, in their pockets, in coal or iron mines, in freighting or manufacturing corporations, or in sugar stock, or because their friends or their immediate localities are thus interested

The claim thus put forth upon the ground of "Senatorial courtesy" involves the highest exercise of governmental power—the power of taxation. If the Senators from Maryland and West Virginia can impose a tax on coal; if the Senators from Alabama can put a tax on iron ore; if the Senators from Louisiana can restore the tax on sugar; if—to reach the ridiculous in climax—the junior Senator from New York can increase the tax on collars and cuffs, they have a power which is not exercised by any sovereign in Europe.

The British House of Lords is approaching the inevitable "mended or ended," under a much less obnoxious exercise of its power to revise or reject legislation favored by the people and proposed by the Commons. The upper house of Congress should remember that this is a government by the people, not a government by States; that it is a government by the right of majorities, not a government by the courtesy of individuals; and that it is a government for the people and not for monopolies. Our Senate cannot be ended. It can be, as it has been, mended. It will be mended if it seeks now to thwart the will of the people.

A Vain Hope.

The decision of the Senate Finance Committee not to grant hearings on the tariff bill means that no dilatory tactics will be tolerated, and that action upon the measure will be reached as soon as the rules of the Senate will permit. It is likely that within a month votes will be taken that will test the relative strength of the friends and enemies of the bill. Already it is evident that these votes will be a disappointment to those who have been cherishing the hope that the verdict of the House would be reversed by the Senate—that, if not defeated, the bill would be rendered innocuous through amendments that would essentially change its character. The indications now are that the bill will neither be defeated nor mutilated, but will pass the Senate substantially as it came from the House.

As the Democrats have a majority in the Senate the bill cannot be changed except by Democratic votes, and Democratic Senators are no more likely than Democratic Representatives to be stampeded by the cry that "the country is being plunged into free trade." They know that the Wilson bill is really a highly protective measure. They know that the tax it levies averages five per cent. higher than was recommended by the Republican Tariff Commission of 1883. And they know that the agitation against it is simply the last desperate effort of the trusts and pampered industries to preserve their privileges.

Until the votes were actually taken in the House the vain hope was indulged that the vital features of the bill would be stricken out. When the roll-calls brought disappointment, it was confidently expected that when the bill was put upon its passage the majority for it would be so small that it would go to the Senate with a practical handicap upon it. But the Democrats of the House stood the test nobly, and the majority exceeded the most sanguine estimates of its friends.

It will be so in the Senate. Strong efforts will no doubt be made to amend the bill in many particulars. There is little likelihood, however, that it will be radically changed. No Democratic Senator will lend himself to the defeat or emasculation of a measure which the country recognizes as carrying out with moderation and conservatism the reform to which his party is pledged.—New York World.

Overdoing the Calamity Howl.

Last summer there was an unmistakable panic. At that time most of the McKinley organs and most of the McKinley party in Congress admitted that the panic was due to the silver purchase legislation, and not at all to any fear of tariff changes. They joined the party supporters of the administration in both houses in putting a stop to the silver purchases. They joined Manufacturer Dolan in showing that a panic which occurred four months after the incoming of the new administration and eight months after the triumph of the Democratic party on a platform demanding a radical reduction of the tariff could not have been caused by fear of that reduction.

But now that the panic has ceased it suits the purpose of the McKinley partisans to attribute all the after effects—all the depression in industry and trade, all suspension of work, all reductions of wages—to a mortal fear of the Wilson bill, which does not go half so far as the platform demanded. And not only so, but for two months or more they have been howling calamity at the top of their voices and doing everything in their power to create another panic. Their organs have encouraged protected manufacturers and mine owners to suspend work, or cut down or threaten to cut down wages.

To a certain extent they have succeeded in their malign efforts to create panic and do all the mischief possible. But they are more than likely to discover very soon that they have overdone the business. For weeks past there has been industrial improvement, and for last week Bradstreet's recorded no less than forty resumptions by industrial establishments against only six suspensions.

If the Democrats are reasonably expeditious about passing the Wilson bill substantially as it passed the House even the dullest will see in less than three months from now that the croakers and prophets of evil are false prophets. They will see that there is no harm but much good in a reduction of the burdens of the people. They will see that this "protection" which they have regarded with superstitious reverence is a cheat and a fraud, doing harm always and good never.

Then the calamity army will suffer from the recoil of their overloaded guns. They will find when it comes to the Congressional elections next November that the stampede they are trying to create will be from their own camp. Just a few months of actual experience under the Wilson bill will satisfy the people that it is worth a much longer trial, and the longer trial will satisfy them that they have nothing to lose, but very much to gain, by a still larger installment of commercial and industrial liberty. But the Senate is reminded that to this end what is now needed is "action; action."—Chicago Herald.

Protection Bluff.

The Kansas City Times (Dem.) thinks it is high time for the Republican politicians and newspapers to show a little honesty on the tariff issue. "These partisan advocates," it says, "are now attempting by false pretences, by advising sham lockouts and unnecessary reductions in the wages of workingmen, by bluffing and bulldozing, by obtaining petitions from the dependent employes of tariff barons, signed under duress to make a manufactured show of public sentiment against a reduction in taxation! against relief from crushing burdens! against relief from exactions and robberies of trusts and monopolies! It is altogether the most extraordinary exhibition of impudence and insincerity ever displayed in the direction of criticism of public affairs in the history of this country."

Croker and the Income Tax.

Tammany, which is in politics for revenue only, is hand and glove with the great corporations and capitalists of New York. They serve it and it serves them. Through this offensive and defensive alliance Richard Croker has risen in a few years from a state of destitution to the possession of an income which would have to bear a considerable tax under the new revenue law. It would not be particularly pleasant to him to pay this tax, and doubtless it would be still less pleasant to have to specify the amount and the sources of his income.—San Francisco Examiner.

General Disaster Unaccounted For.

From England, France, Germany, Spain, Italy, Greece—in short, from the chief manufacturing and commercial nations all over the globe, come reports of business depression and of suffering and distress among the people. Will our protectionist friends who so glibly ascribe every ill that has befallen us to the fear of the Wilson bill tell us the cause of the suffering abroad? We have been told by them that the Wilson bill was to benefit foreigners at the expense of our own people. Then the result abroad ought to be an unprecedented boom. Please explain.—Oakland County Post.

The South Not to Be Fooled.

Governor McKinley's remark that the New South stands in particular need of protection at this time in order to develop its infant industries would be more persuasive were it not for the fact that the same plea is made in behalf of the infant industries of New England, which are considerably older than Governor McKinley and are yet unable to stand alone according to the protectionists' idea. With such impressive lessons before them the Southerners will probably prefer a different brand of pap.—Boston Herald.

The Tariff in the Senate.

BUSINESS cannot afford to wait while old, old arguments are rehearsed anew. Do something.—Boston Globe.

LET the battle for tariff reform be short, sharp and decisive in the Senate and the Democracy may thus rescue itself from the popular disapprobation it has so wantonly provoked.—Philadelphia Times.

"THE Democrats of the Senate have it in their power to make the Wilson bill a law before the Democratic year is out, and they should move energetically to secure that result," says the Atlanta Constitution (Dem.).

IT is a melancholy but entirely rational reflection that professional pride will hardly allow the Senate to permit itself to be outdone by the House in the matter of voluminous oratory on the Wilson bill.—Washington Star.

An Oversight.

There was one oversight at the Great Exposition at Chicago in not having in full view, by easy arrangement, some comparative vital statistics of our own general health as compared with other nations, and of our scientific facilities for the relief of human suffering. Then it would have appeared how much we are misrepresented and how, even in all those minor ills which beset mankind, we are masters of cure and alleviation. In the line of general ailments which all nations have in common, such as rheumatic or neuralgic afflictions, there is no prompt and permanent cure in the world the equal of what we could have shown. St. Jacobs Oil, for instance, for this purpose, would have taken any premium that might have been offered. It has done so at many of the great fairs of the world. As for the ordinary casualties of every-day, busy life, such as sprains, bruises, burns, wounds, or cuts, of course it is well known as the superior remedy of the age. Perhaps doctors disagree, but the people are never mistaken in knowing what is best.

The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

JAMES CHANDLER, an old veteran living near Petersburg, has become insane because his application for an increase of pension was rejected.

GEORGE WENTWORTH, a Columbus fireman, has sued the city for $5,000. He was thrown from a hose cart and severely injured during a run to a fire.

SEVERAL days ago Mrs. Aseneth Cox was found dead with her neck broken at the home of a relative in Monrovia, supposed to have been caused from a fall.

CHARLES CRAWFORD, one of the best known and wealthy farmers near Peru, in a fit of despondency, caused by ill health, committed suicide by hanging himself in his barn.

WHILE four men were engaged in raising a barn near Huntingburg, several rafters fell on them. Ben Niehaus was struck on the head and was probably fatally injured.

A PLYMOUTH man has proposed to one girl twelve times. He has now come to the conclusion not to try it again, as thirteen is an unlucky number, and she might accept.

J. W. EWARD of Converse, has had in his possession for thirty years a Mexican bond for $50. He has received a letter from Minister Isaac P. Gray that the bond, with the interest, is now worth $116.50.

THE workmen who dug the grave for Walter Wiggins, at Hagerstown, made a ghastly discovery. After having dug down about four feet they found a barrel which contained the bones, hair, and portions of the dress of some woman, which had evidently been buried a number of years. Whose they were and how they came the re is shrouded in mystery.

THERE appeared in a Cincinnati paper last week an advertisement for male correspondents wanted by Mabel Whitemore of Brazil. There are over 200 letters in the Postoffice at that place addressed to her and the Postmaster is afraid he will have to move into more commodious quarters if she doesn't get her mail or land a husband soon.

JAMES CRAWFORD, the 3-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Crawford, living neav Cope, was left alone for a few minutes. He obtained some matches from a shelf and began to light paper and throw it in the stove. His clothing caught fire and he ran from the house into the yard and rolled over and over in the snow, extinguishing the flames. His screams attracted his mother, and she came from the barn and carried him into the house. He was terribly burned, and suffered until he died.

THE annual election of the directors of the Commercial Club at Indianapolis developed the most spirited controversy in its history. A total of 480 votes was cast, the greatest number ever polled. Proxies were barred. The regular ticket, headed by Eli Lilly, was elected by totals ranging from 317 to 358. A. P. Hendrickson led the independent ticket, receiving 205, while the votes for his associates ranged from 142 to 179. The result means the retention of Col. Lilly as President and the indorsement of the President's action in the disposition of the surplus of the funds raised for the entertainment of the National G. A. R.

THE Modes Glass Company, recently located at Cicero, has started ten pots in its factory, giving employment to 150 hands. The factory, when completed, will contain two ten-pot furnaces and two 160-ton continuous tanks, and employ over 500 people in the manufacture of green flint and amber ware. The location of this industry has brought many new people to the town. Every building which can be used at all is occupied, and private residences are converted into temporary boarding houses for those who are unable to secure dwellings. Cicero to-day controls the largest territory in the gas belt not traversed by field destroying pipe-lines, and bids fair to have rapid growth.

GEORGE AND JORDAN BRITTON, two desperate characters, went into a saloon at Knightsville and provoked Thomas Gulliver into a fight. They assaulted him, knocking him senseless with a bar of iron. Friends came to his relief and a general fight ensued, in which many were more or less injured. A man named Evans was almost scalped by a kick from a hobnail boot. Deputy Marshal Barney Martin attempted to arrest the Brittons when they assaulted him, beating him into insensibility. Martin is seriously wounded and will not recover. The Brittons escaped.

PHILIP STEVENS, south of Kokomo, is distracted over a fatal error. His baby was suffering with a cold and he got up to give it some squills. By mistake he got hold of the wrong bottle and gave it creosote. The baby died two hours later.

GUSTAV GONIAN, an eccentric Frenchman and hat cleaner, commited suicide in a cheap hotel at Terre Haute. He had placed a rope around his neck and tied the ends into a loop. By inserting a clothes brush between the rope and his neck he had managed to twist the rope until strangulation began. All indications point to a slow and horrible death. He formerly lived in Indianapolis.

AN INDIANA MIRACLE.

A CASE THAT HAS ATTRACTED MUCH ATTENTION.

A Well-known Citizen Whose Life Was Despaired Of Is Again Enjoying Health and Strength—The Particulars of His Remarkable Cure as Related to a Reporter of the Crawfordsville Journal.

[Crawfordsville, Ind., Journal.]

There is probably no man better known in this city than G. M. Johnson, or "Mit," as he is familiarly called by everybody. Six months ago it was the common remark that "poor Mit had but a few more days of his life," his physical condition being such that not one of his hundreds of friends had the slightest hope of his surviving the summer. He had about abandoned all hope himself, evidently, and was confined to his room and bed, unable to walk or to attend to any business whatever. A representative of this paper, who has enjoyed an intimate acquaintance with Mr. Johnson for a long number of years, met him walking briskly up street to-day, and in astonishment inquired of him what had brought so wonderful a change in his appearance and condition.

"Well," said Mr. Johnson, "for a number of years I have had a complication of troubles, the most serious being spinal and nervous trouble, which as you know brought me pretty near death's gate. My friends despaired of my recovery, and I had but little hope myself of ever being about actively again. My health kept going from bad to worse until I became perfectly helpless. I was unable to walk a step; could not sleep, had no appetite, I just lived and suffered and could not die to get relief. Physicians did me no good; neither did all the other remedies I tried, and I believe I have taken enough medicine in the last few years to stock a drug store. I was in this miserable, hopeless and helpless condition when a friend called my attention to a remarkable cure through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and urged me to try them. I felt that perhaps it was a last chance, and procured a supply of Pink Pills from Messrs. Nye & Booe, the well-known druggists. That was about six months ago, and you see what they have done for me. I am a new man now. I had not been taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills long when I began to find an improvement. I saw that I had at last hit upon a remedy that had virtue in it; hope returned, and I continued to use the pills and continued to improve in health and strength, and while I am not the stoutest man in the city I am a new man altogether. I feel well, eat heartily, sleep soundly, the dizzy, nervous trouble has entirely left. I can walk briskly, and am enjoying life as of yore. I consider this Pink Pill remedy a wonderful one, and have recommended it to a number of my friends who have been similarly afflicted. Why, I cannot recommend the remedy too highly. Just think, for nearly a year I could not stand up to take a drink of water without getting blind from dizziness, and the most excruciating pains would seize me, and during these paroxysms I suffered untold agony. I am now entirely free from these pains.

"Just say to any one who may want information that I will freely give them any information they may desire on the subject, and will only be too glad to see some of my friends benefited in the same way. I know some who are in need of something right now, and will urge them to try the four p's. There is nothing in my opinion to equal them, and as I said in the start, I have tried all the remedies advertised."

Our reporter then called upon Messrs. Nye & Booe, the well-known druggists, who said there were many in Crawfordsville besides Mr. Johnson who had reason to be grateful to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for restored health and strength. Indeed, every one who uses Pink Pills speaks of them in the highest terms.

An analysis of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills shows that they contain in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female, and all diseases resulting from vitiated humors in the blood. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price, (50 cents a box, or 6 boxes for $2.50)—by addressing Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y., or Brockville, Ont.

The Dinner-Hour.

In the fourteenth century the King of France dined at 8 a. m., and retired to rest at 8 p. m. In the time of Philip the Good an old verse said, "Rise at five, dine at nine, sup at five, go to bed at nine, and thou shalt live to be ninety-and-nine." In the reigns of Henry IV. and Louis XIV., the dinner-hour was 11 a. m. Louis XV. changed the dinner-hour to 2 o'clock. Two o'clock remained the usual dinner-hour in France up to the time of the revolution, after which 6 o'clock became the fashionable time. In England the upper class breakfasted at 7 in the reign of Henry VIII., and dined at 10 a. m. In Elizabeth's reign the dinner-hour was 11 a. m., and supper was served about 5 o'clock. In Germany the fashionable hour for dinner up to the time of the French revolution was 12 o'clock; afterwards it was fixed at 1 o'clock.

An Old Compliment.

One of the neatest and most adroit compliments ever turned out was probably that of Cræsus to Cambyses. That hare-brained monarch once, when the Persians and Cræsus were sitting with him, asked what sort of a man they thought him compared with his father, Cyrus. The Persians, of course, like good courtiers, replied that he was better than his father, for he had all Cyrus' possessions and Egypt and the sea as well. Thus spoke the Egyptians. Cræsus, however, not being pleased with their opinion, spoke as follows: "Now, to me, O son of Cyrus, you do not seem equal to your father, for you have not such a son as he left behind him in you."—The Westminster Review.

Boat Life in Siam.

The boat-life of Siam includes almost all life. Business and pleasure, health and happiness, all center in the river or its branches. A boat and a paddle are almost as natural and indispensable possessions to a Siamese as his arms or legs. He has no notion of traveling any distance except by boat, and the idea of living in a place inaccessible by water generally strikes him as absurd. Three weeks to come down stream with a full cargo, a week to dispose of it and indulge in the gaities of the capital, four or five months to get back with the emptied boat, and the rest of the year for farm-work at home—such is the program of many a Siamese family.

Dutch Smoker.

The Hollanders are perhaps of all the Northern peoples those who smoke the most, writes the author of "Holland and Its People." The humidity of their climate makes it almost a necessity, and the very moderate cost of tobacco renders it accessible to all. To show how deeply rooted is the habit, it is enough to say that the boatmen of the trekschuit, the aquatic diligence of Holland, measure distances by smoke. From here they say, to such-and-such a place it is not so many miles, but so many pipes. When you enter a house, after the first salutations, your host offers you a cigar; when you take leave, he hands you another.

Brace the Nerves.

Sedatives and opiates won't do it. These nervines do not make the nerves strong, and failing to do this fall short of producing the essential of their quietude—vigor. And while in extreme cases—and these only—of nervous irritation such drugs may be advisable, their frequent use is highly prejudicial to the delicate organism upon which they act, and in order to renew their quieting effect increased and dangerous doses eventually become necessary. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is an efficient substitute for such pernicious drugs. It quiets the nerves by bracing, toning, strengthening them. The connection between weakness of the nervous system and that of the organs of digestion is a strong and sympathetic link. The Bitters, by imparting a healthful impulse to the digestive and assimilating functions, promotes throughout the whole system a vigor in which the nerves come in for a large share. Use the Bitters in malaria, constipation, bilious and kidney trouble.

Powerful Magnets.

A magnet which the great Sir Isaac Newton wore as a set in his finger ring is said to have been capable of raising 746 grains, or about 250 times its own weight of three grains, and to have been much admired in consequence of its phenomenal power. One which formerly belonged to Sir John Leslie, and which is now in the Royal Society's collection at Edinburgh, has still greater powers. It weighs but little more than Newton's curiosity—even three and one-half grains—yet it is capable of supporting 1,560 grains, and is, therefore, the strongest magnet of its size in the world.—Chicago Tribune.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury.

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co.

Sold by Druggists, price 75c per bottle.

WHAT a devil of a time there would be should truth and gossip get married.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints, Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

"It was too bad about young Chuckster and Miss Plimmer."

"Why, I thought they were married Christmas Day."

"They were to have been, but Chuckster was taken sick with the measles and the wedding had to be postponed two weeks."

"Well, they were married at the end of the two weeks, weren't they?"

"No, there came a smallpox scare, you remember, and Miss Plimmer was vaccinated. It took with so much enthusiasm that when he got well she was still sick, and they had to put off the wedding another two weeks."

"At the end of that time they were married, I suppose?"

"No, the preacher that's to marry them is down with the grip."

Wigs for Married Women.

Wig-making is a trade that occupies many persons in the down-town Hebrew quarter of New York, because thousands of Central European Hebrews in that region require their women upon marrying to hide their natural hair beneath wigs. Their wigs are usually dark reddish brown in color, and they form a most unattractive style of headdress. The only wig-makers in town whose handiwork is always beautiful are those that make dolls' wigs. These are almost invariably flowing blonde curls, because the taste for brunette dolls seems to be as yet undeveloped.

Italian Physicians in a Tight Place.

An Italian physician has just been tried for refusing to visit patients ill with the cholera and sentenced to twenty days' imprisonment, to pay a fine, and is enjoined from practicing his profession in any way for three months. During the previous epidemic of cholera the peasants were accustomed to shoot and stone physicians who attempted sanitary improvements or to give medical aid. Between the law, which says must, and the people, who say shall not, physicians have a hard time in Italy during cholera epidemics—Boston Medical Journal.

Fire Alarm.

A novel system of fire alarm signals by rocket bombs has been established in the suburban districts of San Francisco to enable the remote engine houses to quickly summon assistance from the city forces in case of great emergency. A bomb, something like a rocket, is thrown 300 feet straight upward from a mortar, where it bursts, making a brilliant white light and a very loud explosion. At the trials of the system a short time ago, all San Francisco was excited and alarmed, fearing dynamiters were at work.

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is no exception. "I had been troubled with heart disease 2 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost putrific. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation six others started taking this valuable remedy."—Mrs. Morgan, 569 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, a discovery of an eminent specialist, in heart disease, is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. ABSOLUTELY PURE

A RELIC.

When a man has become famous, any matters pertaining to his earlier and more obscure life become of historic import. In this light, the following brief monthly report made by R. E. Lee in 1843 will be read with interest. The report years ago came into the hands of James R. Cosper while on a visit to relatives in New York and was recently found among his papers.

Little did the humble captain of the corps of engineers, quietly discharging his duty as an officer of the United States a half century ago, suppose that a time would come when from an advancement to colonel of his regiment he would turn his sword and military skill to aid an attempt at the dissolution of the Union and be called by a short-lived Confederacy to the command of all its armies and the personal control of the heroic Army of Northern Virginia.

The report of itself is as methodical as it is brief and the economic feature of the cash account finds no like instance in present expensive and extensive military operations.

A single half sheet of common writing paper, folded in three, is endorsed "Fort LaFayette." "Report of operations for the month of May, 1843," and contains the following:

FRESH DRAIN ON THE FARMERS.

Every year or two, there is organized a new order, or lodge, or society, or grange, or alliance, or P. L., or some F. O. O. L. scheme to "benefit farmers." This has been going on for years—always with the same end in view and always with the same result, viz: a drain of a few more dollars from the pockets of the farmers. In each case there must be an "organizer," a sort of general agent sent out by the "Grand Lodge" to "organize" the smaller lodges. This official gets paid for the work in hard cash; the farmers pay it, of course, for it is for their "benefit." Then comes a "grand lecturer," or some such windy concern, and he has a regular job of talking to the farmers, and he charges them so much cash—and they pay it. Then come the "dues to the grand lodge," etc., and this means more money, and the farmers who have joined the new order reach down into their pockets and bring up the daddy dollars to do it with. With all this expense saddled on him, of course the farmer bears the burden, while the "organizer" the "lecturer" and the officers of the "grand lodge" live at ease on good salaries, wear good clothes, and have a good time. The farmer goes out and plants a few more acres of ground, works a little harder, deprives himself of a few more comforts, and his family of a few things they would have enjoyed—all for the sake of the "benefits" to be derived from the new order that some kind hearted philanthropist in some distant state has invented for their salvation. After a year or so, this particular order breaks up and is forgotten. Then some other kind hearted and philanthropic gentleman in some distant state, having an inborn dread of hard work, invents a new order, gets himself elected "grand master," his friends as officers, organizers and lecturers, and the game under a new name begins again. And again the farmer pays his money to join the new order, pays his dues to remain in it, but the kind hearted gentleman with a dislike for hard labor gets the benefits as before. And so it goes on and on, and possibly it may go on to the end of time. Just why farmers are selected to do all this great work of reforming the world, we never could guess, unless it was because they were either more able or more willing to pay than any other people. In these ways, however, farmers have spent vast sums of money and vast amounts of time, attention and energy—time, attention and energy which, if rightly applied, would have made some of them, at least, wealthy. Many have become so interested in the new "order," etc., that they have wasted much valuable time, to the great neglect of their farms and crops. And now as one bubble has burst, it disappears only to give place to a new one. The latest we have heard of is the "American Compact," a new fangled association that its advocates are trying to make farmers believe will bring them the salvation that the former schemes have utterly failed to bring. Again the farmers will be asked to go down into their pockets for one purpose or another, and again they will pay their cash. A year from now, where will their money be? Where will their time spent be? Will they be better off for the money, time and energy spent in the new scheme? We venture to say they will not reap a penny's benefit. And possibly by next year, they will be ready for some new scheme. In the meantime, however, the "officers" of the new order will have put in a pleasant winter and the bad months of the spring consuming the money that comes up from the country lodges. They may even get leisure enough to invent some new "compact"—Irish, Dutch, French or Hottentot, for next year's crop of "jiners" who have saved up a few dollars with which they will will gladly pay some benevolent stranger to organize another new lodge for the "benefit of the farmer." And so it goes. We do not believe that farmers are more gullible than others, but they are so situated that these fellows can get at them easily and "work" them with new schemes backed up by abundant wind and smooth talk. And now, What shall it be in 1894? A Chinese Compact? An English Compact? An Irish Compact? or a "compact" without a name or country?

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for March.

The leading article in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for March is a picturesque account of the four leading "European Parliaments"—those of Great Britain, France, Germany and Italy—by that experienced observer and graphic writer, Frederick S. Daniel. The illustrations accompanying this paper are as timely and up-to-date as the text, including views of Gladstone in the House of Commons, the scene in the French Chamber of Deputies on the occasion of the explosion of Vaillant's bomb, the stormy session at Monte Citorio at the time of the recent Italian Cabinet crisis, and the projected new palace of the Reichstag at Berlin. J. William Foedick illustrates, with a series of elaborate drawings, his own entertaining description of "An Artist's Winter at Fontainebleau." Other notable illustrated articles are "Tasmania," by E. Trowbridge; "Fort Hamilton," by Don C. Seitz; "Horrors of Capital Punishment," by W. H. Garrison; "How to get Married though in France," by Dr. B. Sherwood Dunn; "A True Eskimo Romance," by Dr J. M. Mills, surgeon of the Peary Relief Expedition; and an appreciative review of the life and work of the late Professor Tyndall, by Henry Tyrrell. A new serial story, entitled "The Silver Shafts," by Frances Swann Williams, begins in this number. There is also amongst the complete short stories, a peculiarly striking one by Maley Brainbridge Crist, called "The Woman's Story of Tolstoi's 'Kreutzer Sonata.'"

Some Star Boarders.

(Goshen Times)

Mrs. Samuel Young conducts a boarding house on East Lincoln avenue. The other morning six young men came to her place and engaged board, claiming they were employed by the Lake Shore in laying a double track. They said they would pay on the 15th when the pay car came along.

Delighted with the prospects of securing a nice lot of boarders (they were nice looking fellows) Mrs. Young took extra pains in preparing the meal. After breakfast they had her put their dinner in a basket and then they went away. After they had gone the landlady grew suspicious and an inquiry revealed that the six railroad men were nothing more than a gang of tramps, and that they went east in a box car with lunch enough to do them a couple of days. Mrs. Young is evidently not used to dealing with strangers or she would not have been taken in so easily.

— UNDER FARMERS BANK.

THE DEETERS MURDER TRIAL.

SCENE OF THE SHOOTING.

The above plan shows the scene of the murders. Deeters was striking his mother and her screams attracted Mrs. Lowe, who lived at Bachtel's, her father's. She came over to see what was the matter, and as she started back home, he shot her. Then he went to the railway crossing and shot Yates, who was coming home from Butler. Yates was not seriously hurt and got away. Deeters loaded his now empty revolver, and got up to the main road in time to meet Bachtel going to Butler for a doctor for his daughter. Deeters shot him, and later on set fire to the barn.

THE TRIAL.

Last week we omitted to mention that A. J. Baxter was also one of the attorneys for the defense, his name having been forgotten at the time we made the report. We left off at the testimony of Freddie Barnhart on Tuesday evening. He had seen Mrs. Lowe go over to Deeters', and when she was returning home, he saw Deeters shoot at her three times.

Mrs. Lemuel Campbell. Heard two shots, and saw a lady going west. Saw Deeters go back to his house. I live about 40 rods east. Saw Yates go by my house in a one horse wagon. Deeters threw up his hand at Yates and then fired. Yates got out of wagon, then his family all got out, Deeters shot five times. Then he started home on a run, then walked. He shot Bachtel in front of his mother's (Mrs. Deeters) house. Bachtel tried to get home, but could not. Went to a tree and laid down. My maiden name was Agnes Lowe. I never went to Deeters' house, they never came to see me.

Wm. L. Yates called. Live half a mile south of Deeters'. saw Deeters as I was going south across the railroad. He came on a run, threw up his hand, I stopped on the crossing, and Sam drew his revolver on me when about 12 feet away. I said, "Sam, what do you mean?" He said, "God, I'll show you what I mean," and fired, The bullet went over my head. He fired a second time, but I fell out of wagon, so he missed me. The horse was frightened and ran, leaving me unprotected. His third shot cut my hat, then he followed me around the horses and wagon and shot twice more, one going through my side and one through my arm. I again asked what he meant. He then snapped the revolver in my face. I got away. He did not try to hurt my wife or two girls. He staid there long enough to reload his revolver. He had not been social for some time, but about a year before, we were quite friendly. He had told me he thought Lizzie Maxwell, a teacher, would make a good wife, but he thought Laura Lowe stood in his way, and that the Smurrs were also against him. We had been both members of the Sunday school and of the same farmers' club, until we got cold in the matter. Deeters belonged to the Patrons of Industry; the organization is about dead now.

A. J. Baxter testified that the revolver had four loads in it when he received it from the parties who got it of old Mrs. Deeters. John M. Lowe said his wife died about 5 p. m. and her father, Mr. Bachtel, about 9 a. m. the same day, Sept. 1, 1893, which was the next day after they were shot. Deeters was not friendly to my wife, though he had no cause to dislike her. The night that Deeters came to our house, we got the revolver from him and went over to his house, leaving him at Bachtel's with the two women and Freddie. Found everything all right at Deeters', came home and went to bed, but Deeters remained there till morning. He talked with everyone but my wife. This was in December of '92. Mrs. Bachtel, widow of Amos Bachtel, was sick, and could not testify. So the prosecution stopped and the attorneys for the defense began their statements. In these remarks came out more about the visit of of Deeters to Mr. Bachtel's in December of '92. He had been sick, thought someone was trying to break in and rob him, and that all wanted to rob him. He had hid his money under the porch at one time. He put some money in the Davis bank at Auburn. He went to dinner then with his nephew, Geo. Lanning On the way, he stopped and said, "Hark! don't you hear the voices? I can hear the ear trumpets." After going home, he told his mother "The bank has been robbed. The thieves have got the money." Later on, Mr. Bachtel had sent cards to Deeters' sisters to come home, for Sam was deranged. Deeters formed a dislike for Yates, and believed Bachtel was meddling with his affairs. When the Davis bank failed in July, he went to get his money, but could not. Then he went to a neighbor, Corbin, to borrow it, as he wanted to pay the contractor, Seldenright, who built his new house. Corbin could not let him have it. Then he asked his mother. She said she would let him have it, but he must give a note. Then he flew into a rage and struck at her with a board, missed and hit a stove lid and broke that. He rained blow after blow on his poor old mother till her screams brought Mrs. Lowe. After shooting Mrs. Lowe, then Yates, then Bachtel, he went to his mother's barn closed the doors and fired it, burning his own buggy and other things with his mother's crops. He then went to the house, smashed all the furniture. Wm. Haines came and Deeters went to Butler with him. C. J. Coats had him taken to a justice, who said, "Deeters, did you shoot Mr. Bachtel?" "Yes." "Did you shoot to kill?" "Yes I did." "Did you shoot Mrs. Lowe?" "Yes" "And Mr Yates?" "Yes" "Why did you shoot Mr. Bachtel?" "He was meddling in my business and Mrs. Lowe was the worse one in the whole lot."

The first witness for the defense, to prove Deeters' insanity, was F. E. Davenport, druggist, Auburn. "Am receiver of the J. L. Davis estate. When Deeters swore to his claim, I noticed something peculiar about him. I think he is of unsound mind."

Justice McNabb testified to the conversation given above. He also said the reason they had not sent Deeters to the asylum at the time it was talked of was because Dr. Fanning had concluded to treat Deeters himself. Thinks Deeters not sound.

Wm. Hanes testified, "Deeters came to my house Dec. 14, '92, in evening. Appeared ill, but said he was not. Said men were pursuing him and had destroyed his property, such as buggy, etc. I went home with him and showed him his buggy was all right, etc. His mother said Sam was worrying about his money which he had put in bank."

Geo. Lanning, cashier of Davis' bank, testified that soon after Deeters deposited the money, he sent a dispatch asking if if the bank had been robbed. Lanning telegraphed back that it had not.

Hanes was recalled, and said he had read this telegram sent to Deeters. Deeters was supervisor of roads a year or two and cared for the switch lights of the Wilmington sidetrack near by for some time.

Aaron Moore testified, does not think Deeters is of sound mind. Have talked with him since he has been in jail. I asked him what he was in there for. He said, "Shooting. They might as well let me out. I have ditching and stock to attend to. I would not run away."

David Smurr testified that when the barn was burning, he moved some rails away, Deeters was walking about, then sat on fence, was cool. He said, "I poked a couple of matches into it. Let the buggy burn. She is burning nicely. I shot Laura and Amos, but I don't think I hurt Laura much, but I poked it to Yates pretty bad." About his mother, he said, "The old devil never wanted me to to have anything, and I thought I would show her." I then left, and we carried Bachtel home within 10 or 12 rods of where Deeters was sitting on the fence. Deeters went into his house then and sat in the door. Could see him from Bachtel's.

Willis A. Daniels testified, Have known Sam over 20 years. He was not cheerful the last year or two. After his calls at Bachtel's and Hanes', I rode in sleigh with him. He asked if I wanted to ride with the meanest man in the neighborhood. I told him he must get that out of his mind. He was going to see Fanning to get medicine. When barn was burned I got on horse and rode there fast as I could. Thought train had set it on fire. Was told to keep away as Sam was crazy. Saw old Mrs. Deeters with her sleeves rolled up, crying, and with blood on her arms. This was about 5 p. m. Hanes came and took Sam in charge.

Mrs. Wm. Hanes testified as to Sam's visit to them in December, '92, about as her husband had. They often met Deeters in the P. I. meetings, as Deeters was an officer in the order. Others testified that Deeters tended the switch lights 11 years, and was careful and competent. Was not discharged for any fault, but because no longer needed. A. Corbin testified as to Sam's coming to him that day for money, and said he had had some money under the barn floor, but someone

PICTURE OF CHRIST.

FAIRER THAN CHILDREN OF MEN.

Treatment of Children by Parents—God the Central Fact in All Thought and Action—Other Matters, Pertaining to Church Work.

(South Bend Daily Tribune)

The material world was the first Bible, for the reason that it contained the first revelation. Its chief value is that it reveals God's plan and thought. That is why the material world is such an interesting study. It is full of thought. But where there is thought there is a thinker. Hence it is, because God is, that the universe invites our study. If poem and statue, and picture and temple could be made by machinery they would fail to awaken our interest. It is because they are creations of genius and reveal thought that they stimulate our study. But what is true of the universe is true of the Bible. Its inspired pages glow and shine forth the thought of God. The chief value of the inspired Word is that it reveals Christ our Lord. The Old Testament even is full of Him and breathes His name. He declared, speaking of the Scriptures: "They are they which testify of me. The language of our text tells us that He is fairer than the children of men. This may be said of His personal appearance. He was the ideal man from every standpoint. His goodness and gentleness, and kindness, and love, must have found expression in His face. The beauty of His Spirit must have made beautiful His personal appearance. I part company with all artists who paint Him otherwise than handsome. He enjoyed perfect health, for we never read that He was sick. So in the light of the perfect health of His body and the beauty of His Spirit we may say that He was the ideal man in His personal appearance. We base this statement on the text, "Thou art fairer than the children of men." But what of the statement of the prophet? "For He shall grow up before Him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground. He is despised and rejected of men."

These words evidently refer to the fact that His position and surroundings were so humble that men failed to recognize Him as the Messiah. His cradle was a manger and His trade that of a carpenter and His town excited the hatred of the nation. They raised the question, can any good thing come out of Nazareth? He associated Himself with the toiling millions of the world when He pushed the plane in the carpenter's shop. He could not enter upon His public ministry until He had reached the age of 30 That was the custom of the time. Hence He dignifies labor and encourages humanity by learning the trade of Joseph. His calling was useful and honorable. He may have planned and reared many a beautiful cottage in old Nazreth. He probably made furniture to adorn the homes of the poor. Hence His work was beautiful. He who had created the beautiful flowers was not ashamed to build the beautiful cottage for the poor. On the raw material He wrote the signature of his mind. As the brilliant stars in the sky declared His glory, so the beautiful cottage on the hill revealed His love and sympathy for the poor. But we are to be like Him not only in spirit but also in bodily feature. An inspired apostle has declared, "That our bodies shall be made like unto His glorious body." But again, He is fairer than the children of men as a preacher. His enemies declared "never man spake like this man."

The crowds that followed him to the mountain top and to the shore of the sea and to the solitude of the wilderness reveal His transcendent power as a preacher. But while in tone and expression and impressive manner He had no equal. He surpassed the sons of men in His matter. There are no creations in literature that can match His parables. They are literary paintings that glow with the love of God. Mr. Spurgeon with all his fertile genius for eloquence tells us that he was not equal to the creation of a parable. The words of our Lord never grow old. They are as fresh to-day as when they fell from His lips on the mountain side or by the shore of the sea. The higher our civilization the larger will be our appreciation. This world will never outgrow Him. Then His words made real everything that He touched. He made the man breaking rocks on the highway realize that his immortal spirit was of more value than a universe. He made our Father in Heaven a real father who welcomes with gladness the prodigal home. What a picture He gave us of our Father in the parable of the prodigal: but when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him and had compassion, and ran and fell on his neck and kissed him. Art and literature can never match this transcendent creation. Then how real He makes His immortal life. He carries the doctrine of a future life from twilight to the open day. The fact is that all of our real knowledge of Heaven comes from his teachings. His words tell us that the grave in the green grass is not the home of our dead. Our little ones that go from our presence go straight to the house of many mansions. O death where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory? But also He was the ideal man in society. He gave it tone and lifted it to a higher plane. Little children were glad to feel the touch of His gentle hand. He saw in every man the image of God, and everyone was welcome in His presence. When he sat at the table of hospitality He threw the sunshine of His presence over all. His smile was a perpetual summer. But what a friend and what a character! He is the ideal friend that is always near. The cruel cross is the seal of His friendship. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. But what tongue can tell and what hand can paint the glory and beauty of His character. The ages hail Him as the ideal character of the human race. Thou art fairer than the children of men.

Pleasant Party.

We copy from the Ashley Times, the following:

On Feb. 14, a pleasant gathering took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Triplett, in Smithfield township. The following persons met by invitation to assist C. H. Triplett in celebrating his fiftieth birthday: Mr. and Mrs. Edward Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Farrington, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Craft, Mr. and Mrs. Byron McEndarfer, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Buchanan, Mr. and Mrs. John Potts, Mr. and Mrs. Al. Triplett, Mr. and Mrs. James Triplett, Mrs. Reinhart, Mrs. Kestler, Mrs. Harmes, Mr. Barker, Mr. Frank Myers and Miss Ora Scranton. It is needless to say that each one of the company present enjoyed themselves largely, and after partaking of a bounteous dinner prepared by Mrs. Triplett, which would indicate that she was perfect in that department, we relieved the table of some of the good things. We had the privilege of listening to some very fine music from the two younger sons of C. H., whose birthday we came to celebrate. Mr. Triplett has lived on the farm on which he now resides ever since a boy, except the time he served our country as a soldier, and seems to be enjoying health and prosperity. I think I would vouch the sentiment of all present in wishing that C. H. might live to enjoy many more birthdays and we could all meet him every time one comes around. A. B.

RELENTLESS TIME

BRINGS ABOUT THESE EVENTS IN THE WIDE WORLD.

Gladstone Has Resigned the Premiership—Oakland, Ill., Suffers from a Conflagration—Mrs. Lease Not a Mason—Two Murderers Killed by a Mob—A Fatal Experiment.

KILLED BY A MOB.

Tennessee Murderers Suffer the Severest Penalty for an Atrocious Crime.

Justice—swift, sure, and sweeping—was meted out to two murderers by a mob at Mountain Home, Ark. Several hundred men, who are supposed to be inhabitants of Ozark County, Missouri, and Fulton and Baxter Counties, Arkansas, assembled at Mountain Home for the purpose of lynching Anderson Carter and Bud Montgomery, alias James P. Newton, both charged with murder. They procured the keys, unlocked the doors and commenced shooting into the jail. After about twenty shots the firing ceased. Anderson Carter was dead but Newton was found to be alive and asking for water. This was given him and then the mob finished its vengance by riddling his body with bullets. Both died protesting their innocence and only asked that they be relieved of their shackles

The crime for which the men were killed was the killing of Hunton Wilson, in Baxter County, Arkansas, on the night of December 18. While Wilson was sitting by his wife before a wood fire the men entered the house, killed him instantly and nearly killed his wife, robbed the house of $1,100, and, after heaping live coals of fire upon Mr. Wilson's body, made their escape.

The English Premier.

London special: The subject of Mr. Gladstone's resignation is revived again in a way suggesting that there may be some foundation is the report. The Pall Mall Gazette, the St. James Gazette and the Westminster Gazette publish articles almost identical in substance, indicating that Mr. Gladstone will resign at an early day. The reason given in each case is that the premier's eyesight is failing so fast that his vision will become wholly obscured if he does not immediately retire from active political duty.

LATER.—The Edinburgh Evening News says unqualifiedly that Mr. Gladstone has resigned and that his resignation will go into effect at Easter. The paper says that the Premiership was offered to Lord Roseberry, but he declined it. The position was then offered to Earl Spencer and he accepted it.

She Never Said It

Mrs. Mary Lease, the famous female politician of Kansas, is in Chicago. In an interview in response to a question as to the rumor that she had declared herself to be a Mason, Mrs. Lease laughed heartily, and said: "Of course I am not a Mason and never said I was, although I wear an emblem of the order. The report originated in my assertion that the time had come when women should bind themselves together for mutual aid and protection in an oath-bound organization in line with Masonry. And I don't see why women shouldn't be eligible to become Masons. The discrimination against the sex in this as in other instances is but an old prejudice which is fast passing away. Equal suffrage is the keynote of human progress."

Good Sound Sense.

Bishop Messmer of Green Bay, Wis., has written a letter to the Catholics of Kaukauna, advising them not to indulge in public demonstrations against lecturers like Prof. Sims. He expresses his sympathy with their outraged feelings, but tells them that there is nothing to be gained by such demonstrations as they indulged in the last time Sims visited there.

Costly Fire.

Klench Bros.' flour mill, elevator, warehouse and cooperage, together with five residences, were totally destroyed by fire at Oakland, Ill. The loss to Klench Bros. is about $60,000 and the total loss on the residences is $15,000. All are partially insured. It is supposed the fire was incendiary as three previous attempts had been made to burn the mill.

Terrible Accident to a Doctor.

At Clyde, O., while experimenting with chemicals, Dr. A. Hutchins of Toledo, had both his eyes blown out and received other serious injuries. He will probably die. The building in which he was conducting his experiments was almost completely wrecked.

Two Electric Cars Collide.

Two electric cars in Davenport, Iowa, became unmanageable and collided while running at full speed. Both cars were filled with passengers and the following were all more or less injured: Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Henly, W. A. Pellon and his mother, and T. J. Rochell.

Anarchists Arrested.

The activity of the police in searching the domiciles of anarchists continues. About twenty anarchists have been arrested, and it is believed that some of the arrests will turn out to be most important and will lead to further anarchist revelations.

Frightful Gas Explosion.

George Custer was instantly killed and William Rose, Charles Carson, and Andrew Onn were dangerously injured by an explosion of gas at the Point Breeze Gas Works, Philadelphia.

Gave Birth to Five Babies.

The wife of David Roseborger, a farmer living near Kittanning, Pa., gave birth to five children, three girls and two boys. All the children appear to be strong and healthy and likely to live.

Gone Wrong.

Henry Thompson, Treasure of the Empire Theater, Indianapolis, was found to be $400 short in his accounts. Thompson has disappeared.

Shot to Death.

Eufala (I. T.) special: Joseph Dick, a full-blooded Creek Indian, was shot to death ten miles west of here for the murder of another Indian named Grey. Both men were in love with the same girl. The Sheriff went out and selected a spot for the execution. He placed a small box against a tree and returned to the jail and beckoned to the prisoner to follow him. Dick straightened himself up, looked around at the ten guards surrounding him, and leisurely took a seat upon the box, and this proving unsteady, he arose and jammed it down solidly, and then again sat upon it as coolly as though he were taking his seat to be photographed. A red handkerchief was tied over his eyes and a piece of white paper pinned over his heart. Not a muscle of his face or hands moved. Two guards took position twenty-five feet distant, and both fired at the white spot, killing Dick instantly.

HESITATING.

All Kinds of Business Waits to Learn What Will Be the Future.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: The waiting condition of business is one in which weekly fluctuations mean nothing. Business of all kinds is hesitating until more can be determined about the future, and meanwhile orders which will keep hands at work for a time are given and accepted, this work increasing in some lines and in some others decreasing, without affording reasonable indications of the future. Prices are again greatly depressed, as low or lower than ever having been made in wheat, silver and some manufactured products, and neither cotton, wool nor raw iron have advanced. The glutted money market continues to show that the volume of business is still inadequate to employ the circulation available, and the withdrawal of about $60,000,000 from the New York market by the sale of government bonds does not cause the expected strengthening of rates. With gradually decreasing shipments of merchandise to other countries, foreign exchange rises, and some exports of gold are expected. The volume of domestic trade does not seem to increase.

May Not Go to Prison.

A New York paper prints the following from Albany: John Y. McKane is safe and unless something unforeseen happens he is saved from a felon's cell for many months to come, and perhaps he will never be required to wear a prison garb. Judge Fursman of Troy, consented to issue a certificate of reasonable doubt, provided such certificate was not issued by Judge Cullen of Brooklyn. Judge Cullen has not as yet heard any argument upon the motion now before him and will not in any likelihood be in position to give his decision for a week. For this reason, all information about the action of Judge Fursman of Troy is jealously guarded by the McKaneites at Albany. The plea made before Judge Fursman is that the McKane jury was tampered with while out of the jury box and that the jury rendered a verdict upon public sentiment rather than upon the testimony presented.

Cool Robbery of a Jewelry Store.

At Hancock, Mo., a stranger entered the store of W. A. Allen & Son, and with a revolver in his hand ordered "hands up" Mr. Allen and five or six men were in the store, and the order was promptly obeyed. He then proceeded to the money drawer, taking its contents, helped himself to some jewelry, a revolver and all the cartridges in stock, coolly bade the occupants good bye, backed out of the store and escaped before they realized the true situation. One of the parties in the store attempted to leave the building under fright when the robber commanded him to return, which he promptly did with his hands elevated. The robber wore no mask, is a small man with a very red, smooth face, sandy hair, and is undoubtedly a professional.

All Indicted.

The grand jury at Mason, Mich., returned ten indictments against State officials in the salary amendment scandal. Secretary of State Jochim, Treasurer Hambitzer, Land Commissioner Berry, Attorney General Ellis, Clerks Potter and Warren and others, are charged with a fraudulent canvass of the salary amendment vote of 1893.

The main count recites that Adolphus A. Ellis and others at Lansing April 1, 1891, at the Secretary of State's office did falsely, corruptly, willfully, and feloniously alter and forge one of said public records. Then follows a detailed narrative of how the returns were raised so as to show 1,318 votes instead of 318 for Ellis' salary amendment.

Burned to Death.

Mary L. Rudy, the 13-year-old stepdaughter of Mr. Joseph Nurre, a lumber dealer, met with a terrible accident at Evansville, Ind., which will result in her death. The child was assisting her mother and was dusting a mantel, when her dress became ignited from the grate, and in a moment the flames spread until she was completely enveloped. When the parent saw her child she gave the alarm of fire to her neighbors and the fire department was called. Firemen Harris, Cross, and Schlavick smothered the flames with a blanket. The entire body from the waist up was literally cooked, and in many places the flesh could be peeled from the bones.

Buffalo Costello Skips Again.

"Buffalo" Costello has returned to exile in Canada, after secretly coming back to Chicago. He remained in hiding until Saturday night, and when surrounded by detectives on the west side, slipped out of a window in disguise. He has forfeited his $4,000 bail to appear before an Indiana court in connection with the Roby prize fight cases and the Indiana Supreme Court will not have a chance to test the McHugh law, legalizing glove contests, by passing on Costello's case. This means that the Roby, or Columbian Club will have no chance to bid for the Corbett-Jackson mill.

To Be Hanged March 23.

Judge Brentano at Chicago denied the motion for a new trial for Patrick Eugene Prendergast, who is under sentence of death for the murder of Carter Harrison. When asked if he had anything to say why sentence of death should not be pronounced on him, Prendergast delivered a rambling, incoherent harangue to the Court, in which he defended his act, accused the medical experts who testified at the trial, belittled the efforts of his attorneys, attacked Jailer Morris and the newspapers and railed at the jury that convicted. March 23 was fixed by the Court as the date of Prendergast's execution.

Farmers Seek Protection.

The farmers of the Indiana gas belt have organized a series of detective associations for the apprehension of criminals. Articles of incorporation were filed in Anderson, recently, by the Frankfort and Cloverdale branches. The organization has a membership of nearly 100, with Deputy Sheriff G. H. Gooding at their head. Farms have been plundered by bands of thieves, and this locality will undertake to hunt them down. To facilitate their work the organization has secured two Southern bloodhounds, one of which successfully trailed a criminal at Pendleton, Ind., at a recent trial.

The President's Health.

A special from Washington says: It is whispered that the real object of the President's proposed trip is that he may submit to another surgical operation. It is said that the jaw which was operated on before is again ulcerating, and that everything has been arranged to have the necessary operation performed on board the Dolphin, in the retirement of the North Carolina sounds. The surgeons will meet the President at an appointed place, and remote from settlements or the telegraph, their skill will be exercised.

Armstrong Surrenders.

Calvin Armstrong, who escaped from jail at Kokomo, Ind., several days ago, surrendered at the Palmer House, Chicago, to Sheriff Simons of Howard County, Ind., whom he had telegraphed to come on, and immediately began serving his three years' sentence in the Indiana State Prison at Michigan City. Armstrong, who was Assistant Treasurer of Howard County, was convicted of embezzling $40,000 of the County's funds and was given three years in the pen. While in jail in Kokomo awaiting removal to Michigan City, Armstrong made his escape and no trace of him could be found.

Labor Riots.

A cut of 19 per cent. in the wages of laborers at the National Forge and Iron works at East Chicago was announced. This reduces their pay to $1 a day for the severe work of wheeling scrap iron. Two hundred and fifty Poles walked out and many refused to return. Bloody fights with knives ensued, and several men were injured. The puddlers' wages will be reduced, and they will probably go out. It is reported that hundreds of idle men are on their way from South Chicago to take the strikers' places, and trouble is inevitable. Reductions in wages at other mills have also been made.

A Fatal Plunge.

A queer accident that will most probably result in the death of a young man took place at the new bridge now in course of construction over Alum Creek, at Broad street, Columbus, Ohio. Geo. Ramsey, the son of the superintendent, was at the topmost part of the structure. Benumbed by the cold he toppled over and dived straight down into the shallow bed of the stream, some thirty feet. He alighted squarely on his head, and was dragged out in an unconscious condition. The physician in attendance says that he cannot recover.

A New Ship Canal.

Ottawa (Ont.) special: Col. Tisdale, M. P., for South Borfolk, has deposited with the Clerk of the Railway Committee of the House of Commons the draft of a bill for the incorporation of the St. Clair and Lake Erie Ship Canal Company, which has for its object the construction of a canal thirteen miles long from lake St. Clair to Lake Erie. The canal will save a great detour to vessels which at present have to utilize the Detroit River. The capital of the proposed company is $5,000,000.

A New Oil Field.

Upper Sandusky (Ohio) special: Parties in this city are leasing all the land in the Southern portion of this county. It is not know whom the leases are for, but they are understood to be in the interest of a wealthy Eastern corporation who will sink a number of wells in the hope of finding oil. The territory is all new, no wells or indication of oil ever having been found, and the prospective experiment is looked forward to with considerable interest.

The Silver States to Secede.

Georgetown (Col.) special.—A petition has appeared in this city headed by the name of Mayor Henry Parker, urging upon the citizens of the silver camps to take steps to secede from the United States and become annexed to Mexico. The Mayor states that similar petitions will be in circulation throughout the silver States in a short time. Georgetown, he says, has been requested to take the initiative.

The Ohio Pipe Line.

It is now said that the pipe line from Indiana fields to supply a number of Ohio cities with natural gas will be a sure go. The project has been under consideration for some time, and the places to be benefited include Dayton, Springfield, Piqua, Columbus, Covington, and Fort Recovery. A sixteen-inch main will be laid. Senator Brice and Dr. Baxter of Lima, Ohio, are said to be at the head of the company.

Train Robbers Recaptured.

Joe Hardin, the Centralia train robber, who escaped from the Chester, Ill., Penitentiary recently, where he was serving a twenty-years' sentence, was captured three miles from Menard, Ill. He was in hiding with friends, but was overhauled by Warden J. D. Baker. Hardin escaped from prison by secreting himself in a wagon load of dirt that was hauled out of the prison yard and dumped into the river.

Killed His Mother.

Ever Everson, residing in the town of Greenfield, La Crosse County, Wis., shot his mother and then cut his own throat, after a family quarrel. Both are in a precarious condition.

Worst in Years.

Leadville (Col.) special: All railroads are delayed by the worst storm ever experienced. The snow is ten to fifteen feet deep in many places in the State.

TO TALK ON TARIFF.

THOSE WHO WILL SPEAK IN THE SENATE.

Indications Point to a Long and Animated Discussion—Many of the Cleverest Speeches Delivered on the Floor Are Prepared by Outsiders.

May Last All Summer.

Washington correspondence:

The indications are that the tariff discussion in the Senate will continue for two, three or even four months. The average newspaper reader, if he has not watched the progress of tariff discussions in the past, will wonder, perhaps, how eighty-five Senators will manage to consume three months in tariff debate. If each Senator had an entire legislative day allotted to him, with the privilege of speaking from 10 o'clock in the morning until 6 in the evening, the debate would last but little longer. And there are some Senators who will not speak to the bill at all. Yet it would not be difficult to prolong the debate through the whole ensuing summer. To balance the Senators who do not speak, there are some Senators who speak on every possible occasion, and some other Senators who are often called to their feet by questions—whose knowledge of tariff matters makes them a constantly consulted authority.

SENATOR SHERMAN.

The best authorities on the tariff are not always the men who say most about it in public. A great many of the cleverest speeches delivered on the floor of the Senate are not written by the men who deliver them, and the authority for many another is the private secretary of the Senator or a tariff expert who is called into consultation. It is noted of some Senators that they are never ready in debate unless their private secretaries or their committee clerks are at their elbows. One member of the Senate Finance Committee, now in political retirement, made his reputation in the House of Representatives on a tariff speech which was written for him by a well-known newspaper correspondent, afterward clerk of the Committee of Ways and Means. This Senator always had some one to prompt him when he was making one of his stately tariff speeches, for Senators on the other side of the chamber had an unpleasant way of cutting in with questions he could not answer and throwing him off his his oratorical feet.

VICE PRESIDENT STEVENSON.
President of the Senate.

SENATOR MILLS.

Few Ready Debaters.

There are few ready tariff debaters in the Senate and the running discussion of the Wilson bill will be confined to five or six men. The other Senators will guard local interests and make set speeches. The Senators who will be heard most frequently from day to day are Vest, Mills, Jones of Arkansas, McPherson and Harris on the Democratic side; Aldrich, Allison, Sherman, Teller and Lodge on the Republican. These are the men who will debate pending amendments seriously and to the enjoyment of the Senate and the galleries. There are, however, few Senators who will not make set speeches on the Wilson bill. Each of them considers it a duty to his State to tell how he stands toward protection, and why. There will be a chance for all the orators, for the Senate never attempts to shut off the prepared oratorial effort as the House does. And all of the Senate speeches will undoubtedly be delivered on the Senate floor. There is no such thing as leave to print in the Senate.

SENATOR M'PHERSON

The order of the speech-making is in the hands of the Vice President. He may recognize whom he pleases. Mr. Stevenson will follow his customary rule in the tariff discussion. Where several orators from each side of the Senate expect to speak, he will arrange to recognize them alternately—first a Democrat and then a Republican.

The names of those who are to be recognized are entered on a little slip of paper, which the Vice President has on the desk before him. This slip of paper tells him who is to make the first speech, and twenty other Senators might address the Chair in opposition to the gentleman whose name heided the list and Mr. Stevenson would pass over them all. If a Senator wishes to speak at length he must make arrangements in advance with the presiding officer.

Clerks Preparing Data.

The Senate clerks are in the midst of a heavy siege of work. Petitions and memorials for and against features of the Wilson bill are being received. Benj. Durfee, the tariff expert of the finance committee, has several thousand of these in his room, all jacketed and prepared for reference.

SENATOR MORRILL

The Senate discussion on the tariff is considered of more importance than the debate in the House, because the Senators are supposed to be much more independent of executive influence, and, in fact, they have shown their independence in dealing with the President's nominations. And, moreover, when the House was discussing the tariff there were two great possibilities that the Wilson bill would not reach the President now there is only one obstruction, opposition in the Senate.

There is very little doubt in the minds of any of the Democratic Senators that the debate may be prolonged for several weeks. Republican Senators are anxious to delay the vote in the hope that influences may be brought to bear which will defeat the bill altogether. They have the precedent of a three months' debate allowed to the Democrats when the McKinley bill was under discussion, and they have little doubt that the Democrats will be willing to accord them the same privilege of discussing at length the Wilson bill. Under the rules of the Senate debate can be prolonged by a stubborn minority from the beginning of a session until its close, for the purpose of preventing the passage of an obnoxious measure. Once in the history of the Senate it adjourned without the transaction of any business because, the membership being divided equally between the two parties, the Democrats would not agree that the vote of the Vice President should be cast to elect a Republican secretary and other offices. This is one of the few instances in which the power to filibuster in the Senate has been used to prevent action of any kind.

No Attempt to Filibuster.

It is a notable fact that no attempt was made to prevent the passage of the McKinley tariff bill by filibustering. In the same way Republican Senators will offer no objection to the passage of the Wilson bill after they have had a good opportunity to debate it and make it, if possible, so unacceptable to some of the Democratic Senators that it will not command the necessary majority when it is put on passage. Several Republican Senators said, just before the vote on the McKinley bill was taken, that two, and possibly three, Democratic votes could be had if they were needed. The Democrats who were said to be available for the passage of the McKinley bill at that time are still members of the Senate, and the vote on the Wilson bill ought to show how much truth there was in the statements made by the Republican Senators four years ago. But, unless the Republicans believe that they can defeat the bill on a straight vote before that time expires, it is pretty certain that the discussion will last three months. There may be propositions from the Democratic side to close debate and to fix a time for a vote. Undoubtedly the chairman of the Finance Committee will arise in his place on four or five occasions and appeal to Senators to come to some agreement by which an early vote can be had. That little ceremonial was performed by Mr. Voorhees with frequency during the discussion of the silver-purchase-repeal bill at the special session of Congress. But this is done chiefly to convince the country that the Democratic Senators are not prolonging the discussion willingly. Great pressure will be brought to bear by the representatives of business interests to have the debate brought to a speedy termination, so that the country may know what business conditions it has to meet. In deference to their demand, the Democratic Senators will make demonstrations at regular intervals apparently looking to a termination of the discussion, but really with no hope that the Republican Senators will respond to their appeals. The Republican Senators will assume very willingly the responsibility for postponing the vote on the Wilson bill until every chance of defeating it has been exhausted.

MOVABLE SIDEWALKS.

A Company Has Been Formed to Construct One in Chicago.

A company has been formed in Chicago to build a movable sidewalk in the city like that in operation at the World's Fair. While elevated railroads serve well there generally, in certain business quarters the streets are so crowded that the erection of tracks is impossible, and here it is proposed to utilize the movable sidewalk. Thus, it is hoped, a ready communication may be established between hotels, theaters, railway stations, etc. These sidewalks will be elevated about fourteen feet above the streets and operated probably by electricity. The entire width of each structure is planned to be occupied by one fixed platform and two movable ones, that adjacent to the fixed platform to be run at a rate of three miles per hour, and that most remote from it at the rate of six miles per hour. By walking in the direction of motion the rate of progress can be increased over that of the platform by an amount equal to the speed at which a passenger may walk. Inasmuch as the movable sidewalks are continuous and always in motion, there need be no delays in waiting for cars, nor can there be any danger of collision or other accident which result from the running of independent trains.

MURDERER SHOT TO DEATH.

Joseph Dick Suffers the Extreme Penalty According to Creek Law.

Joseph Dick, a full-blooded Creek Indian, was shot to death ten miles west of Eufala, I. T., for the murder of another Indian named Grey. A few minutes after 4 p. m. the sheriff went out and selected a spot for the execution. He placed a small box against a tree and returned to jail and beckoned to the prisoner to follow him. Dick straightened himself up, looked around at the ten guards surrounding him, and leisurely strolled out to the place of execution. He took a seat upon the box, and, this proving unsteady, he arose and jammed it down solidly and then again sat upon it as coolly as though he were taking his seat to be photographed. A red handkerchief was tied over his eyes and a piece of white paper pinned over his heart. Not a muscle of his face or hands moved. Two of the guards took position twenty five feet distant and both fired at the white spot, killing Dick instantly.

LIVES LOST IN A FIRE.

Home for Feeble-Minded Children at Vineland, N. J., Completely Destroyed.

Two lives were lost and a score placed in imminent peril by a fire which consumed a portion of the State Home for Feeble-minded Children at Vineland, N. J. The victims were J. H. Sage, the engineer of the institution, and his wife, who acted as laundress. The fire was discovered in the basement of the handsome three-story brick structure known as "The Robinson Memorial Cottage." Sixteen helpless and well-nigh idiotic children slept on the lower floors, and for a time it seemed as if nothing short of a miracle could possibly save them. Loss on the building and contents, $20,000. The cause of the fire is a mystery.

GEN. HARRISON is expected to make several speeches for the Indiana State Republican ticket.

SIDE WITH STEVENS.

SENATE COMMITTEE INDORSES HIS ACTS IN HAWAII.

Majority Report on Hawaii Takes the President to Task—Senator Morgan's Finding Not Indorsed by Messrs. Sherman, Frye, Dolph and Davis.

Minority Blames Him.

The Senate's Hawaii Committee submitted its reports—800 printed pages—Monday. The majority finding, written by Mr. Morgan, justifies Mr. Stevens' actions except in proclaiming a protectorate, and finds nothing irregular in the appointment of Mr. Blount, but in effect says the evidence taken by the committee under more favorable circumstances leads the committee to different conclusions than those which he formed.

This report is concurred in as to all its essential findings by the majority, the Republican members of the committee—Senators Sherman, Frye, Dolph and Davis. They condemn the appointment of Commissioner Blount as unconstitutional; say the executive orders placing the navy in the harbor of Honolulu under the orders of Mr. Blount or Mr. Willis were without authority of law; that the order of Blount to Admiral Skerrett to lower the flag was unlawful and susceptible of being construed as unfriendly to the provisional government, and regard the intercourse of Mr. Blount and Mr. Willis with the deposed Queen as violative of international law and unwarranted. They consider the President had no right to reopen the predetermined legality of the provisional government, and regard any discussion of the "personal intentions" or "good faith" of either Mr. Blount or Mr. Willis as immaterial.

The report of Senators Butler, Turpie, Daniel, and Gray dissents from that portion which declares:

The only substantial irregularity in the conduct of Mr. Stevens, the late Minister, was his declaration of a protectorate by the United States over Hawaii.

While exempting from censure Capt. Wiltze of the Boston and his officers, they add:

We can not avoid the conviction that the inopportune zeal of Minister Stevens in the project of annexation caused him to exceed the proper limits of his official duty. His conduct was directly conducive to bringing about the condition of affairs which resulted in the overthrow of the Queen, the organization of the provisional government, the landing of the United States troops, and the attempted scheme of annexation; and upon this conclusion his conduct is seriously reprehensible and deserving of public censure.

Senators Butler and Turpie file a supplemental report, in which they say they are heartily in favor of the acquisition of these islands by the United States in a proper manner, but not by taking advantage of internal dissensions, for which they believe the United States in some manner responsible.

The conclusion of the Morgan report—to which Messrs. Sherman, Frye, Dolph, and Davis, the majority, dissent—is as follows:

Therefore your committee concludes to report that the President of the United States has not, in this particular, in any wise been a party to any irregularity or any impropriety of conduct in his high office. The committee also finds nothing worthy of criticism in the negotiation of the treaty of annexation with the provisional government of Hawaii.

In the opinion of the committee, based upon the evidence which accompanies this report, the only substantial irregularity that existed in the conduct of any officer of the United States, or agent of the President, during or since the time of the revolution of 1893, was that of Minister Stevens in declaring a protectorate of the United States over Hawaii, and in placing the flag of our country upon the government building of Honolulu. No actual harm resulted from this unauthorized act, but as a precedent it is not to be considered as being justified.

The committee has not considered it necessary to present any resolutions stating the conclusions indicated in the report, and asks that it be discharged from the further consideration of the resolutions under which this report is made.

A GIGANTIC SCHEME.

To Construct a Canal from Lake Michigan to Lake Erie.

A stupendous canal scheme which if carried out will entirely revolutionize the traffic of the great lakes, is said to be in contemplation by a number of capitalists in Chicago, New York, Boston and London. The proposed canal is designed to immensely facilitate the passage of vessels from Chicago, Milwaukee and other northwestern points to the East, and to render entirely unnecessary the present long route through the Straits of Mackinaw, Lake Huron, St. Clair River and lake and thence down the Detroit River to Lake Erie.

The plan now said to be under serious contemplation is to construct a canal directly across the State of Michigan from the eastern shore of Lake Michigan to either Detroit or Toledo, Ohio. Should either of these plans prove to be feasible, it will result in one of the most gigantic enterprises of the century. A number of capitalists from Chicago, New York, and Boston are said to stand ready to back the project to the extent of $50,000,000, and it is also said that the English capitalists who are interested in the Canadian Pacific Road have also shown a decided disposition to render material financial aid in perfecting this great work.

At present those most intimately connected with the scheme are unwilling to divulge their plans, or to allow the use of their names, but it is stated on reliable authority that preliminary surveys of several proposed routes for this contemplated canal have already been made, and the feasibility of the project have already been vouched for by eminent engineers. One of the plans under consideration is to tap Lake Michigan at a point near Michigan City or New Buffalo, and to run the canal directly eastward to Toledo.

Another plan, which also has a number of influential supporters, is to strike Lake Michigan at Benton Harbor and thence run in a northeasterly direction to Detroit. Either of these canals would be about 180 miles long.

THREE DEAD IN A BLIZZARD.

Heavy Snowstorm in Texas, Arkansas, and at Other Points.

Reports from sections of Texas and Arkansas indicate that a severe snowstorm has prevailed there. At Temple, Sherman, Denison, and Fort Worth the snowfall is the heaviest known in over a decade. Several inches of snow have fallen in Arkansas and in some of the adjoining States, and in Indian Territory the cold is intense. Trains in Texas have been delayed in consequence of the storm, and some apprehension is felt by the cattlemen, who fear the storm may result disastrously to their herds. In the Seminole Indian reservation the bodies of Joseph Add, a negro, and two half-breed Indians have been found in the woods, frozen stiff. They were hunting, and, being caught in the blizzard of several weeks ago, perished.

AT WAR WITH HERSELF.

The Story of a Woman's Atonement, by Charlotte M. Braeme.

Leonie wanted to be alone. She felt as though someone had struck her across the face with a whip, and had left a stinging, scarlet brand there.

"A thief!" She, Leonie Rayner, who had been proud of her beauty—who had been fair and pure as the blossoms around her—who had been loyal and true—who had carried herself proudly by right of her innocence and fair fame—who had never known fear or shame, was now neither more nor less than a thief.

They called her Countess of Charnleigh—she was in reality a thief. They praised her; they said that the world was at her feet—that she was graceful, charming, and clever. Before heaven she was a thief. She said the word to herself over and over again, and each time it grew more hateful.

Yet it was perfectly true. She had stolen Paul's title—it was his, not hers. She had stolen his money, his lands, his jewels, his possessions; they were all his, not hers—she had stolen them. Then came to her mind the solemn words of that brief commandment, "Thou shalt not steal." Had any one broken that commandment more terribly than she had done? As she stood, her white fingers playing with the rich scarlet blossoms of an Indian plant, a sudden thought came to her.

"Why not own the truth? Why not free herself from this miserable load of sin and treachery that darkened her life and made her wretched? Why not free her soul from its bondage, her heart from its weight of unutterable sorrow? Why not repent of her sin before Heaven, and give back to Paul Flemyng that which was most justly his?"

The very thought of this was a relief to her. Confess it all—give back that which was another's and not hers—free herself from this intolerable shame and anguish—win for herself again the sweet hope of heaven—ah, if she would but do all this!

Could she give up this luxury and magnificence to which she had no title? No, she could not; and with the stain of her sin still deeper on her soul, she went out from among the flowers.

CHAPTER XL.

Monsieur Dudevant had made for himself a great reputation as an artist; his portraits were like life, every one said; and so Monsieur Dudevant had always more work on hand than it was at all likely he could accomplish. It was owing to this pressure of business that the commission given to him long ago by Captain Paul Flemyng was still unexecuted—the commission of copying the portrait of Paul's mother which for so many years had hung in the late Earl of Charnleigh's room.

Leonie would insist upon Paul's accepting the original, but he said "No," he seemed to have some superstitious feeling about the gift. He was grateful to be allowed to have a copy of it, but he never seemed to like the idea of taking it from the place which the late earl's meditations had made sacred. He wrote to Monsieur Dudevant, who placed his name upon the list requiring early attention, and promised to write when his turn came. It was now that the artist wrote saying that if the picture was sent at once he would attend to it.

Captain Flemyng had been summoned on military business to Weldon, where he was expected to remain for some days. He went over himself to Crown Leighton, and most carefully packed the picture. It was sent to Lady Charnleigh, in London, as she had promised to select a new frame for it.

The case containing the picture arrived one morning when the countess was preparing to attend a royal garden party. She looked superbly beautiful in her cloud-like dress of lace and tulle, white, with the faintest soupcon of blue. Her brilliant face was flushed with animation. She was at the pinnacle of glory. She had received a royal invitation, and she knew that there would be few present at that party more admired than herself.

"To think that I should receive an invitation from a queen?" she said to herself. "I, who three years since was insulted by servants and despised by schoolgirls—I am invited by the queen of the greatest country in the world. I wonder if her Majesty will have leisure to speak to me, and, if so, I wonder what she will say."

She had been more than usually solicitous about this party.

"Ethel," she said to Miss Dacre, "you have such superb taste in dress, design something for me more elegant than has yet been seen."

And Miss Dacre did as she was requested, the result being something exquisite.

"Are you satisfied with me?" asked Leonie, simply as a child, when the carriage was announced.

Ethel Dacre, with a sudden warm impulse, kissed the lovely face.

"You look," she said, "just as though you had come out of a white cloud, you are so fairy-like. I hope you will enjoy yourself very much, Lady Charnleigh."

"There is not much fear of that," returned Leonie, with a light laugh.

They remembered that day afterward as the last of her bright, brilliant life. She had never looked so lovely, she had never been so greatly admired. The light, ethereal style of dress suited her to perfection, the light, fairy-like hat was like a crown on the golden head, the clouds of rich white lace fell gracefully round the perfect figure, and the exquisite lace seemed to rise from them like a blossom from pale leaves.

She had never been so much admired. People said to each other afterward how kindly the royal lady had spoken to the beautiful Countess; princes, dukes, and embassadors paid homage to her. She was queen by right of her beauty and grace. Wherever a little group of the most eminent men of the day were gathered together, there in the midst was Lady Charnleight to be seen.

On that day, too—the last of her brilliant reign—she excelled herself in wit and repartee. Her bon mots were repeated on all sides. Great men went away from her smiling, and saying to themselves that Lady Charnleigh was peerless in wit as in beauty. She had never been so successful in society as on this day, which was, in some respects, to be her last. Royal princesses were most gracious to her; and one, attracted by her fair face and winsome manner, seemed to have conceived a sudden friendship for her.

Amidst all the homage and adulation, while she was the object of general observation, the quaen of the fete, the most admired, while her heart beat high in triumph, while princes bent before her, Leonie was outwardly calm and self-possessed. The sun shone bright, flowers bloomed, fair faces smiled around her; the whole scene was one of splendor and beauty; but the still, small voice she could never stifle made itself heard. She, welcomed by royal lips, flattered by princes, crowned with her own beauty and grace—she was, after all, "a thief."

If they had known it, those great and noble ones who smiled upon her—if they had known that she had robbed a loyal man of his estate and his money, there would have been small mercy for her, their flattering lips would have told another tale.

Once or twice during those sunny, brilliant hours, when she was more quiet, and had fewer people around her, it seemed to her that, far above the sound of the music, the silvery laughter, the murmur of conversation, she heard the hiss of the word "thief."

Thief! What would they think of her if they knew? How they would shrink from her! All her beauty, her wit, her grace, would fail to charm them. She would be scorned, depised—an outcast. Why, her proper place was a felon's dock, and not the grounds of a good and mighty queen.

Then the dark thoughts were all dispelled; a prince was talking to her, and she read admiration in his eyes. He laughed at her wit, he enjoyed himself, and again the spirit of vanity reigned conqueror within. There had never been a greater social success than this of Lady Charnleigh's. As she looked round, feeling herself queen of that brilliant throng, she said to herself:

"It is worth it all. My gifts were given to me that I might reign. They would all have been lost had I remained a poor, obscure governess. Why should I give up that which I know how to hold so well?"

She drove home with the sound of homage and adulation in her ears, triumphant and successful. Ethel Dacre had never seen her in higher spirits.

"There is no need to ask if you have enjoyed yourself, Lady Charnleigh."

"No, indeed, Ethel; I have laughed and talked without ceasing."

"You must be tired," said Ethel.

"No, I am not tired. Of what use is it to be tired? I am going to Lady Bagshawe's concert, and after that to the Countess of Arlington's ball."

Ethel raised her eyes in wonder.

"How you live through it puzzles me."

"How I should live without it would puzzle me still more. Are you going with me to the concert?"

"Yes, I will go. Lady Charnleigh, that picture of Captain Flemyng's has arrived, and he has sent me a note, asking me, if you are too busy, to attend to it. He wants the picture very carefully removed from the frame and sent to Monsieur Dudevant. Will you do it, or shall I?"

"Do it yourself, by all means, Ethel, if you will. I have neither skill nor patience to be careful over anything."

Miss Dacre was only too delighted. What would please her more than to do anything for Paul? To attend to this request of his was a great happiness to her.

"I will begin at once," she said.

"You had better get one of the servants to help you to take the picture from the frame, Ethel," observed Leonie; "those white hands of yours will never manage it."

"I should not like a servant's hands to touch it," said Ethel, eagerly; "neither, I am sure, would Captain Flemyng."

Leonie laughed, and the laugh sounded harsh and unnatural.

"I am amused in many respects, Ethel," she remarked. "You are so much like Paul. I should never have thought of such a thing. Keep all profane hands from it, my dear, by all means."

Miss Dacre went away to attend to her commission, leaving the countess alone. The laugh died from her lips as Ethel closed the door.

"I wish I were like her!" she cried, passionately. "I wish to heaven that I were only one-half so good!"

A man-servant carried the packing-case into the morning-room, and removed the heavy outer covering.

"Do not touch the picture," said Miss Dacre. "I will attend to it myself."

She waited until the man had left the room. Some delicate, womanly, graceful feeling led her to take her first look at this picture alone. It was Paul's mother, and perhaps Ethel guessed how dearly Paul had been loved and cared for. She withdrew the paper that hid the portrait, and gazed long at the sad, beautiful face, so like Paul's own.

"Does she know how much I love him?" said the girl to herself. "Does she know that all my life is dark and dreary to me, because he does not care for me?"

She looked long and sadly at the beautiful face, wondering to herself what was the secret of that life, why the picture had hung in the Earl's room, and why he had loved it better than he had loved any living woman. Then she carefully took the back from the frame, and as she did so it struck her how very loosely it had been placed there—it seemed as though the back had been removed before.

Then she took out the picture, and as she did so a folded paper that had been placed between the back of the frame and the portrait fell out. At first she took no notice of it, thinking it had been placed there to protect the canvas, but, her eyes falling carelessly on it, she saw that it was covered with writing which was yellow with age. She laid the picture down very carefully and took up the paper. She opened it and read it, then paused and read it again; her face grew very white as she did so, her eyes filled with surprise and dread, her lips trembled.

"What does it mean?" said Ethel Dacre. "It frightens me—what does it mean?"

CHAPTER XLI.

It was a small, square paper, written closely over, yellow with age and worn at the edges, which had fallen from the portrait of Paul Flemyng's mother. Not one detail escaped the keen, wondering eyes bent upon it. Ethel Dacre had read and re-read the letter, her wonder growing greater each time. It was addressed to Captain Fleming, and these were the words that filled her with such unutterable astonishment.

"My Dear Paul—You will perhaps wonder that, from all those who have equal claims upon me, I have chosen you as my heir. It is not because you are my nearest of kin—there is one nearer than yourself. It is because I loved your mother, Paul. All words are weak to tell you how dearly I loved her. Fraud and treachery parted us when we were young, and since then I have loved no other woman—no other face has ever charmed me, no other voice has made music in my ears. I have been true to her in life, and I shall be true to her in death; so, I have left you all that I have in this world, because I loved your mother—loved and lost her. You will be a rich man, a great and powerful man; but always remember that your wealth, your rank, and your position come from your mother, not from me. You must be grateful to her, not to me. I have no particular wishes to leave with you; nothing has interested me much since your mother died. Her picture hangs in my room, and no day passes without my looking at it. As age creeps on me, I like to sit and gaze at it, to imagine to myself how the face I have loved so well looks among the angels in heaven, and to wonder if, when I am dying, that same sweet face will be by my side.

"The whim seizes me to-day to write this and place it in your mother's picture. If you never find the letter it will not matter; but I have a belief that, when you—my heir—come 'home,' there will be a new and handsome frame wanted for the picture, and that it will be taken from the quiet room where I have spent so many hours, and put in a place of honor, as befits the portrait of the mother of the heir. Then you will meet with this, and you will know that the 'morose old earl,' as they called me, spent his time in faithfully loving one woman, and also that you owe all you have to your mother, and not to me. Good-by, and Heaven bless you, Paul Flemyng. You will be Earl of Charnleigh when you read this. May heaven grant that you may have a happier love and a happier life than mine!

ULRIC CHARNLEIGH."

Ethel Dacre stood perfectly still with the letter in her hand. What did it mean? The late earl wrote as though he had left a will, which was in favor of Captain Flemyng. If so, where was it? Why had it not been found? She was almost stupefied with the disclosure—Paul the true heir, and not Leonie?

Where was the will? Her thoughts were all in a whirl of confusion. She seemed almost incapable of forming lucid ideas. Then she remembered what Captain Flemyng had told her—that they had sought "high and low" for a will, but could not find one. It was in consequence of this failure that the case came before the law courts, and Leonie Rayner was declared next of kin. Had any will been found, of course its instructions would have been carried out.

Could it be that Ulric, Lord Charnleigh, had intended to make a will and had died without doing so! Even in that case Paul was the rightful heir. Leonie would admit this, and of course, when she had read the letter give up all to him.

She turned to leave the room, taking the letter with her, but she found that her limbs trembled so violently that she would have fallen if she proceeded just then. She was obliged to rest herself and still the beating of her heart. Presently she would go to Leonie, and show her what she had found.

Paul would be master of Crown Leighton after all! To Ethel—so purely, so strictly honorable—there came no doubt of what Leonie would do. She knew that, if she herself were placed in a similar position, she would at once give up all she had—she would absolutely refuse to keep possession of what it was never intended should be hers.

That Leonie would offer the least opposition never occurred to Ethel. She did not know how love of money and of power, how pride of rank and position could corrode even the noblest of natures.

Then, as she went up the broad staircase of that superb mansion, it suddenly occurred to her that it would be very hard for Leonie to renounce all this state and splendor. Hard, indeed; but then at the call of honor people should be willing to lay down their lives even. She inquired were Lady Charnleigh was, and Florette told her that she was in her own room. Ethel went thither.

EARNING A "JOB."

How a Man Who Minded His Own Business Secured Employment.

"It's an old story, boys," said the speaker, "but it may suggest an idea in these hard times, when so many men are out of work, and rich men who would like to help them do not know how to go about it. Stephen Girard, the philanthropist, was a man who admired industry as strongly as he detested laziness. Early one morning, while the millionaire was walking around the square, near his residence, a man named John Smith, who had worked on Girard's fine buildings as a laborer, applied to him for assistance.

"'Assistance—work—ha? You want to work?'

"'Yes, sir; it's a long time since I've had anything to do.'

"'Very well, I shall give you some. You see dem stone yondar?'

"'Yes, sir.'

"'Very well; you shall fetch and put them in this place. You see?'

"'Yes, sir.'

"'And when you done, come to me at my bank.'

"Smith diligently performed his task, which he accomplished about 1 o'clock, when he repaired to Mr. Girard and informed him that it was finished, at the same time asking him if he would not give him something more to do.

"'Ah, ha! oui. You want more work? Very well; you shall go place dem stone where you got him. Understandez? You take him back.'

"Away went Smith to his work. He finished putting the stones back by sunset, and then called on Mr. Girard for his pay.

"'Ah, ha! you all finish?'

"'Yes, sir.'

"Very well. How much money shall I give you?'

"'One dollar, sir.'

"'Dat is honest. You take no advantage. Dare is your dollar.'

"'Can I do anything else for you, sir?'

"'Oui. Come here when you get up to-morrow. You shall have some work.'

"Next morning, on calling, Smith was not a little astonished when told that he must 'take dem stone back again,' nor was his astonishment diminished when the order was repeated for the fourth and last time. However, he was one of that philosophic kind of persons who mind their own business, and he went on with his job with all the apparent indifference imaginable. When he called on Mr. Girard in the evening and informed him that the stones 'were as they were,' he was saluted in the most cordial manner by the eccentric Frenchman.

"'Ah, Monsieur Smith, you shall be my man. You mind your own business; you do what is told you; you ask no questions; you no interfere. You shall work for me.'

"Thereafter the man was attached to Girard's service for years, and later became a very wealthy man—his first start in the world arising from the fact that he obeyed orders and minded his own business.

Lepers at Large.

Lepers are very plentiful on the island of Jamaica in the West Indies. They mix with the people without let or hindrance, plying all manners of trades and vocations, even to selling fruits and cakes on the public streets and keeping butcher shops and bakeries. The government has provided a leper hospital at Spanish Town, which ordinarily shelters a hundred or more lepers. But there is no restriction on their coming and going as they please. Good care and treatment is provided for them, and as is the nature of the average Jamaican negro, they are well pleased to have some one provide for them, and thus enable them to live without work and care. But when they take a notion to go to see their friends, or to visit Kingston to see the sights, they simply go, and none hinders them. The physicians and thoughtful people of the island periodically try to secure some proper treatment of the very serious leper question, but humanity's prevailing type in the tropics is easy going, and nothing is done.

M. H. DE YOUNG.

The Director General of the Midwinter Fair at San Francisco.

The opening of the California Midwinter Fair, the building of which is typical of the enterprise of the Golden State, makes pertinent a brief biography of its Director General, M. H. de Young, whose portrait is shown on this page, and who is an excellent type of the energetic Californian. He is one of the foremost citizens of the State, and is known in the newspaper circles of the country as the editor and proprietor of the San Francisco Chronicle.

Born in St. Louis, in 1848, he went to California with his parents when a mere boy. With his brother Charles, he learned the printer's trade, and before he was 16 years old knew all about the mechanical work of a newspaper, such as setting type, handling presses and making up of mail. When 17 years old he and his brother started a little advertising sheet in San Francisco called the Dramatic Chronicle. The trials that always beset a journal during its early days were not absent in this case, but after many struggles success came to the brothers and the advertising sheet was transformed into a daily. Soon after, Charles died, and since then Mr. de Young has been sole proprietor of the paper, meeting with marvelous success. He is President of the International League of Press Clubs.

Mr. de Young is connected with many public enterprises, is a successful real-estate owner and investor, and a politician noted for his shrewdness. He was California's representative on the World's Fair Commission and was a member of the Board of Control.

HUMANITARIANISM MISCARRIES

The Mannlicher Rifle Is a Most Murderous Instead of Fierceful Weapon.

It has been said, says the San Francisco Argonaut, that the modern small bullet is a most humanitarian invention, inasmuch as it does not produce such an extensive destruction of tissue on entering the body as the large, heavy missile of the near past. But this is a most absurd assumption. The Lebel pattern of firearms is that now generally employed in the infantry forces of the German, French and English armies, all using the Schwalb smokeless powder. The Roumanian army has lately adopted the Mannlicher rifle, which it appears from the extensive experiments of Demosthenes is the most powerful, the lightest, and the most accurate of all. Its destructive energy is something too great to contemplate. One-half the volume of Schwalb's powder possesses more than double the projecting power of the older kinds. It enables one to make accurate aim. Being thus light and concentrated in potency, the soldier going into action can carry comfortably in his cartouch nearly four times as many cartridges as in former times. With the breech-loading, revolving rifle it is estimated that from twenty to forty accurate shots can be fired in a minute. Demosthenes placed three cadavers in a standing position, with their clothes on, from one to two centimetres apart. They were then fired at with this weapon at a distance of a thousand metres, or about half a mile, with the result that the bullet, when it was not arrested by a bone, passed completely through the first two bodies. At five hundred metres it tore completely through all the bodies in most cases. In all, it went through the first two in every instance, doing great destruction to the osseous structures. His experimental work was extended to the living animal, a large number of horses having been thus sacrificed. The compound action which the peculiar bore of the rifle imparts to the missile is such that, when it strikes, it so rotates and revolves on itself that it makes a very large wound. If the greater number of horses hit at three-quarters of a mile—when the bullet entered any of the cavities—death frequently was instantaneous through hemorrhage. At twelve hundred metres, or two-thirds of a mile, wounds inflicted by this missile were mortal, the ball passing through several coils of the intestine, whether filled or empty, and extensively lacerating any of the viscera that it came in contact with. Hence the field hospital must be placed at a great distance in the rear, as the zone of danger is everywhere within three thousand five hundred to four thousand metres, and it will be a serious affair to remove with celerity a great number of wounded. From all of which it is curious to know from what side any one can regard the Lebel or Mannlicher musket in its effects as "humanitarian."

Wave Caused by an Earthquake.

The biggest solitary wave ever known was that caused by the Peruvian earthquake of Aug. 13, 1868. In no other instance, we are assured, has it been known that a well-marked wave of enormous proportions has been propagated over the largest ocean tract of the globe by an earthquake whose action has been limited to a relatively small region not situated in the center, but on one side of the wide area traveled by the wave. At Arica it was fifty feet high and enveloped the town, carrying two warships nearly a mile beyond the railway to the north of the town. The single sea traveled northward and westward. Its height at San Pedro, in California, was sixty feet. It inundated the smaller members of the Sandwich group, 6,300 miles away, and reached Yokohama, in Japan, in the early hours of the morning, after taking in New Zealand on the way. It spent itself finally in the South Atlantic, having traversed nearly the whole globe.—Ashton Reporter.

ONLY TWO EVER FOUND.

A Rare Insect Which Devours the Leaves of Books.

One of the rarest insects is the book worm, a creature hated by the lover of books, for it eats the paper of which they are composed, boring through it in every direction. But two specimens of this curious insect's work have ever been discovered in this country, one in a private library at Philadelphia, the other more recently in New York. This second was a copy of Seneca published in London in 1675 and now owned by W. E. Benjamin, and in the book two worms were discovered. When found the worm was motionless. Protruding over the edge of the leaves and to the tail of the worm was a conical cocoon. One worm began at the end of Seneca to eat forward, while the other began at the front and worked toward the end.

The worm eating in the front of the book was about three-eighths of an inch long and one-eighth of an inch in diameter. Its head ended bluntly, while its tail tapered to a sharp point. It was the color of water mixed with oatmeal. Being disturbed by one of the many who saw it, the cocoon was torn from the paper. The worm raised itself suddenly, but almost instantly resumed its formed position, deep in the pages.

When the cocoon was examined under a microscope it appeared to have six legs or cases, and a white medium line, barely perceptible, on its under side. At the end from which the worm had emerged were two fine horns, thinner than silk thread. There were five rings around the tail. The structure of the shell was so thin that one could easily see through it. No shell was found with the worm in the back of the book. On the third day one of the worms died. The other gave up the task of consuming the "Seneca" two days later.

At Small Cost.

Matches seem to be beyond the need of improvement, but it has lately been proposed to substitute for the ordinary article a novel kind of paper arrangement described as resembling in its general construction the coiled tape measure used by tailors. The coil thus employed is a roll of paraffine paper inclosed in a metallic case, one end of the paper projecting after the manner of the tape measure, and at regular intervals on the paper are small points covered with an igniting substance. In practice one has only to give the end of the paper a smart pull, bringing the igniting point in contact with a small steel plate, and a light is struck which burns slowly and evenly, and, on the roll being thus exhausted from use, a fresh one can be inserted in its place. Matches of this description can be manufactured with great rapidity and at very small cost.

Copper Coating.

A new method of giving ships' bottoms a coating of copper, has, it is said, been lately tried at New York with success. The method employed is as follows: The vessel is put into dock and the entire hull is surrounded at the water line by a bag made of watertight canvas supported by a net work of wire; in the bath so formed is placed a quantity of sulphate of copper solution; and metallic copper is deposited from this solution upon the ship's plates by means of the electric current generated by a dynamo machine.

THE NATION'S SOLONS.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed and Acted Upon.

Doings of Congress.

In the House Wednesday the day was spent in an attempt to secure a vote on the seigniorage bill. No opposition has developed in the Senate to the Chicago appointments. General Joe Shelby was confirmed as Marshal for the Western Missouri District, opposition being turned by a joke. Rumored retirement of Senator Mills from the Finance Committee led to an interesting tariff discussion in the Senate. Senator Morgan's Hawaiian report was adopted by Republican votes in the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The House held a disorderly session Thursday. Members arrested to secure a quorum threaten legal proceedings. A bill to give effect to the Paris tribunal findings in the Behring Sea case was presented. Pursuing custom, Washington's farewell address was read in the Senate. Mr. Martin was selected to carry out the ceremony.

Members of the House under arrest were discharged Friday, but Mr. Bland was unable to force a vote on the seigniorage bill. He was considerably ruffled, and "Anarchists" and "revolutionists" were some of the terms applied to obstructionists by him. House Democrats will in caucus consider a rule by which members may be forced to vote to make a quorum. Subcommittee of the Senate finance committee is said to have reached an agreement on the tariff bill.

Saturday's session of the House was brief and devoid of interest. For over two hours roll-call followed roll-call, the opponents of the seigniorage bill throwing aside all pretense of not filibustering and boldly injecting motions to take a recess and to adjourn in order to prevent a vote on Mr. Bland's motion. Speaker Crisp, who had been indisposed, was back at his post. The galleries were thronged with spectators. After the reading of the journal, at the request of Mr. Grosvenor, Ohio, the time for paying tribute to the memory of Representative Enochs of Ohio was postponed from March 3 to March 17. Mr. Reed took the helm. He moved that the House take a recess for two hours, and afterward modified it to 10 o'clock Monday morning. Mr. Bland shouted so as to be heard over the confusion that prevailed something about filibuster and bonds. The motion was defeated on a rising vote. Mr. Reed made the point of no quorum, whereupon Mr. Bland moved a call of the House. The call developed the presence of 258 members. Mr. Bland then moved that all leaves of absence granted except for sickness be revoked, but upon the statement of the speaker that there were none such he withdrew his motion, and the vote occurred on Mr. Reed's motion for a recess until 10 o'clock Monday. As there was still a disposition to filibuster Mr. Bland demanded the yeas and nays. Mr. Reed's motion was lost, 27 to 138. Mr. Bland, rising in his place, shouted: "It is quite evident that the bondholders have control over this country and I therefore move that the House adjourn." Without division it was carried.

The proceedings in the House on Monday were full of exciting incidents over the Bland seigniorage bill. There was a good attendance both on the floor and in the galleries. Immediately after the reading of the journal, Mr. Hatch, Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, stated that his committee claimed jurisdiction over the anti-options bill, which had been referred by the Speaker to the Ways and Means Committee, and he moved that it be referred to the Agricultural Committee. Mr. Hatch's motion was carried. Mr. Boutelle, as a privileged question, then had read a long resolution expressing it as the sense of the House that Mr. Willis should be recalled from Hawaii. The battle over the silver bill was then resumed. After speeches by Representatives Pence, Patterson, Fithian, Tracey, Bland, and Neill came a row between Mr. Pence and several gentlemen whom he attacked. Mr. Pence was called to order and the language excepted to was read, after which he was allowed to explain. His explanation did not satisfy, and the House voted by 60 to 30 not to permit him to proceed. The Senate held a short session. Mr. Morgan, Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, presented the report on the Hawaiian investigation, and Mr. Frye gave notice that he would address the Senate on that subject. The Senator passed the joint resolution providing for the appointment of a commission to the Antwerp International Exposition, and at 12:37 went into executive session. At 1:20 the Senate adjourned.

New Jersey's Governor Has a "Snap."

New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania are the three States in the Union that pay their Governors $10,000. Although next-door neighbors these States present a vast difference upon comparison. New Jersey has less than a million and a half population. New York 6,000,000, Pennsylvania 5,000,000. The latter State is five times as big as New Jersey. Ohio pays her Governor $8,000 and has three times as great a population, and is five times as large as New Jersey. Massachusetts pays $5,000, has twice the number of people and is about the same size. These States all enjoy the continuous service of their executive. In New Jersey the entire work of the State is concentrated in one day. If you want to see the Governor of New Jersey at the State House you must go there on Tuesday and be there between the hours of 10 and 4. The other six days in the week he takes his ease in his home. It is only in legislative times when the Governor is at his office more than five hours a week.

Another Canal Scheme.

The story comes, by the roundabout way of Tacoma, of the discovery of a point on the Central American isthmus where the tides of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans approach within eighteen miles of each other. The alleged discoverer of the hitherto unsuspected geographical conditions is said to have brought back with him from his explorations not only charts and drawings, but estimates for an ocean-level ship canal across the isthmus. The approach of the oceans, it is represented, is due to fissures in the separating land and chasms in the mountain chain.

It Suited the Occasion.

A young Swede was recently scalded to death by the explosion of a boiler in Oregon. As the young fellow had been very popular among his associates, a committee was appointed to erect a small monument over his grave. After considerable hard work the committee produced a stone with the following inscription:

"Sacred to the memory of our esteemed friend, Lars Larson."

Sick-Room Don'ts

DON'T let stale flowers remain in a sick chamber.

DON'T jar the bed by leaning or sitting upon it. This is unpleasant to one ill and nervous.

DON'T ask a convalescent if he would like this or that to drink, but prepare the delicacies and present them in a tempting way.

DON'T be unmindful of yourself if you are in the responsible position of nurse. To do faithful work you must have proper food and stated hours of rest.

CANNOT FALL FAR.

In Vienna They Value Servant Girls Too Highly to Break Them.

Whether it is that the parlor maids of Vienna suffer more from vertigo that those in any other city, whether they've lighter heads and heavier heels than the servant girls of other places, or whether it is that window cleaning is more dangerous in Vienna than elsewhere, certain it is that the lady window-cleanser is better protected there than in any other quarter of the globe, says an exchange.

The servant girl in the capital of Austria has an attachment—not necessarily of the amatory kind—but compulsorily of the cordage kind. She must not mount the window-sill without her belt and a rope connection with the building, so that should she be overcome by any feeling whatsoever while cleaning the window and lose her head—that is to say, her balance—she can fall only the short length of the rope and will remain suspended between heaven and earth, like Mohammed's coffin—only a much more attractive object—until succor arrives.

There have been no appalling accident of this kind in New York City, but it seems that in London the window-cleaning maids will persist in tumbling into the street. On this subject a correspondent writes from Vienna as follows:

"I notice that Londoners are concerned at present over the dangers incurred in window-cleaning. As a rule the Vienna Stubenmaedl—I will not call her Mary Ann—possesses a neat little figure and oftener than otherwise a pretty face, but I do not believe it is for these reasons alone that the policemen have so interested themselves in her welfare as to compel every householder to possess a sicherheitsguertel or safety-girdle for her use while window-cleaning. A few months ago a parlor maid fell from a fourth-story window-sill and from her hard pavement bed she was removed to our big general hospital. She recovered sufficiently to show that she would never be of use again for hard service, and, as it was proved by the police authorities that the lady of the house had provided no safety girdle, a heavy fine was imposed. An allowance—if I mistake not—of 10 shillings weekly during the lifetime of the injured parlor maid has also to be paid."

Proper Artificial Heat.

In providing ourselves with artificial warmth, it is not sufficient to regulate the amount according to our personal feelings. Other things must be considered. For example, persons in a crowded hall will variously criticise the heating of the room. To some it will be suffocating; others will make objections if there is anywhere an opening through which fresh air may be admitted to the room.

These idiosyncrasies must be attributed partly, if not wholly, to the effect of "crowd poison" upon different systems. To persons in a weakened condition, an impure atmosphere may be just as agreeable as one which is overheated; and as they experience no symptoms of nervousness or uneasiness, they cannot appreciate the necessity for a new supply of air. On the other hand, persons of robust natures, not able to withstand the lack of the customary supply of oxygen, fume, perspire, and exclaim about "the terrible heat of the place."

Heat, pure and simple, and within bounds, should never be obnoxious to any one. The harvester laboring under the hot sun, perspires freely, and may safely be said to feel the heat somewhat. Yet he does not appear to lose strength under its influence. Some would say that it might be good for many weakened persons if their systems could enjoy the similar advantages of a quicker circulation without prostration.

In providing artificial heat we should remember two important things—that it should be as pure as we can make it, and that it should never be at the expense of the atmosphere that immediately surrounds it.

With these facts in mind, we shall be led to give our sanction preferably to the old-fashioned fire-place, which creates a continual current up the chimney, compelling a change of old air for new; and secondly to the modern improved furnace, which passes into the room fresh air from the outside of the building—air which is changed from cold to hot in passing through the heater.

Especially to be deplored is the heating by any of the various gas appliances, as in this operation not only is no fresh oxygen supplied, but that already in the room is drawn upon to sustain combustion.

It is mistaken economy that refuses the admittance of fresh air because of the expense necessary to heat it.

Arranging Home Tableaux.

To get to the actual working details the first thing to do is to select your room, writes Edith Townsend Everett in an article on "Help in Arranging Tableaux" in the Ladies' Home Journal. One that connects by folding doors with the one to serve as auditorium is the best to chose. Let the entire space occupied by the doors be filled in with black gauze stretched across the opening, and the foot and top lights placed behind it. This arrangement produces the effect of a thin mist, light enough to be easily seen through, and yet softening the rugged outlines and bringing out the points of the picture at the back with a clearness that is wonderfull. This gauze is one of the most important features in tableaux, and should no sooner be disregarded than arrangement of the stage. Of course my readers understand that I am dealing only with such an entertainment as can be given in either a city drawing-room or the spacious rooms of a country mansion. Very few people, no matter how much they may enjoy theatricals and tableaux, can afford to set apart a room or hall for such purposes, consequently preparations must be made whenever any such festivities are contemplated.

Her Good Luck Lounge.

A Philadelphia woman has what she calls her "good luck lounge." It is simply a wide, soft couch piled with comfortable pillows; but the power of the thing as a mascot is in the number of pillows. There are thirteen.

THE AUBURN COURIER

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

THURSDAY.....MARCH 22, 1894.

McKINLEY advocates the claim that a high tariff keeps out foreign goods. Yet it is well known that unless goods come into this country, none will go out. In other words, take it year in and year out, the imports necessarily balance the exports. If we won't buy of others they wont buy of us. See how the amount of wheat sent abroad has diminished since the McKinley bill went into effect, and see how this stoppage in sales sent the price down. Farmers are beginning to see into this.

PENSION expenses are growing smaller. About 17,000 veterans answered to the final roll-call last year, and of course a decrease will continue each year. Anyone who casts a glance over the veterans he meets day by day, will see plain indications that the hardships of service and the advancing years are doing their work. We do not believe anyone begrudges the real soldier all he gets as pension. Another reason why pension expenses will decrease is that most of the arrearage, or back pensions have been paid. We see that the estimate for the coming year is about twenty millions less than for last year.

The Fee and Salary Law.

As noted in the last COURIER, the new salary law has been tested in the supreme court, and pronounced constitutional as to sheriff. It is likely it will also stand as to the other officers. Here is the list of salaries as they will stand in DeKalb and Steuben counties:

Clerk, $2,400; auditor, $2,600; recorder, $1,450; treasurer, $2,000; sheriff, $2,200. Steuben: Clerk, $1,750; auditor, $1,900; recorder, $1,150; treasurer, $1,600; sheriff, $1,600.

CYCLING NEWS.

"Phenomenal as has been the development in the use of the bicycle in this country during the last few years," says the New York Tribune, "its development in Europe has been even more phenomenal. This has been largely because the roads of the old world are so much superior to the American roads. As a result, the bicycle is in almost universal use, not merely as a means of recreation, health and amusement, but for prolonged tours over the country; and in this country, as in Europe, as roads become better, it is evident that it is to become one of the most powerful forces of social life. Young men without the bicycle would have only the vaguest idea of the region in which they live, now become intimately acquainted with it. They enlarge their circle of acquaintances and friends. All these are advantages that must give cycling a permanent place in modern civilization. It is, moreover, a promoter of temperance. The man who rides a wheel must have a clear head. Altogether, the rapidly growing popularity of the bicycle in this country is to be heartily commended. If it did nothing except to stimulate an interest in good roads, which it is doing, it would deserve encouragement.

Surprise Party.

A very pleasant surprise was given Miss Carrie B. Ensley Tuesday evening, Feb. 13, by her sisters, in honor of her twenty-second birthday. The evening was spent in cards, games, etc. A very dainty lunch was served at 10:30. Those present were: Misses Wanda Walter, Nora Helmuth, Maud and Rhoda Housel, Carrie, Lydia and Ina Ensley, Messrs. Ed. Treesh of Garrett, Ed. Hilkert of Swan, Jesse Cornell, Frank Feagler, Chris. Miller, Charley Helmuth, Delbert Hartle, Mr. and Mrs. Clifton Walter and Mr. and Mrs. Emmett Ensley. Many others were kept away on account of the heavy snow. The young people departed for their homes at 12:30, wishing Miss Ensley many more such happy birthday events.

ADAM SCHLOSS & CO., [illegible]

THE DEETERS MURDER TRIAL.

has stolen it. Said he had lost some money in the bank at Auburn.

Thomas Harwood testified he had met Deeters in the road Saturday before the tragedy, spoke to him, but he did not answer. Seemed in deep thought.

SATURDAY.

Wm. Campbell had worked under Deeters when the latter was supervisor. He was a pleasant man to work under. Sam's new house is as good as any about there, is modern with bay windows, etc. He took good care of his mother and things at her home.

W. C. McKeller, of Kendallville, was coming home with several others, all on bicycles. Helped carry Bachtel home. Left bicycles east of the house. Carried Bachtel by Deeters' house. He sat in door, but said nothing. Barn was burning at the time. Abels, who was with McKeller, went back to get the bicycles, and as he brought them past Deeters, the latter asked what he was afraid of.

Albert Cherry said that Deeters once told him they had threatened to shoot him because he did not keep up the Hamilton and Butler road. Told him this was foolishness.

Frank Bowman said Deeters told him about two years ago that he was going to get a revolver, and the first man he found prowling about would get a ball.

Wm. Smith, four miles northwest of Waterloo, said his present wife is Lovina, a sister to Sam Deeters. Thinks she shows tendency to unsound mind, but denied that Dr. Wood is to examine her and pronounce her insane so as to help Sam's cause. (Here followed a long lot of matter about the prospect that his wife would likely go insane. Then came a roughshod tilt between Barr and Shuman, the former calling Shuman "young fellow." The papers say Shuman held his own in good shape.)

MONDAY, FEB 26.

Several testified as to Deeters' good character in general, but said he sometimes appeared strange. Albert Cherry said Deeters had told him "Some people are going to shoot me if I do not fix up the Waterloo and Butler road." He sometimes thought people were prowling about the house. Wm. Smith, whose wife is a sister of Deeters, said that he received a postal from Bachtel, telling him to come at once and look after Sam as his mind was unbalanced. Smith's wife burned the postal, and has since shown signs of insanity herself. Thought Deeters' mind was wrong. Geo. Lanning was called again. Said that when Deeters called for that $600, but added $300 to it as stated before, he took a certificate for $900. On July 8, '93, Deeters came to get his money. Got $400 and had $300 left in the bank, as he had got $200 before that. August 31 he came to get the $300. I told him how matters stood with the bank, which had suspended July 11. He seemed satisfied, but went off as if dissatisfied. He was kept on the stand a long time. J. R. Lanning and Henry Lanning were on the stand and were asked about the telegraph wires that run close to Lanning's store at Mooresville and those near the Deeters house where the murders occurred. This was likely with a view to see if the buzzing of the wires was not what Sam heard when he spoke of "voices," "ear trumpets," etc.

TUESDAY.

G. L. Lanning testified that Deeters made his deposit in the Davis bank Dec. 31, '91. Deeters came in Dec. 12, '92, and wanted his money, $600, and when Lanning counted the money out, Deeters said, "I see you have the money yet. I have $300 more I will leave with you," and he did so, not taking up his money already deposited. But while talking, Deeters would say, "Be careful, they have those ear trumpets." The prosecution called attention to the telephone in the Davis bank in connection with the remarks about "ear trumpets." Other witnesses testified to matters already given. Mary Deeters, the defendant's mother, testified, but was not asked much as to the shooting. She testified as to Sam's condition, and said he burned the letter he received from G. L. Lanning, which said the bank had not been robbed. The defense has examined about 25 witnesses, and there will be many expert witnesses called, all of which will take a good deal of time. Old Mrs. Deeters and Sam's two sisters have not testified fully, and we believe Mrs. Bachtel has not. The case will hardly be finished next week. Judge Powers will adjourn the court from Saturday noon till Monday.

The W. C. T. U. Meeting.

The W. C. T. U. held a very pleasant evening meeting on Tuesday of this week at the home of Mrs. Baldwin. A literary program had been prepared and was very much enjoyed. Some of the older members had readings, songs, etc., but it was for the little ones to claim the attention of the guests. A vocal duet was sung very nicely by —— Baker and Nellie Murphy; recitation by Vera Myers and one also by Vera Cobb, and a comic one by Master Murphy, son of William Murphy. All elicited the applause of those present. A talk by Mrs. Ehlers, subject, "The Sermon on the Mount," was enjoyed and appreciated by the guests. This was followed by prayer. A dainty lunch followed closely the literary program and was furnished by four of the members, Mrs. Baldwin, Mrs Lewis, Mrs. Cobb and Mrs Myers. Between forty and fifty were present and nearly $5.00 was the result. A number of these teas are to be given. The object for which the Union is working is the Hadley Home, an industrial school for poor and worthy girls, situated near Indianapolis, in this state.

Chairman Wilson.

[From Harper's Weekly.]

Mr. Wilson's personality is one of the most engaging in public life. He entered congress from the study of a college president. He was a young man only eighteen years old when the war of the rebellion broke out. A year before he was graduated from Columbian College in the District of Columbia. He entered the Confederate army and when the war was over he returned to Columbian College as a professor. His entrance into active life was barred by the lawyer's test oath of West Virginia, but when that was overthrown he began the practice of his chosen profession. From that time until within a few month of his first election to congress he was engaged in the practice of law and in the avocation of politics. In a few years he won distinction, for he was on the democratic electoral ticket of West Virginia in 1880. Two years afterward, on September 6th, he took up the work of president of the University of West Virginia, but on September 20th he was nominated for congress, and was elected. When his present term expires he will have been a member of the house of representatives for twelve years, and from the first he has advanced steadily to the front ranks, until now he is the democratic leader on the floor, made so by force of character and ability, and against the real preferences of the Speaker.

Whe Mr. Carlisle went into the senate Mr. Wilson had come to be recognized as the wisest, strongest and the most convincing debater on tariff questions on the democratic side of the house. He was the first choice of a large number of members of his party for the speakership, but it was early determined that only one of the revenue reform leaders should be a candidate for the office; and Mr. Mills, who had been the last chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, was selected. He was defeated by Mr. Crisp for reasons that would not have availed against Mr. Wilson. When Mr. Mills had been denied his old chairmanship, Mr. Wilson should have been chosen, but Mr. Crisp had promised the honor to Mr. Springer, and to Mr. Springer it went. When the time came for the election of speaker for the present congress, Mr. Crisp's strongest rival was Mr. Wilson; but for the sake of harmony, and for the purpose of uniting the democrats in congress on the tariff issue, Mr. Crisp was granted a second term, on condition that a sound and trusty revenue reformer should be made chairman of the Ways and means Committee. Mr. Wilson was naturally the man to whom the honor fell.

The wisdom of the choice has been abundantly demonstrated by the passage of the Wilson bill, and by its character. The enemies of the measure in the newspapers have sneered at Mr. Wilson as a professor, as if a man who has studied his subjects is therefore unfitted to deal with them. Mr. Wilson has shown that he possesses a large store of worldly wisdom; that he knows how to deal with men, for both sides of the house and men of all factions are his friends; his own party has respect for him and confidence in his prudence. That he is practical is proved by the character of his bill, as well as by his successful struggle in West Virginia against the politicians of both parties and the protected interests. He is a worthy successor of Mr. Carlisle, and, like the ex-speaker, possess the best best traits of trained English legislators, who make a learned profession of their calling. Mr. Wilson knows the literature of every question that he champions and he has the talent of adapting the experiences of the past and of other countries to the needs of the present and of this country. To his other gifts he adds that of speech in a large degree. He is a modest and an an able man, an admirable product of American institutions.

A Family History.

J. A. Sawyer has made a very valuable family record that includes his people for many generations back, dating from the time his earliest American ancestor came from England in 1639, just nineteen years after the landing of the pilgrims at Plymouth. From him, the family is traced by name and date of birth and death, down to the present time. Many interesting incidents and histories are given. One in particular, Mr. Sawyers' great-great-grandfather, was a famous Indian fighter, and there is an account of his being at work in a sawmill one day, when some Indians came and asked for "Sawyer." He knew what they were after and at once fixed a scheme to head them off and save his own life. He told them he would point out Sawyer to them as soon as he could roll that log down where he wanted it. He then got them to "help," giving each a handspike, and telling them to hold the handspikes ready to receive and stop the log when he rolled it down to them. He started it, and called out, "Here comes Sawyer." They were so taken aback that they dropped the handspikes and were crushed by the oncoming log. Several similar incidents occurred with him, but his son was of a very different nature, a very pious man, and became a famous and successful preacher, founding many churches in eastern New York as well as in adjoining parts of Vermont and Canada. It is likely there are many families who could furnish very interesting family histories, but very few take pains to do it.

Court

The regular March term begins on Monday of next week, though work proper will not begin till Wednesday, on which day a special judge will be chosen. This is done by the clerk of the court assisted by the auditor and the sheriff. The judge so chosen can then go on with the work as if he were a regularly elected officer. This appointment is necessary in this case as it was at the beginning of the last term, Judge Powers being compelled to come at Angola till the case on which he was occupied is finished. Then he can come down here and take up the work and go on with it.

The jury commissioners have made the following selections for the March term and both sets are called to come to Auburn on Monday of the following week, March 12.

Several criminals are in the lockup waiting for the regular drawing to take place this term. Among them are Wm. Timmerman and Ingersoll, two Waterloo young men who have figured in such matters before. It will be remembered they got into trouble before by burning Ab. Kelley's barn in Waterloo three years ago, for which Timmerman was sent up for two years. The are now hauled up for breaking into the Oppenheim clothing store in Waterloo, Feb. 15. A letter in the pocket of a coat they left in the store gave Timmerman away and he was caught up by the police in Chicago, who notified Sheriff Ralston. He went up to the city and found his man and from him learned that Ingersoll had probably gone down to his old stamping ground at Joliet. So the sheriff went down there and called on the sheriff of Will county to see if he knew of any such man. The sheriff did not, and told Ralston that he could not take Ingersoll without a warrant if he found him. But Ralston got a team and drove out about five miles and began to inquire. At the fourth place he found his man, who had got work of a farmer and was milking cows. The sheriff told him he might as well let the family finish the milking and come with him, which he did. There was no train back to Chicago that night and the sheriff at Joliet would not receive and keep a prisoner without a warrant, and so Ralston took his man to a hotel and slept with him. The next day they came to Chicago and from there he brought both the men here. They do not deny the crime. It is also believed they were the parties that broke into the M. E. church basement in Auburn about the middle of January, as in the letter found, the writer asks for the COURIER and Dispatch of Jan. 18, the date on which we published items about the church matter.

Teacher Licked 'Em.

District 4 in Keyser township brought a school case before 'Squire Walborn Tuesday. The teacher, Wm. Preston, had whipped four large boys and he was arrested for assault and battery. L. J. Gengler was attorney for the state and Lawyer Crumbaker, of Garrett defended the teacher. A jury was called. They were, D. Y. Husselman, Chris. Ashelman, Geo. Chapman, J. J. VanAuken, E. A. Griffin, J. W. Stringfellow, W. H. Mader, H. Cupp, J. L. Ferguson, J. W. Ferguson, Joseph Link and J. A. Sawyer. The testimony showed that the boys had become unruly and did little mean things to annoy the teacher. The jury disagreed. Four wanted to punish the teacher believing he had licked the wrong boy. The other eight thought that all the boys needed it. But parents and all others ought to know that a teacher cannot be fined for whipping a pupil in a reasonable way, with a reasonable switch. That is, the punishment must not be severe or cruel. A teacher has a legal right to enforce order and secure obedience, very much as a parent has. The law says, "A teacher may exact compliance with all reasonable demands and enforce obedience by inflicting corporal punishment in a kind and reasonable manner." In such cases, "the presumption is that he did nothing more than his duty." And "it does not follow that punishment was cruel or excessive because pain was inflicted or the skin abraded."

Where Snow is Red.

Snow is sometimes found in Polar and Alpine regions, where it lies unmelted from year to year, and the annual fall is small, colored red by the presence of innumerable small red plants. In its native state the plant consists of brilliant red globules on a gelatinous mass. Red snow was observed by the ancients, a passage in Aristotle referring to it, but it attracted little or no attention until 1760, when Saussure observed it in the Alps, and concluded that it was due to the pollen of a plant. It was also noticed by the Arctic expedition under Captain Ross on Baffin's Bay shore on a range of cliffs, the red color penetrating to a depth of twelve feet. Less frequent is a green growth on snow.—March Ladies' Home Journal.

Vick's Floral Guide, 1894.

It contains descriptions that describe, not mislead; illustrations that instruct, not exaggerate. This year it comes to us in a suit of gold. Printed in eight different colors besides black. Colored plates of Chrysanthemums, Poppies and Vegetables. On the front cover is a very exquisite bunch of Vick's New White Branching Aster, and on the back is the New Double Anemone; 112 pages filled with many new novelties of value as well as all the old leading varieties of flowers and vegetables.

We advise our friends who intend to do anything in the garden this year to consult Vick before starting operations. Send 10 cents to James Vick's Sons, Rochester, N. Y., for Vick's Guide, it costs nothing, as you can deduct the 10 cents from first order. It certainly will pay you.

A Valuable Book.

The Washington Publishing Company' 1406 G street northwest, Washington, D. C., have just published "The Show at Washington," written by two prominent Washington correspondents. This book is unique and interesting. It deals with the every-day phases of Washington life, and brings out the personal characteristics of the men who make our laws, fame and trouble at the Nation's capital. It cannot fail to entertain and inform all who desire to know what Washington life really is. Some idea of the book can be learned from the following table of contents:

White House Ways.
Around Grover's Council Board.
Sketched in the Senate.
Pat and Personal.
Angles and Curves.
Heard in the Cloak-Room.
In the Speaker's Eye.
Nine Black Bundles of Law.
Told After Adjournment.

Patriotic Song Competition.

The Dominant, one of the best musical monthlies published in this country, being desirous of stimulating the efforts to secure to the United States a patriotic song possessing the characteristics requisite to endear it to the hearts of the people, has decided to inaugurate a competition among poets and composers for that purpose. The prizes offered are as follows: For the best poem, $100; for the next best poem, $50; for the best musical setting, $100; for the next best musical setting, $50.

These prizes are the least that would secrue to the successful poet or musician as their names, through the medium of the Dominant, would immediately become household words and win an affectionate place in the hearts of their fellow citizens. The successful creator of a nation's song is a man to be envied. He exercises a power and influence superior to that of rulers and legislators. This is what led Andrew Fletcher to remark, "I care not who makes the nation's laws, if I might write its ballads." For these reasons, the money prize should not be considered the chief incentive. A higher motive must inspire the competitor's muse, viz: honor and fame.

The competition will take place as follows: Poems, open from January 1 to April 1, 1894. The musical competition will open immediately subsequent to the publication of the poems, and be continued from that date to the first day of the fourth month following.

For further particulars address, the Dominant, 228 N. Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

DeKalb Co. C. E. Meeting.

The Fifth District Christian Endeavor Union has made arrangements with S. L. Mershon, of Chicago, to furnish the Missionary Extension Course of addresses to the people of Lagrange, Steuben, Noble and DeKalb counties. These addresses have been given in several cities in Illinois, and are now being given in Indiana. Rousing missionary rallies and packed houses of enthused hearers is the result. The DeKalb county Christian Endeavor rally will be held in addition to these missionary mass meetings. St. Joe Station will entertain the first rally March 8, 1894. S. L. Mershon will deliver the address in the evening. Miss Emily Kinney, of Angola will give a talk on "Junior Christian Endeavor," and our district secretary, Joseph C. Kimmell of Ligonier, will give us a talk on the C. E. work of the Fifth District. Rev. J. O. Rose, of St. Joe, will preach a missionary sermon. Every Christian Endeavor and Missionary Society in DeKalb county is earnestly requested to send delegates. Free entertainment will be given by St. Joe Endeavors.

We are receipt of a letter from E. E. Ensley at Broughton in Paulding county Ohio, where he is station agent for the Nickel Plate road, a good position with good pay. This puts another DeKalb boy into a good place, and we congratulate him on his good fortune.

Supt. Merica received many compliments on the lecture he delivered before the St. Joe graded schools last week. St. Joe has a taste for good schools and good school work, and we might add, they appreciate the valuable assistance of a competent superintendent like Mr. Merica.

Several very cold mornings lately. Last Friday morning the mercury was reported from 4 to 10 below, and on Saturday and Sunday mornings it was about as cold. The days, however, were clear and the sun shone warm enough to melt the snow a little on the south side of the buildings.

People who send many letters would do well to get their envelopes of the printer, and have their address printed on them. They are cheaper if procured in this way, and often it saves trouble to the postal authorities. The department has sent out a request that a return card be written or printed on the envelopes.

In these cold and blustery days when work is slack and money tight, there is nothing that will give a greater return for the money expended than the Young America, made by Kessler Bros.

"The people of this vicinity insist on having Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and do not want any other," says John V. Bishop, of Portland Mills, Indiana. That is right. They know it to be superior to any other for colds, and as a preventive and cure for croup, and why should they not insist upon having it? 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

The bridge letting last week attracted a lot of bidders, but we were too much crowded to make an account of it. None of our home people got a contract, as their bids were higher than those who were successful. The entire lot went very low, much lower than ever before, but we suppose the commissioners will be cursed just the same. They never get credit for doing well.

E. R. Swetnam, of Fairfax Station, Virginia, says: "A party came forty miles to my store for Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and bought a dozen bottles. The remedy is a great favorite in this vicinity and has performed some wonderful cures here." It is intended especially for coughs, cold, croup and whooping cough and is a favorite wherever known. For sale by Robbin's & McCord.

Photos! Photos! Photos! Photos! Old people ought to have their photos; young folks will have their photos, and the babies must have their photos. In fact, everybody should have first-class photos. Then for the finest photos in the land remember J. G. Clapp the leading photographic man, who is leader in in the picture business and moulding and picture frame trade. See him if you want the best.

C. D. Knisely has sold his interest in the Gillis & Co. meat market to Mr. Gillis' brother-in-law, George Barnes, who has just returned from a residence of many years in Oregon. We understand that Mr. Barnes will locate here. Mr. Knisely does not know as yet to what line of business he will turn his attention, but an active business man like him will not remain idle long. He has made many friends since coming here, and we would like to see him remain. The new firm will be known as "Barnes & Gillis."

The indications are that house rent in Auburn will be lower the coming season, than for many years before. Rents have generally been pretty high here, owing to the demand for room to accommodate the people who come in. But since the burning of the Church Furniture factory and the failure of two others, many hands have been compelled to to seek employment elsewhere. We know of half a dozen good houses that are vacant and the owners will no doubt find it to their interest to take lower rent rather than to have them unoccupied.

We call attention to the ad. in this issue of Vaughan's Seed Store, 88 State street, Chicago. There is no more reliable establishment anywhere, at which seeds and plants may be purchased. They have an established reputation to maintain which will not permit them to take advantage of a customer in any way. Visitors at the recent Columbian Exposition will recall the handsome exhibit they made in many departments. They received twenty-eight awards, the largest number, we believe, received by any firm in horticulture. Their advertisement this week makes the onion very prominent. There is money in onions to those who will give them proper care. In addition to what may be received from the sale of onions raised, the Vaughan Seed Store offers $250 in premiums for the best crop raised from their seed. Their handsome catalogue tells all about how it is done, and gives full information in regard to all kinds of seeds and plants, including the latest novelties of value. Read the advertisement and send for the catalogue at once.

At this season of the year people are generally eating buckwheat pancakes, and this is as true with farmers as it is with townspeople. Practically all the buckwheat in use in this locality, and it is true of the entire United States, is imported, and under the McKinley law it pays a high tariff tax. Mr. Steigely, who owns the mill at Kingsbury, handles a large amount of buckwheat and buys it in Canada. He recently imported four carloads, and he informs us the tariff tax he had to pay adds just 50 cents a hundred pounds to the selling price of the flour. The people who are eating buckwheat cakes for breakfast can tell whether "the foreigner pays the tariff," or whether the consumer pays it.—Laporte Argus.

The new school house is about completed, or soon will be, but will not be used till the next school year begins, as the classes and the work of different grades are all arranged now, and it would cause some confusion to change so near the close of the year.

Mrs. John Dawson died Sunday at the home of James Hamilton in Concord township. On Monday her husband started with her body for her former home, Denver, Colo. It is a sad death. They had been married less than a year. He is a son of Mrs. Dawson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Rush.

The Beard school, or "Africa," in Richland, has a lot of school boys starting for the gallows. Recently these young hoodlums peeled about every tree on the school grounds utterly ruining them. The people of the district had planted them at considerable pains and now will have to do it all over again and then wait for the trees to grow.

Lagrange Democrat—An elk horn twenty inches long was recently found in the center of a tree on the farm of H. K. Ferrand near Colon, Mich., where it had been caught when the tree was a sapling and the wood had grown completely over it, probably two hundred years, as the tree was three feet in diameter. The horn was in a perfect state of preservation.

Ligonier Banner—It has been nearly six years since Stephen A. Powers of Angola, surprised the natives and knocked the breath out of the republican bosses by defeating R. Wes. McBride for the circuit judgeship in the district then made up of DeKalb, Steuben and Noble counties. In this county, notwithstanding the fact that the whole republican ticket was victorious, Powers had 256 more votes than McBride and in the district he had a plurality of 7, overturning a majority of about 1,000. Since that time the circuit has been changed and Judge Powers now presides over the courts in Steuben and DeKalb counties. Taking heart over the fact that the change will make it possible for a republican to be elected, several candidates are already in the field. Among them we notice the name of Joseph A. Woodhull, of Angola, and it is said that he is quietly setting up the pins for the nomination. Some years ago Woodhull was a mugwump, but he seems to have got back into the republican fold.

It was Splendid.

The Auburn Musical Club gave a splendid entertainment last Thursday evening at the Presbyterian church. The room was fairly well filled by lovers of music, but the music itself filled the room most completely. It would be difficult to say which was the most completely enjoyable, the vocal or the instrumental selections given, for all were of a high order and exquisitely rendered. Several received encores, including Mrs. Garwood's piano selections and Mr. Widney's bass solo singing. Several others were called for, but did not respond. One excellent selection, that for Dr. C. E. Nusbaum and Mr. Hastings, was for some reason omitted, to the regret of the audience. At the close, a surprise was given, by suddenly calling on Helen Ralston, to give a whistling selection. It was also a surprise to her, but she was equal to the occasion and whistled with entrancing sweetness that captured her hearers. Our people hardly know that there was a lady in Auburn who had mastered this, to them, most difficult art, and the pleasure in hearing her was all the greater. Auburn should feel proud of her musical talent and certainly the audience felt so. We do not know the names of all who are members of the club, though nearly every one sang in the choruses. But among those named in the program are: Miss Maggie Snyder, of New Era, and in Auburn, are: Marie Young, Lydia Teeters, Nettie Willis, Mrs. Rosa Shull, Mrs. D. A. Garwood, Miss Flora Hoffman, and Messrs. Scott, Hastings, Sheets, Widney, Bottenberg and Nusbaum. Dr. Buchtel gave a fine violin solo, Mrs. Garwood playing the piano accompaniment for him. He was heartily cheered, as, in fact, were the exercises all through.

Two Terrible Lessons.

Zenas Stamets who is attending medical college at Ft. Wayne, sent up a letter this week, which while we had not room for it all in our present crowded state, was still very interesting. He made a strong case against the useless habit of drink and tobacco. One case cited, was that of a fine looking man who had got drunk and crawled into a haymow where he froze both feet. He was brought to the hospital and both feet amputated. The man said it was a dear lesson in temperance. Another man came with a cancer on the tongue, caused by using tobacco. He came to have an operation, but it was not thought safe. The man must suffer a lingering death. Yet no one will stop using the filthy weed on that account.

Cures Dyspepsia.

Rebecca Wilkinson, of Brownsvalley, Ind., says: "I have been in a distressed condition for three years from nervousness, weakness of the stomach, dyspepsia and indigestion until my health was gone, I had been doctoring constantly with no relief. I bought one bottle of South American Nervine, which did me more good any $50 worth of doctoring I ever did in my life. I would advise every weakly person to use this valuable and lovely remedy: a few bottles of it has cured me completely. I consider it the grandest medicine in the world." Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottle 15 cents. Sold by Robbins & McCord.

THE habit of giving alms in money to unknown applicants at houses or on the streets is one that ought not to be encouraged. It is true there is a good deal of distress at the present time, but it is taken advantage of by persons who never have done any work, and make the temporary poverty of the industrious their excuse for begging. There are in most localities organizations for the proper distribution of charity. By giving through such organizations the money contributed will be made to reach only those who are deserving.

THE reconciliation of Emperor William with his former prime minister is the most hopeful sign we have lately seen. For nearly four years those two have been estranged, and many a time the young Emperor has needed the help and advice of the statesman whose abilities made Germany an empire, but whom he was too proud to consult. Bismarck, too, has chafed under his unnatural retirement from public service. We shall probably hear again from Bismarck whenever the threatening condition of German affairs requires his help to set things right.

PATENT COMMISSIONER SEYMOUR has under consideration the publication of lists of patents that have expired within the past few years. Such a publication will open many valuable inventions that now belong to any who desire to use them. Large enterprises keep posted as to the time patents expire, but the information ought to be made as public as possible. It is also proposed to make the patenting of articles more simple, giving one patent with as many specifications as it devolves of new ideas, instead of granting a separate patent for each idea. This will diminish the cost of getting out patents, reduce their number and make it much easier to keep track of them.

PEOPLE who notice the increasing diffusion of knowledge among young women of the humble class and the steady advance in wages commanded by good servants sometimes wonder what posterity will do for servants. The wonder is gratuitous. The tendency of mankind is to flock to the spots where life is easiest and most agreeable. The migration will go on till such places are overcrowded. Then the supply of labor will be in excess of the demand, wages will fall, and the number of competitors for each vacant place will swell. In other words, the tide which began to flow when prosperity befell this country will ebb, in consequence of the superabundance of persons who seek to share that prosperity.

NORTHWESTERN farmers are fighting a combine of threshing-machine manufacturers and operators which was formed last November. Under this combine no threshing is to be done at less than 5 cents a bushel for wheat and 3½ cents for oats. The plan of the farmers is to co-operate in each neighborhood, a number of farmers uniting in buying a machine and exchanging works in managing and running it. There will, however, be a necessity for employing some one skilled in managing the thresher and running the engine. In most eastern localities the business of threshing is overdone. So many engage in it as a rapid way to earn money that the season does not last long. By the time the machine and engine are paid for both are nearly worn out. The threshing outfit costs a good deal more than it used to do, and prices for threshing as well as the prices of grain have generally declined below paying rates.

A YOUNG and uneducated Norwegian named Edward Brekhus is astonishing the people of Tacoma by going into a trance condition and then uttering most remarkable messages. His preaching is in Norwegian, and those who can understand him say he uses language far beyond his natural powers. He has very little acquaintance with the Bible, but in his trance state he repeats whole chapters without mistake. After he comes out of the trance he does not know what he has said. The case has attracted much attention from clergymen in Washington, and they are puzzled to account for it except as a manifestation of spiritual powers like those recorded in New Testament times.

CHICAGO HERALD: Dr. John T. Nagle, of New York, has evolved the idea of a transcontinental boulevard, with terminal at New York and San Francisco. The boulevard, as proposed by the Doctor, is to be wide, fine and well made, taking in many towns and cities, giving the country the grandest driving track in the world. It is to be built by the government and should be begun at once, thus providing work for thousands of unemployed. The scheme is not without virtue. A boulevard from New York to San Francisco would be one of the wonders of the world. To the cities along the line it would give a drive known only in fairy tales. It would also, and here is its greatest virtue, enable people who cannot afford to ride to walk out of New York City.

A DECISION by the Supreme Court of Minnesota concerning commitment of alleged insane persons should be gratefully welcomed by the people of that State instead of being made subject of censure. The court holds that notice must be given prior to judgment in commitments under the law for inclosure of the insane. The present law makes it easy for conniving or ignorant persons to railroad obnoxious people into an insane asylum. The court holds that evidence must be presented in open court, a requirement now practically universal in preliminary procedure touching insanity. The wonder is that the Legislature of Minnesota should have given the Supreme Court of the State cause for rendering a judgment so plainly necessary and so clearly just.

THE Governor of Arkansas makes and proves a serious accusation against the Indian Territory, that under its present government it is the recruiting and organizing place for bands of train robbers, whose depredations are often reported in the Southwest. Maps of the localities adjacent to Indian Territory have been captured, showing the route by which the robbers traveled, both in going to the lines of railroads and returning. On these maps were time tables showing when valuable trains were due at points favorable for waylaying. It will be the duty of Congress to take action on this complaint. To make Indian Territory a rendezvous for criminals is demoralizing alike to the Indians and to all the whites in the Territory, and the criminal classes should be cleaned out for the protection of the mass of citizens.

THE season of "didn't-know-it-was-loaded" is on. It was opened the other evening at Decatur. Sitting down to a game of cards in the home of his fiancee a young man took from his pocket a revolver and, extracting what he supposed to be all of the cartrides, laid it on the table, jocosely remarking that it should be used on the first one who quarreled. A play made by the girl was questioned. Recalling his former remark she jokingly pointed the weapon at the young man's head; there was an explosion and her partner at cards and intended husband was dead on the floor. Neither "knew it was loaded." Human understanding cannot account for the desire, strong in some people, to carry a revolver. Much less can it account for the uncontrollable passion to "fool" with it. There was no more reason for the young man to carry a pistol than to wear armor or to wheel around with him a Hotchkiss gun. The sorrow which his deed has brought on the girl will doubtless serve, in her case at least, as an everlasting warning not to play with a revolver, loaded or unloaded.

IN less than a month after the fatal bomb was thrown in the French Chamber of Deputies the murderous bomb-thrower, Vaillant, was executed. There was no precipitation. Every step leading to the guillotine was decorous and according to law. At first it was a mystery who threw the bomb, and then, after the man had been discovered and identified, he was given every reasonable opportunity to defend himself. France sets herein a good example to America. Justice is largely defeated in its effect by unnecessary delay. The man Vaillant was a typical anarchist. He had no excuse whatever for his act. He threw that bomb in the hope of killing some of the national lawmakers, and that solely upon the theory that to do such murder would tend to the disintegration of society, and that such disintegration is the fundamental need of the people. This is alike preposterous in its premise and its conclusion. The largest possible destruction by that bomb would have simply been a personal calamity, having no effect upon the fabric of society. The only question from the first was the measure of punishment, capital or imprisonment for life. The man Vaillant reasoned well on this point. He said that if he had been sentenced to imprisonment for life he would probably have been pardoned out some time, and then he would have gone to making bombs again.

SOME POPULAR SONGS.

THE TRIVIAL INCIDENTS THAT CALLED THEM FORTH.

Circumstances Under Which Many Famous Airs Have Been Written—"The Old Oaken Bucket" and "Swanee River"—Inspiring Songs of the War.

Ways of Song Writers.

It is interesting to notice in what trivial circumstances many popular songs have had their origin, for the poet, however full his soul may be of the spirit of poetry, needs a "provocation"; that is to say, he finds his inspiration in circumstances which to other people would be of very trifling moment. It is a peculiarity of the poetic mind that it is able to see the poetic side of everything. Where the ordinary mortal beholds only a commonplace and every-day incident, the poet sees an inspiration which he at once proceeds to utilize.

No object could be imagined more destitute of attractiveness—than an old oaken bucket hanging in an old well, and yet to this homely feature of country life the world owes one of its most dearly cherished songs. "The Old Oaken Bucket" was written about 1817 by Samuel Woodworth. He was a queer genius. With excellent opportunities for self-advancement he failed to improve any of them, and to the end of his days, in spite of his various attempts to found newspapers and magazines, he remained "a tramp printer." Never content to stay in one locality more than a few months at a time, he wandered from place to place, living in a desultory fashion, but always contented and generally happy. One hot day in the summer of 1817 he left the office in New York for the purpose of taking some refreshment, and went across the street into a saloon frequented by his fellow-workmen and ordered brandy. It was set out on the bar and he poured a liberal bumper, sipped it, and called out to an acquaintance, "There is no better drink than this in the world." "Yes there is," rejoined the other. "What is it?" asked Woodworth. "A draught from the old oaken bucket that hung in the well at home," was the reply. Woodworth made no answer, but swallowed his brandy, and setting down the glass, went back to the printing office and sat down at a desk reserved for the use of printers. For an hour or two he was closely employed, and then calling to him the man who had made the remark, he read to him the now famous lines.

"Old Folks at Home."

A similar trivial incident inspired the equally famous song, "Old Folks at Home." Stephen Foster, the author, was once passing through Kentucky, and while the stage-coach was stopped at a wayside inn to permit the horses to be changed, Foster stood near, watching the operation with some degree of interest. The darkies were slow and lazy, and made no great degree of haste in performing their duty, chatting meanwhile in the manner and dialect peculiar to themselves. Finally one, deploring his hard lot, said: "I wish I was back with the old folks at home." "Where was that?" asked another, and the first rejoined, "Way down upon the Suwanee river." The novelty of the expressions caught the quick ear of the poet. He recognized in them and the theme they suggested an appropriate subject for a song, and that evening when he reached his destination wrote both words and music. A chord was touched in the human heart, the song was instantaneously successful. Over 400,000 copies were sold in the next few years, and even now no song of reminiscence is dearer to the public than the familiar strains of "Way Down Upon the Suwanee River." Every wanderer who remembers with anything like affection those he has left behind finds in this plaintive melody a wealth of suggestion equaled only by that other song of home written by a man who never knew what it was to have a home.

A somewhat more unusual incident originated the famous song, "Minute Gun at Sea." R. S. Sharpe, the noted song writer of England, was once during an exceedingly tempestuous winter visiting some friends at Brighton. A severe storm came on one evening during his stay, and while the entire party were solacing themselves in the tap room of The Old Ship, an inn on the beach at this now celebrated watering place, the dull boom of a cannon was heard. All rushed to the windows, and by the flashes of lightning they could see a large ship stranded in the offing. Busy preparations were at once made to rescue the unfortunate sailors, and while boats were being launched the regular boom of the cannon came across the waters telling of their deadly peril. Sharpe saw in the incident an excellent subject, and being for some cause unable to go with the rescuing parties he sat down in the deserted tap room and wrote the song.

Sallie in Our Alley.

"Sallie in Our Alley," a song which has been lately revived with marked success, was the work of the equally brilliant and unfortunate Henry Carey. As author, poet and dramatist he was sucessful, but of his extensive and talented works the only portion which has endured is this one song. It was written as the outcome of a day's merrymaking. While wandering one day in the outskirts of London his attention was attracted by a young workingman and his sweetheart. The young fellow was evidently determined to make the best of his holiday. He took the girl to the various sights in the vicinity, treated her to a boat ride, then to a few minutes of the merry-go-round, after which he escorted her to a cheap lunch house and gave her a treat of bacon and onions, cakes and ale. During the whole course of their outing they were followed by Carey, who was pleased with the simplicity of the courtship. Returning home, when the activity of the young people proved too much for his endurance, he wrote the song, which he shortly afterward published himself, as no publisher could be induced to touch it. It was greeted with a storm of ridicule. All London roared with laughter at the idea of a man making a song on such a subject. It was pronounced low, coarse and vulgar, and Carey was denominated the Alley Poet. He was thrown into despair by its reception, and swore he would write no more. He did not keep his vow, nor was there any need of his doing so, for he lived to see his song make its way into the best society, and had the satisfaction of knowing that it had been sung at a court concert.

Character Songs.

Character songs, like the "Fine Old English Gentleman," are almost invariably inspired by some incident, or the sight of some face, or the contemplation of some particular person who in such cases poses as a model.

"THE OLD OAKEN BUCKET THAT HUNG IN THE WELL."

Not consciously as a rule, for although some songs of this class are complimentary the majority are either seriocomic or satirical. The "Bold Soger Boy," one of Lover's best character songs, was the result of seeing a young friend, Dennie Blannigan by name, for the first time rigged out in his uniform. Dennis had enlisted, and after being received had donned his uniform, and spent the last day of his liberty in strutting up and down the streets of Dublin, the admired of all beholders. Lover saw him, and amused at his innocent self-conceit went home and wrote the song. Full of fun as it is, its innocent sarcasm was far from being appreciated by the subject of Lover's wit, and Dennis, after hearing the song for the first time, registered a vow, to use his own language, "to bate the head off of Lover for making sport of him. He never carried out his intention, however, for friends succeeded in dissuading him from his warlike intentions before he could carry them into execution, but he never quite forgave the author, for during the remainder of his army life, which lasted twenty years, Dennis was always known as "The Bold Soger Boy."

Of reminiscent military songs the annals of music are full. "The Girl I Left Behind Me," according to tradition, became the parting tune of the British army and navy about the middle of the last century. In one of the regiments then quartered in the south of England there was an

"WAY DOWN UPON DE S'WANEE RIBBER."

English bandmaster who had the not uncommon peculiarity of being able to fall in love in ten minutes with any attractive girl he might chance to meet. It never hurt him much, however, for he fell out again as readily as he fell in, and so acquired a new sweetheart in every town the regiment passed through. Whenever the troops were leaving the place where he had a sweetheart he ordered the band to play the "Girl I Left Behind Me," which, even then, was an old Irish melody. The story of his accommodating heart soon spread through the army, and other bandmasters, at the request of officers and soldiers, began to use the melody as a parting tune, and by the end of the century it was accounted disrespectful to the ladies for a regiment to march away without playing "The Girl I Left Behind Me."

Our Own War Songs.

Our civil war originated many songs, most of them, however, written by men who stayed at home. They accomplished wonders, however, in firing the blood of the country. "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp," did as much good in filling the ranks as a regiment of recruiting officers could have done. One justly famous song was written by a man who had served his time in the ranks. "Tenting on the Old Camp Ground" was the work of

"THE BOLD SOLDIER BOY."

Walter Kittredge, who, in 1862, was drafted into the army. While making preparations to go to the front he sat down on the eve of leaving his home and wrote the song. Its success was enormous. Publishers could not get out editions fast enough to satisfy the demand. It is said that, from first to last, over 1,000,000 copies were sold, and even now, set to religious words, it is in frequent use at revivals.

"AND SHE LIVES DOWN IN OUR ALLEY."

Songs of Sentiment.

Of songs of sentiment almost every one is due to some trifling incident. Thomas Noel's song, "The Pauper's Drive," in which the chorus is composed of the lugubrious refrain "Rattle His Bones Over the Stones," was caused by the sight of a funeral, in which the hearse was a cart driven at full speed by a driver impatient to get rid of his load. The "Old Sexton" was from the pen of Park Benjamin, who wrote it after casually passing an English grave yard, crowded with tombstones and monuments. The old man who served the church as sexton was digging a grave, and, as he worked, his spade threw up fragments of bones. The old man was not a moralist, and even his grewsome surroundings failed to prey on his spirits, for while he worked he crooned an old English ditty. The scene made a vivid impression on Benjamin, who produced such a song as he imagined the old man ought to have sung under such circumstances. But Benjamin was not different from other song-writers. All have described what they saw, not as it was, but as they imagined it ought to be. Of course they made mistakes of fact, but that has not in the least impaired the value of their writings, for the world, when viewing a picture, does not care whether it is true or not so long as it is pretty, and the business of the song-writers has always been to sketch a pretty picture.

STAMP COLLECTORS.

They Were Not Desired in the Portland Postoffice.

Persons engaged in making collections of postage stamps should not obtain situations in the postoffice, as two subordinate employes in that institution here have just been discharged on this account, says the Portland Oregonian. For some time complaints have been made that stamps were taken from letters and packages before they were delivered, and at last this became a regular nuisance. It was not possible to find out who was taking the stamps, so the matter was put in the hands of an inspector, and after considerable trouble he ascertained that a carrier and a distributor were the culprits.

Sometimes stamps were taken off letters or packages, and sometimes the carrier would go out of his way to deliver letters with foreign or rare stamps to beg the stamps from the owner. Sometimes packages addressed to persons not known here were thrown into the waste basket in order that the stamps might be appropriated. Foreign stamps and Columbian stamps of the higher denominations were the ones chiefly desired.

Persons making collections of stamps frequently have letters sent to them from "out-of-the-way" countries merely to get the stamps, and when their letters turned up minus the stamps there was trouble. Sometimes letters arrive at the office here with the stamps gone, showing that there are stamp collectors at other offices. As soon as it was found out who the culprits were the department ordered their dismissal from the service.

How to Spoil a Horse.

The great superiority of the horse to all other dumb animals, according to Mr. H. C. Merwin, is the fineness of his nervous system. Almost all the fastest horses, says the same writer, have been remarkable for their nervous, "high strung" constitutions. Others have had as good legs and as good lungs, but have lacked the necessary courage and determination, the "do or die" spirit, which makes a horse keep on after he is tired. But this very nervousness renders the horse the most irritable of creatures, the most easily worried and distressed. Upon this point Mr. Merwin makes some observations that are worth reading by all who have, or expect to have, horses of their own.

Harsh treatment, though it stop short of inflicting physical pain, keeps a nervous horse in a state of misery. On the other hand, it is perfectly true, as a besotted but intelligent stable keeper once observed to me, "A kind word for a hoss is as good sometimes as a feed of oats."

A single blow may be enough to spoil a racer. Daniel Lambert, founder of the Lambert branch of the Morgan family, was thought as a three-year-old to be the fastest trotting stallion of his day. He was a very handsome, stylish, intelligent horse, and also extremely sensitive.

His driver, Dan Mace, though one of the best reinsmen in America, once made the mistake, through ill temper or bad judgment, of giving Daniel Lambert a severe cut with the whip, and that single blow put an end to his usefulness as a trotter. He became wild and ungovernable in harness, and remained so for the rest of his life.

In dealing with a horse, more than with most animals, one ought to exercise patience, care, and above all, the power of sympathy, so as to know, if possible, the real motive of his doing or refusing to do this or that. To acquire such knowledge, and to act upon it when acquired, is a large part of the ethics of horse keeping.

Difficulties in the Way.

"I wonder if you will be as much surprised as I was, the other day, when I learned that women are only partially eligible to benefit by an accident insurance policy?" asks a correspondent. "It is true that a woman may take out such a policy; and if she is killed outright in some kind of disaster, her heirs may profit by it; so long as the breath of life can be kept in the body the woman herself gets nothing. Two points are advanced in explanation of this course. In the first place it is presumed that accident insurance is only for people who are deprived of the whole or a part of their income because of injury received, and it is also presumed that women are not self-supporting, and that their income is not affected if they are hurt. The second point is this: Although there are more men hurt in the aggregate than women, women are more liable to be hurt, consequently the companies decline to take what they consider, in their theory, at least, heavy risks."

Alligators Not Extinct in China.

It seems strange, but it is a fact, nevertheless, that the Chinese alligator, which has long been supposed to be extinct, has been rediscovered and specimens of it sent to the Royal Zoological Gardens in London. Marco Polo was the last author to describe it. In his description he mentions a curious superstition, etc., that its gall was a specific for the cure of hydrophobia.—St. Louis Republic.

A RECENT poet writes: "A song sleeps in my soul unsung." There is a place for that young man in the dime museum at a remunerative salary. He is the only one of his kind on record.—Atlanta Constitution.

THE YUKON COUNTRY.

Pioneer Life in the Far Northern Gold Diggings.

This camp of Forty Miles, says a letter from Alaska to the Montanian, was discovered last summer, and is the richest yet struck in Alaska, paying $300 a day to the man. The nature of the Yukon country is such that it is a tolerably hard place to get to. The honorable class of old-time miners have possession, and tough characters, when found, are at once ordered to leave, several having come out recently.

I will give you prices of a few articles in Forty Mile: Flour, $14 per 100; bacon, 33 cents per pound; beans, 22 cents, and canned fruit 60 cents. A Mackinaw shirt costs $8, and a pair of gum boots one ounce of gold dust. Now comes the root of all evil—whiskey. This sells for 50 cents a drink and $8 per bottle. You can buy everything that a miner needs for less than you can take it in for, as the natives will charge 18 cents a pound to carry it over the mountains, a distance of thirty miles, and no one should take anything with him except clothing.

The town of Forty Mile is at the mouth of Forty Mile Creek, on the Yukon. It has two general merchandise stores. One belongs to the Northwest Trading Company, and the other to our old-time Montana friend, Capt. John Healy. There are two saloons, and one cigar factory here, and 150 miners' cabins, with about 350 miners. These make up the town of Forty Mile.

All the northern part of Alaska is more or less a level country, and it is difficult to get sufficient grade for sluice boxes, and in many places they are compelled to use rockers or wheel the dirt to water. Timber is very scarce, and in many places they are compelled to haul timber forty or fifty miles with dog trains. A dog will draw about 300 pounds on the snow. Game is scarce except rabbits and grouse. You may kill a caribou or moose, and again you may not see one for weeks or not at all. Two steamers ply up and down the Yukon, one belonging to John Healy and the other to the trading company at Forty Mile. The ground never thaws out in that country, not over five or six feet at most, and they have never been able to dig through it. They work down as far as the frost is out the first year and then wait for the "never setting sun" of the next summer to thaw it deeper. The miner can run his sluice boxes but three and a half or four months of the year. The rest of the time he can whip-saw timber for boxes and such sawed stuff as he may require. Some spend the winter trapping furs, but they must be on hand by June 15 or their claims will be jumpable according to the Yukon code of laws.

There is one thing I almost forgot to mention. It is the moss, which covers all the ground, except what the water runs over, such as the shallow bars along the creek. This moss is from six to eighteen inches thick, and must be removed in order that the ground may thaw out. The boys generally make a winter's job of stripping off this moss.

A TRUE PRESENTIMENT.

A Soldier Foretells His Death Just Before the Battle.

Andrew Jackson, sergeant-at-arms of the Ohio House of Representatives, relates an incident of presentiment of death which came under his own observation. He says: "When the war broke out I was clerking in a store over in Greene county. Charley Shearer, now one of our circuit judges, was employed in the same store. His brother Frank and I were nearly the same age. One day I went across the street and enlisted. I was only sixteen years old at the time, but I was sworn in. Frank Shearer also enlisted and we went out together. He and I were messmates and chums. A finer boy never lived. We went through the hard campaigning of General Sherman and were with him in the Atlanta campaign. Just the day before the battle of Resaca Frank came to me and said, 'Andy, I am going to be killed to-morrow. I know that I will be shot early in the fight.' I laughed at his fears, but he said he was telling the truth. I finally became convinced myself that he may have had a premonition and importuned him not to go into the battle. He said it would not do for him to get a sick leave, even if his health was bad—he was just about sick—for the boys would call him a coward. A braver boy never lived, and I told him so. I finally got his consent to let me go to the lieutenant-colonel and get him detailed for headquarters work during the coming engagement. I did so, being frank with the colonel and telling him everything. He at once granted the request and wrote out the desired order. I gave it to Frank that night and thought he was safe.

"The next morning, however, he refused to obey, and insisted that if he failed to go into battle with the rest of us the boys would question his bravery. We went into the engagement and Frank fell dead at the first volley from the enemy. I placed his body in a secure place and that night went to an old barn and tore off enough siding to make him a rough coffin. We dug a grave and buried him. I carved a rude headboard out of a piece of siding and cut his name, age, and regiment upon it. I took a careful description of the place and forwarded it with all his effects to his brother Charles. He came later on to Resaca and took the body home for burial."—[Ohio State Journal.

A Grandmother at Twenty-Nine.

Some of the newspapers in another State have been bragging of a thirty-two-year-old grandmother and sending her picture all over the country. As if anything in the line of enterprise could not be excelled in Maine. But the Bangor News comes along with the report of a little boy born in Brookville on January 1, whose mother is not yet fourteen years old, and whose grandmother is not yet twenty-nine.—[Lewiston (Me.) A Turtle 200 Years Old.

When Mauritius was ceded to Great Britain in 1810 there was a gigantic turtle in a court of the artillery barracks at Port Louis, which is still there, although almost blind. It weighs 330 pounds and stands two feet high when walking. Its shell is 8 feet 6 inches long, and it can carry two men on its back with ease. It is believed to be at least 200 years old.—St. Louis Republic.

"Mud More Valuable Than Gold."

This is what the Chicago Tribune calls the Magnetic Mineral Mud Deposit, found only in Warren County, Indiana, at a place called "The Indiana Mineral Springs," that has been made famous as a health resort, and where Chicago capitalists have invested $150,000 in a big steam-heated, electric-lighted hotel plant and bath house. The people are going there from all over the country, to take the Magnetic Mineral Mud Baths for the cure of rheumatism, skin and kidney troubles.

The springs that have magnetized and impregnated the mud deposits with their mineral properties are the strongest lithia springs in this country. Many wonderful and miraculous cures have been made, and although it is but three years old, it is famous.

Our readers who are interested should send their address at once to H. L. Kramer, general manager of the Indiana Springs Company, and get a beautifully illustrated book and printed matter about the Magnetic Mineral Mud Baths.

MRS. LEWIS.

Gentlemen—I cannot tell you how my wife has improved since she began the use of your "Favorite Prescription," coupled with "G. M. D." She has no more trouble with falling of the womb, and she never feels any pain unless she stands too long. She has no bearing-down pains since she began the use of your remedies. She does nearly all of her own housework now, but before she commenced taking your remedies, she could hardly walk across the room.

I do not know how to thank you for all the good your remedies have done her, for the best doctors had given her case up as incurable.

Yours truly, ALFRED LEWIS.

A PROTECTION MOB.

DISGRACEFUL PROCEEDINGS AT GLOVERSVILLE, N. Y.

Hoodlums Attempt to Howl Down a Tariff Reform Speaker—The Free List Should Be Let Alone—Meaning of the Majority for the Wilson Bill.

Instigated by Republicans.

We freed the bodies of our black slaves thirty years ago. We have not, however, freed either their labor or the labor of our more numerous white slaves. We will not have done so much until we have changed the conditions which make them, both as producers and consumers, subjects and creatures of monopoly. One of the chains that bind them is the "protective" tariff. This chain was forged and is held in place by protected manufacturers. The elections of 1890 and 1892 loosened their hold, but they are now becoming desperate and refuse to slacken their monopoly grip. The Reform Club, of New York, has been holding meetings in various Eastern cities where so-called Democratic representatives have refused to do the bidding of their constituents and have sold out to the manufacturers of their districts. In Paterson, N. J., in Providence, R. I., and in Amsterdam, Troy and Cohoes, N. Y., these meetings have been most successful in winning back to tariff reform those workingmen who have wavered when their wages have been reduced because of the shadow of the Wilson bill, as they were told.

In only one case did the workingmen fail to respond to true Democratic principles. This was at Gloversville, N. Y., and here are the circumstances: An audience of over 2,000 had crowded into the opera house at Gloversville to hear Mr. Thomas G. Shearman. As in other meetings three-fourths attended to listen to tariff reform arguments. They might be skeptical, but they were open to conviction. In the gallery, however, there were about 500 men and boys, including a well-organized gang of 200 men who had been primed with liquor. The Republicans who primed them gave them to understand that they were to make it unpleasant for the speaker and, if possible, to break up the meeting. It has since been asserted in the local papers that a liberal supply of stale eggs was on hand for expected use. No police were there, as the Mayor was opposed to the meeting. Republican papers had for several days been slyly preparing the way for what followed.

Gloversville has 15,000 inhabitants and is the center of the glove industry in this country. Nine-tenths of the gloves made need no protection, and in fact the manufacturers would thrive better without any; but that does not now concern us. As often happens in protected industries, nearly all of the best paid workers are imported foreigners. Glove cutters are practically all foreigners. Many of the recent importations are Huns and Italians. It was these who were relied upon to disturb the meeting.

"Before I had talked for fifteen minutes," said Mr. Shearman, "the opposition to me developed. I announced that at the close of my talk I would answer any questions that any one present might want to ask. A man who was sitting in the body of the house arose and asked me a question. When I started to answer it he continued to talk. This was a signal for his friends in the gallery. They hooted, hissed and stamped. They shouted all sorts of questions that were wide of the subject. This man on the floor led them. The Chairman of the meeting told me that he was a low kind of fellow, and he really was a low fellow and very vulgar. Some of the remarks were obscene."

Mr. Shearman tried to quiet the audience and go on with his speech, but the mob in the gallery didn't want a free trade speech. They jeered every remark he made. They commented on his personal appearance—Mr. Shearman is a small man, physically—and then they began a steady stamping of their feet that was very annoying to the speaker.

"I did not fear personal violence," said Mr. Shearman, "for the men in a mob are always cowards. I called their attention to the fact that Garrison, Lovejoy and Phillips had been hooted and jeered in the same way when they advocated abolition of the black slaves, and I was willing to stand it in the cause of advocating abolition of the white slaves. The respectable part of the audience wanted to listen to what I had to say. I kept on my feet for two hours. I wasn't able to say much that could be heard. Then I took a chair and sat down, telling these rowdies that they couldn't tire me out. They swarmed down from the gallery, and as there were no seats in the body of the house, they stood in a gang around the front of the stage, threatening to do me injury. But when I had them right under my eyes, where I could talk to them, they subsided a little. One man told me I was a rebel and a traitor. I said to him: 'Two of my brothers went to the front during the fight for the Union, and I wanted to go, but they would not take me. I have spent $25,000 supporting the families of men who were killed in that war. Now, sir, what have you done? Did you go to the front? Did you spend any money for the families of those who did?' That turned the laugh on him.

At the end of two hours and a half of effort to talk free trade, Mr. Shearman declared that the present hard times were not due to fear of tariff changes, and that under the influence of the new tariff bill times would again become prosperous. This so angered the mob that they broke out afresh. They called Mr. Shearman names, they hooted, and when their throats got tired they made all the noise they could with their feet. It was very distressing. Logic is a very good thing in its way. Mr. Shearman thinks that his free trade logic is irresistible, but it doesn't count against a mob of unemployed wage-earners such as attended the Gloversville meeting.

By this time the Chief of Police had reached the scene of the agitation with all the available night force of police. The curtain was rung down and the meeting was adjourned. Mr. Shearman and the officers of the meeting started for the hotel. There were enough police to station one on each side of Mr. Shearman, who walked in front, followed by the officers of the meeting, who were protected in the same way. This procession was followed by an angry mob, who would have been even more rude if they had not feared the police. At the hotel Mr. Shearman turned sarcastically and thanked every one for his kindness and courtesy. Then he started back to Brooklyn.

Macbeth's Frank Statements.

Mr. Geo. A. Macbeth, of Pittsburg, is the largest individual manufacturer of glass in this country. He is a wide-awake man who keeps "up to date" in improvements and who, in spite of "protection" on many of his raw materials, and the fact that he pays higher wages than are paid by either domestic or foreign competitors, can export large quantities of glassware to all parts of the world. He believes in being independent of tariff and is aching for the time when he can compete with all comers without being handicapped by protection. Here is what he said to a representative of the National Glass Budget, after the passage of the Wilson bill in the House:

"The bill is all right in its way, but it doesn't reach much. In other words, it is good enough as far as it goes, but it doesn't go far enough. I believe in free trade simply and absolutely. Free trade is inevitable. It is in the air. No amount of tariff dickering can alter the fact. Will the Senate pass the bill? Who can tell what it will do!

When the reporter mentioned the fact that Ihmsen's glass house was to shut down, Mr. Macbeth leaned back in his chair and simply said, "Hats!"

"Maybe," said he, "the firm is justified in so doing, but I would like to see their figures. I firmly believe that the window glass workers make too much money. They will have to come down. Who has to pay them their high wages? It isn't Ihmsen's or any other window glass manufacturers; it is the consumers. And who are the consumers of window glass? It isn't the rich men; they use plate glass; it is the poor men, workingmen who labor for a dollar a day. And these poor men contribute their mite so that the window glass worker can make $14 a day and loaf four months out of the year. Why should the United States be asked to perpetuate this one particular body of men in this sinecure? How much are the carpenters making these times? I don't think they are making any more than $2.25 a day. But these same carpenters have to pay for the window glass. If you 'protect' one body of workmen you will have to 'protect' another. When they are all 'protected' where is the advantage? This business of 'fixing' things at Washington, this fooling with the tariff, is absurd. Free trade is inevitable; sooner or later it will come; the sooner the people of the United States adapt themselves to the inevitable the better it will be for all concerned."

A Decisive Majority.

The Wilson bill passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 204 to 140, a majority of 64. This is the largest majority given for a tariff bill since the war. In 1883 the bill which was known as the tariff commission bill passed the House by a majority of 48, the vote being 128 to 80. In 1884 the vote to strike out the enacting clause of the Morrison bill was 159 to 155. In 1888 the Mills bill was passed by the House by a vote of 162 to 149, a majority of 13. The McKinley bill received a majority of 22 in 1890, the vote standing 164 to 142.

The large majority obtained by the Wilson bill is of great significance. The Democratic Representatives were charged by their constituents with the duty of lowering tariff taxes. They have performed this duty. They have voted to reduce duties, and, more than that, they have expressed themselves decidedly in favor of the form and method of reduction embodied in the Wilson bill. A bill obtaining such a majority in the branch of Congress having the sole power to originate revenue bills ought not to be materially changed by the Senate.

The House has come recently from the people, and such an expression of opinion as it has given in behalf of the Wilson bill ought to be conclusive on Democratic Senators.—New York World.

Let the Free List Alone.

With coal, iron and sugar on the dutiable list the tariff bill offered to the Senate will be simply a free-wool bill. Do Senators imagine that free wool will be accepted by the country as an adequate or satisfactory fulfillment of the oft-repeated Democratic promise of free raw materials? Free wool with reduced duties on woolens will be a great gain, and we have no desire to belittle it: but would it be regarded as a redemption of Democratic pledges? Would it satisfy the people who have thrice voted by overwhelming majorities for a reduction of tariff taxes?

The Wilson bill is a carefully matured measure. It passed the House by a majority such as no tariff bill has had for a third of a century. The loss of revenue by reason of its free list and reduced duties on imports is more than made up by its internal revenue schedule. It should not be radically changed by a body which has no constitutional right to originate a revenue bill. Moreover, the House will not consent to a practical abolition of the free list which was framed so laboriously and fought for so desperately. Especially if there is good ground for the suspicion that the free list is tampered with in order to defeat the income tax.—New York World.

Mills on the Wilson Bill.

The bill of Mr. Wilson, like the one of 1888, has only gone a Sabbath's day journey on the line of march. In both cases there is a long distance between what they are and what they ought to be, and the intervening space is filled up by insurmountable obstacles. This bill should be amended in some particulars and then passed, and the country will see and feel the benefits of larger and freer trade, and better employment and more earnings for its labor, and then it will advance with a bolder and longer step. The sugar bounty should be stricken out. Ad valorem should be substituted for specific duties wherever they occur, except on articles bearing internal taxes. With these and some minor changes the bill should be passed by the House at the earliest possible day. Before it reaches the Senate the rules of that body should be changed, so that, after fair debate and full opportunity for amendment, it can be passed and sent to the President in the early spring. When that is done, the country will again spring forward and enter upon a career of prosperity; and the measure of its prosperity in the future will be marked by the extent to which its trade shall be liberated and its labor employed.—Senator Mills, in North American Review.

Senator Gorman Out of Line.

The Annapolis correspondent of the Baltimore Sun (Dem.), writing about the resolution of the Maryland Senate indorsing the Wilson bill, says: "It is stated that Senator Gorman wrote to one or two persons in Annapolis strongly deprecating any instructions that would express favor of the Wilson tariff bill. These letters were shown to Senators when the movement began to cause a stampede from the Bennett resolution. From what can be gathered about this correspondence without seeing it, the senior Senator at Washington not only deprecated any mention of the Wilson bill by name, but expressed preference for something like the old Mills bill—a thing of the past. However this may be, every effort to stop expression failed." The resolution finally adopted differs from the Bennett resolution only in substituting for instructions to the Maryland Senators a general request to the Senate to vote for the Wilson bill.

All Protected Countries Except England.

Social unrest, stimulated by industrial and financial depression, amounts to a problem in many countries of Europe. It is notably so in Germany, Austria, Hungary, Italy, Spain, France, Belgium, Norway and even in England. In portions of Russia discontent is organized and determined, but it is restricted to certain classes and can hardly be said to have permeated the masses.—Minneapolis Times.

AN organ of the tariff-protected trusts solemnly assures the country that "the Democrats will get no help from the Republicans of the Senate in passing their bill." The Democrats will not be greatly surprised by this announcement. Men who drive hogs out of the trough do not as as a rule get much assistance from the swine. There is no need of it in this case.—Chicago Herald.

IN the Senate's consideration of the Wilson bill procrastination is the thief not only of time but of a good many millions of money. Business is waiting on the Senate all over the country.

Europe Slowly Growing Colder.

That the continent of Europe is passing through a cold period has been pointed out by M. Flammarion, the French astronomer. During the past six years the mean temperature of Paris has been about 2 degrees below the normal, and Great Britain, Belgium, Spain, Italy, Austria, and Germany have also been growing cold. The change seems to have been in progress in France for a long time, the growth of the vine having been forced far southward since the thirteenth century; and a similar cooling has been observed as far away as Rio de Janeiro, where the annual temperature has been going down for some years past.—Scientific American.

Coming to the Point.

"Excuse me, ma'am," said the tramp, "have you got any wood you want split?"

"No."

His face brightened.

"Any coal you need carried?"

"None whatever."

A smile stole over his features as he went on. "Is they any work of any kind ye could call on me fur?"

"No."

With intense relief, he said, "Thank yer, missis, fur them assurances, even if yer charity don't go no furder. Yours is the fust house that's let me git 'round to the question terday. Have you got any cold victuals?"

Very Queer

Are the sensations experienced by the nervous and dyspeptic. Unaccountable palpitation, buzzing in the ears, flushing of one side of the face, odd taste and tingling in the mouth, constant restlessness, stinging in the gullet and sinking in the stomach, acute sensitiveness to slight sounds that magnifies them tenfold, low spirits—these are only a few of the charming experiences of the individual who suffers from combined nervousness and indigestion—a team that usually travel together. Their gay and festive career is, however, brought to a full stop by that greatest of stomachics, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which also overcomes their allies—constipation and biliousness. This popular remedy fortifies those who use it against malaria, chronic rheumatism and kidney complaint, restores nervous quietude and promotes appetite, vigor and sleep.

"He must have been driving with one hand," flippantly suggested the minister's eldest son—a mere boy.

"Or perhaps, he had the reins around his neck," said Edith, a shy society beauty of 16 with a charmingly modest mein. And then everybody exclaimed in chorus, "Why, Edith!"—Texas Siftings.

Hard Times.

Politicians may debate and Congress may legislate, but there is one element of distress which makes the times very hard indeed, and that is a cold winter and physical suffering. Pains and aches are not set down in any tariff list, and there is one reformer, St. Jacobs Oil, that does not delay a prompt cure of such evils.

Strategy at a Trying Time.

The young husband was somewhat surprised when his wife came into the office. She opened the conversation at once.

"I want enough money to go out of town for a few days," she said, and you will have to take your meals downtown for a few days."

"Why, what does this mean?"

"It means just this: I got a messenger boy to come to the house for Mary Ann to tell her that she was wanted at her aunt's, and as soon as she got around the corner I shut up the house and locked it and ran away. When she comes back she won't find any one there. We don't owe her anything, so it's all right, and I wanted to discharge her, but you know I never would dare to tell her to go, and I knew you wouldn't dare, and don't you think your little wife knows pretty well how to manage? Say yes, now, or I'll break down and cry right here in the office."—Indianapolis Journal.

Small Cities as State Capitals.

It is the custom in this country, almost universally, to place the capital of a State in some town other than the principal city of the State. The capital of the United States for that matter, was so placed in order that the Congress might not be subjected to local influences. There is Springfield, Ill., a mere village compared with Chicago; Maine, Augusta, while Bangor is the largest town; Connecticut, Hartford, while New Haven is the largest town; New Jersey, Trenton and Jersey City; Maryland, Annapolis and Baltimore; Delaware, Dover and Wilmington; West Virginia, Charlestown and Wheeling; South Carolina, Columbia and Charleston; Louisiana, Baton Rouge and New Orleans; Missouri, Jefferson City and St. Louis; California, Sacramento and San Francisco—and the same state of affairs exists in many other States.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Rats Forced to Keep Gnawing.

Have you any idea why it is that rats, mice, and squirrels are continually gnawing at something? They do not do this for "pure devilment," as people generally imagine, but because they are forced to. Animals of that class, especially the rats, have teeth which continue to grow as long as their owner lives. In the human species the teeth are developed from pulps which are absorbed and disappear as soon as the second set are full grown, but in the case of the much maligned rat the pulp supply is perpetual, and is continually secreting materials by which the incisors gain in length. This being the case, the poor creature is compelled to keep up his regular gnawing operations in order to keep his teeth ground off to a proper length.—St. Louis Republic.

Vast Herds of Manitoba Reindeer.

S. B. Tyrrel of the Dominion Geological Survey, said concerning the vast number of wild animals in the barren grounds of the North that he saw a veritable plain of reindeer. He estimated their number by the hundred thousand, and says it was the greatest sight he ever witnessed. He said: "I had an unobstructed view for three miles, and the whole tract was covered with reindeer. When seen singly we had to shoot them at from 200 to 300 yards. In herds we could get up to within 100 yards. The ground is always frozen in this country except a few inches on the surface in summer. The grass thaws out during this season and the deer live on it. In winter they subsist on moss.—Winnipeg Correspondent Philadelphia Press.

Thought They Were Sausages.

A train was running along through some swamps in Northern Indiana. The track was fringed on either side with "cat-tails," literally thousands of their brown heads bobbing around in the breeze. A small boy eagerly drank in the scenery. He was evidently a city-bred boy, for he presently exclaimed, "Mamma, I didn't know that sausages grew in that way."

The Wasp.

"Waps" or "wops" for "wasp" is a very interesting word. The Aryan root is "waps," but men who knew Latin better than they did English, thought it ought to follow the Latin vespa and therefore transposed the two last letters of the word "waps," and so made it into "wasp."

CLIP SAVE AND SEND TO US

The following are shown the outfits which caused such a litter amongst the windmill exhibitors at the World's Fair.

Chief Buchanan of the Dept. of Agriculture wished it put up to cut and grind feed for the stock on exhibition and urged other Windmill Co.'s to put up outfits. They would not, and tried to prevent us. They had a regular organization for fighting us, held meetings, and appointed committees and for weeks occupied a great deal of their own time and that of the World's Fair Officials trying to prevent us from erecting one, and our outfit was actually torn down and wrecked one evening after dark, before it was completed by parties who pulled it over with a rope.

Mr. Buchanan sent Chief of Staff, J. A. Green, with a committee of the visitors to see us, and in his presence, the Pres. of the Aermotor Co. offered to pay freight, or expenses on Geared outfits that any other windmill exhibitors would put up and to furnish skilled erectors to erect them in order to have something with which to compare the Aermotor in practical work. This they would not do for the reason that the steel geared mills other than Aermotors on exhibition were experimental and it was well known that the 12-ft. Aermotor would do more work than any 16 ft. wooden wheel. As it was, the outfit here represented was the only power mill put up for public use, and it never got out of order in the slightest particular, though operated by unfamiliar hands.

If having tools and mind in ridge & have the tools and most can be brought down at one side.

In this model outfit no horizontal shaft was used. We belted direct to other machine from the pulley, which is always a part of the Aermotor Grinder, thus greatly economizing in first cost, in power, and in space. It cut feed as rapidly as two men could get it to the cutter and ground 12 to 20 bushels an hour.

A great many outfits were sold to those who saw it work. It was a 12-ft. Geared Aermotor on a 40-ft. steel tower, put up on a light frame tower, and in a 65 mile wind one could hardly feel the barn shake. The feet of the Steel Tower rested upon two 6x6 timbers laid on the roof. Through these feet and timbers long bolts passed through the roof and were secured down in the 4x6 timbers which pass from each foot of the tower to where they were secured by bolts to the 20x10 mast, 34 ft. long, which extended from the peak of the roof to the floor, so that the entire weight of the tower was transmitted through the mast to the floor. This shows how a high steel tower can be put on a light frame structure. In this case the wheel was far enough above the buildings to be unaffected by the eddies and currents caused by them. The shaft in the Tower is supported by Steel Balls and Brasses.

Why buy a Horse Power with which to supplement horse power, when for the same money you can get a Geared Aermotor which supplies perpetual power and do always have it?

MODEL POWER OUTFIT AT WORLD'S FAIR.

The third advertisement in this series will show a Steel Circular Saw and Frame, for farm and sawyers' use. It is a Perfect Pole Saw, with Perfect Safety Guards, and runs with very much less power than ordinary band saws and has a better cut. Where we can, we shall make liberal offers to accept copies of these advertisements in part payment for Windmills. If you have any thought of using a windmill this year write us at once, stating what you will need, whether Pumping or Geared, and if possible we will make you a liberal offer.

The Aermotor Co. proposes to distribute $500, CASH, IN PRIZES for the best essays written by the wife, son or daughter of a farmer or user of a windmill, answering the question, "WHY SHOULD I USE AN AERMOTOR?" AN INTERESTING SKETCH.

Nothing appeals so strongly to a mother's affection as her daughter just budding into womanhood. Following is an instance: "Our daughter, Blanche, now 15 years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and lost the entire use of her right arm. She was in such a condition that we had to keep her from school and abandon her music lessons. In fact, we feared St. Vitus dance, and are positive but for an invaluable remedy she would have had that terrible affliction. We had employed physicians, but she received no benefit from them. The first of last August she weighed but 75 pounds, and although she has taken only three bottles of Nervine she now weighs 106 pounds; her nervousness and symptoms of St. Vitus dance are entirely gone, she attends school regularly, and studies with comfort and ease. She has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid, and no money could procure for our daughter the health Dr. Miles' Nervine has brought her.

When my brother recommended the remedy I had no faith in patent medicines, and would not listen to him, but as a last resort he sent us a bottle, we began giving it to Blanche, and the effect was almost immediate."—Mrs. R. R. Bullock, Brighton, N. Y.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Mr. Hoffelder Speaks.

MR. BARNS,

DEAR SIR: Please allow me space in the COURIER for the following statement:

The Dispatch of Feb. 15, 1894, wrote almost a two column article against the statement we made the week before in the COURIER, but as usual flaggers around from the real facts. He wants to know why the interest on county orders is higher than the debt shows at the auditor's annual report, figured at six per cent. Now, we will explain this to Mr. Campbell. The orders are standing out sometimes from two to four months over a year before they are redeemed, and Mr. Campbell can satisfy himself of that by stepping into the auditor's office and examining the stubs of orders that were drawn from June 1,1892, until June 1, 1893, or any other period. Warrants are drawn on the county frequently, and especially four times in the year. Now, suppose the county debt should be bonded in order to make a cash basis, then it would become necessary to issue at least twenty thousand dollars more bonds than the actual debt, or let some of the orders run on interest again. That sum of money, or some of it, would lie in the treasury idle, or give the treasurer a chance to speculate with it. or it might be stolen, while the county had to pay the interest on it. Besides that, the county would have to pay the interest in advance. That makes a little difference, too. We are of the opinion that the debt is to be paid and not bonded, and the only way it can be paid is by the people of the county through taxation, or the republicans may be successful in electing a commissioner "who will reduce the taxes and pay off the debt." Then, of course, he flops over to the stationery, a thing he has so much to say about since the last four years, because it was about four years ago that the Dispatch brought in a bill amounting to twenty dollars while the contract price was about four dollars, which the Board allowed. Then Mr. Campbell objected and made a statement that the goods cost him about eight dollars. Now if that is true, then he charged the county with a profit of almost double the account. According to that, the stationery would cost the county several thousand dollars more, if delivered by the Dispatch.

The last statement we made cooled the Press down some, and he comes back like a little boy crying "we did not say the farmers are poor business men" and confessed that he did not tell the truth. He neither took back nor gave us any of those names, neither showed us the law to the contrary on county expenses. Instead of coming back like a man, he sends his detectives out all over the county to find out whether or not he can find anything against us. Now, that is the style of all hypocrites, and in his search he finally comes up to the Farrington and Brand bridges, and advocates the same thing we asserted long before the Press made notice of it. That is, to build the bridges of 50-foot span and under of wood. But the board of commissioners consists of three members and we are but one of them. The building of the Brand bridge was continued from 1890 to 1892, just in order to give those people a chance to change the road onto the line. Or will the Press say the commissioners have a right to build a bridge where there is no road? We sold the filling on Farrington bridge abutment after due notice was given publicly to the lowest bidder, and if the Press can prove the contrary, all right, come on. But the Press and the Dispatch both wanted to make some political capital out of it, because two members of the board are democrats, and say one belongs to the peoples party. Now, gentlemen, if you want to construe it this way, let us have it. In 1888, the debt increased $4,186.37 and in 1889 the increase was $11,737.27, and in those two years the majority of the board was republican For roads and bridges there was paid in 1888 $12,500.83 and in 1889 for the same purpose $16,405.85. The Press says it was a mistake to put steam apparatus in the court house. Well, that may be, but we think the first mistake was made by putting in the gas. Besides that, it was dangerous. But we never heard the Press or the Dispatch complain about it. Besides that, the commissioners put the gas pipe up on the court tower. We do not know whether the Auburn Mining Company got any extra pay for that or not, but we do know that the same company made a strong effort three years ago to put four electric lights on the court house tower at an expense of $32 a month on the county, and the Dispatch was in that scheme, too. Of course it would give him a chance to complain about democratic bad management afterwards. It was a republican board that erected two bridges in 1888 and 1889, and these had to be repaired in 1892 and 1893. It was a republican judge that rendered a decision in 1884, construing Sec. 6029 Revised Statutes that cost DeKalb thousands of dollars.

You see, gentlemen, it is not wise for people who live in glass houses to throw stones, neither is it just to charge all the sins and mistakes that have been committed in the last ten years to one man or two without proof.

THE HIGHEST AWARD.

Dr. Price's Baking Powder Receives It.

(Chicago Tribune.)

For leavening power, keeping qualities purity and general excellence, the World's Fair jury decided that Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder had no equal. On each of its claims it was awarded a first prize or a diploma. All the baking powders entered for prizes were subjected to a most exhaustive examination, and the jury was the best equipped to make a decision of any ever got together. Their verdict was supported by the testimony of Dr. H. W. Wiley, chief chemist of the United States Department of Agriculture at Washington. Dr. Wiley is an expert on food products and the highest authority on such matters in America. This verdict settles a long debated question as to which among the many baking powders is the best.

THE DEETERS MURDER TRIAL.

SCENE OF THE SHOOTING.

The above plan shows the scene of the murders. Deeters was striking his mother and her screams attracted Mrs. Lowe, who lived at Bachtel's, her father's. She came over to see what was the matter, and as she started back home, he shot her. Then he went to the railway crossing and shot Yates, who was coming home from Butler Yates was not seriously hurt and got away. Deeters loaded his now empty revolver, and got up to the main road in time to meet Bachtel going to Butler for a doctor for his daughter. Deeters shot him, and later on set fire to the barn.

THE TRIAL.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, FEB. 27.

As a matter of general interest we reproduce a large part of Mrs. Emerick's testimony of Tuesday afternoon, just as we find it in the Angola Magnet:

Mrs. Emerick again on the stand, and further cross examined, said: About the 5th of Sept. following the tragedy, I returned to my home in Noble county. Some two or three weeks later I went back to Mrs. Lanning's again. Was over there three times before the Oct. term of court, and the 3rd time I went, called at the jail to see my brother. Was at the jail to see him several times; don't know just how many. Talked with him about lawyers to defend him. Asked him who he wanted. He said Baxter was a good lawer. I told him Baxter was on the other side. He finally said "McClellan is a good lawyer," and I said "you can't have him; he's on the other side." I had heard that both you (McClellan) and Baxter were so employed. Can't remember who told me; heard it in outside talk. I asked him two or three times what lawyer he wanted, and he looked at the floor and said nothing. I finally asked him if he would be satisfied with such attorneys as Geo Lanning and I should select. Said he would. Later, I reported to him what we had done—that we had seen Mr. Penfield and Mr. Barr, who declined to take the defense because their fees were not secured. He didn't say anything. We talked some time, and I told him that I had talked with the attorneys, and they refused over and over again to take the case, unless they were secured. He made no reply. Geo. Lanning and I did the talking: he said nothing. Later, I reported to him that I had employed Penfield and Barr, and told him I had given them my note for $2,500 to secure them; and that, as it would be necessary to have witnesses and pay other expenses, I had given a further note for $1,000, and secured the 1st note with a mortgage. He didn't say anything. At one time, after he was in jail, I asked him what should be done with his personal property. He said he didn't know. Asked him if I shouldn't dispose of it and use the proceeds to help defray the expenses of his trial, and he said yes. My attorneys drew up a paper for him to sign, authorizing me to sell the personal property, and I took it to the jail and he signed it. I sold the stuff, realizing about $300, which I paid over to my attorneys. The mortgage which Sammy signed was written by Mr. Barr in Penfield's office. I had explained to Sammy the best I could, that it was necessary I be secured, and he must give me a mortgage to secure me. Don't think he fully understood me, though, for his mind was not right. The $1,000 note was to raise money to procure expert testimony—to hire doctors—and to pay necessary expenses, general expenses of the trial. Didn't understand that any part of it was to pay witness fees; it was to pay regular expenses, such as come up during the trial. When I first asked him to sign the mortgage he didn't say anything. I asked him again and he said "I can." Then the mortgage was brought by Mr. F. L. Welsheimer, who showed Sam where to sign, and he did so. Mr. W. asked him if it was his free act and deed, and he said it was. This was just before the October term of the DeKalb court. My attorneys told me the law provided that I could take such a mortgage, and I had confidence in what they told me. They wouldn't take the mortgage themselves, and I had to take it myself. When asked if she didn't know that a crazy man can't execute a legal mortgage, she said her attorneys told her that it would be all right. Witness fired up, and told Judge McClellan that he could have her money but that he couldn't take her brother's life—not if she could help it; and to make it more emphatic she repeated it a time or two. Never saw the contract between Sam and Seldenright, for building house. Talked with Sam about the plan, and suggested the putting in of an extra window. My suggestion was adopted, and such a window was put in. Never heard a contract read. Saw a plat, or plan of the house, in Jan., '93. He got the plan and I looked it over. His mind was unbalanced at that time—I thought he was crazy. Did not discourage his building a costly house. Thought that was all right. Mother told me he was taking Dr. Fanning's medicine. I thought it better that he be treated at home, than to go to an asylum. I went to my mother's in response to the postal card, expecting to find him upset in his mind. Found him drawing wood. While I was there we talked about the plan of the house. Went home, and didn't see him again till after the tragedy. Wrote him once, but got no answer. Visited at Nelson Smurr's during my visit to my mother in January. Staid there all night. While there, Mr. Smurr did not ask me, "What are you going to do with Sammy?" I did say to him, "He's no more crazy than you or I are." 'Squire Smurr is a relative, but he's not a very true one. I did think Sam was crazy at that time, but I did not want it to go out over the neighborhood. Think that "crazy" and "insane" mean the same thing. When I say "unsound mind" I mean "crazy." Sam said that Yates was one of the d—d—st old thieves he ever saw. He didn't say anything about Laura. When I talked with Sam in the jail, he said he shot Laura and Mr. Bachtel because they had poked their noses into his business. Sam was always kind to his mother, so was I. When asked if she ever struck her mother, a storm of objections came, and they were sustained. There was considerable hubbub, and the Court remarked that he did not wish to lecture counsel, and Mr. Barr. responded that he didn't wish to be lectured—that his health would not admit of it.

Re-direct. My attorneys were to expend the $1,000 which I got, to secure expert witnesses. I relied wholly upon their judgment. They told me that I must take my own risk. When I gave my attorneys my note for $2,500, I secured it with a mortgage on my own property, and other collaterals. They told me that the law provided that I could take a mortgage from my brother, but that I must take my own chances. Mr. Penfield read the law to me, showing that a brother or sister could take steps for the protection of an insane brother's rights. They advised me that my brother, though insane, could execute a mortgage to secure me. Laura and I were good friends, and so was Mrs. Bachtel and I.

Further cross-examinrtion. Expenditure of the $1,000 was left entirely to my attorneys. I told Sam about it, and he approved of it. I secured my attorneys for $2,500 with collaterals of my own Did not give security for the $1,000 note. Paid Croxton $233, Barr $58 and taxes $21, which was endorsed on the $1,000 note. It was the amount realized from the sale of Sam's personal property. I am secured $3,500. I did not direct my attorneys to bring suit to foreclose the mortgage. Simply told them to do what was best. I heard the mortgage read before it was signed; not afterward. I never had it in my hands. Penfield and Barr are Sam's attorneys, and my counsel.

Re-direct: Have heard that Judge McClellan has commenced an attachment suit against Sam, and siezed all of Sam's property. Only know it from common reports. Don't know anything about it of my own knowledge. Have heard something about Yates having commenced a $10,000 suit. Remember that there was a damage suit brought for the killing of Amos Bachtel and Laura Lowe, and heard something about there being attachment proceedings in connection with it.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 28.

Old Mrs. Deeters was asked a few more questions. She said she had got Mr. Bachtel to write to her daughters as to Sam's condition.

Mrs. Rebecca Emerick, sister of the defendant, testified She was 11 years old when her father deserted the family. The mother had since cared for the six children. The mother had worked both indoors and out. Mrs. Emerick had received a postal from Bachtel, which she had destroyed, but it read something like this:

Mrs. Boyer, your brother Sam is very much unbalanced in his mind, and has been for some time; he needs treatment; you had better come home and see about it; when you come don't let him know I have written you this card.

(Witness' first husband was Joseph Boyer.) She destroyed the postal card. When she went to see Sam, he complained of pain in head and back, and said he could hear voices, etc. He said, "That old man Yates is the biggest d——d thief I ever saw." Here in cross examination Judge McClellan asked if she had not told Mrs. Bachtel about twenty years ago about having had trouble with her mother in which she struck her mother with a poker. Objected to and ruled out. Old Mrs. Deeters was recalled. She and the last witness said Sam often claimed he could hear voices, even of persons at a distance, and at times thought someone was going to kill him. Sometimes got up in the night and ran out, fearing robbers were after him. One night he fired a shot while out and told her two men had taken up a plank in the barn to look for his money. At one of these times he caught her and threw her across the room and ran out of the house. Both she and her daughter Rebecca believed Sam unsound in mind.

THURSDAY.

The court started in to hear "expert testimony," that is, doctors who think they know samething about insanity. Mrs. Emerick, who was mentioned in yesterday's reports, is managing the financial part of Deeters defense. She has put aside an even $1,000 which is to be used by the lawyers for the defense to secure "expert witnesses" to swear that they believe Deeters insane.

The first doctor called was Dr. Gilbert, of Kendallville. Attorney Barr asked asked him a hypothetical or suppositious question that took just one hour to state, and at its close asked Gilbert if a man in such a supposed case would or would not be insane. Gilbert said he would be insane. Anyone can see the value of such an answer. How many men can listen to a question an hour long, and at its close remember much of what the question contained? We believe that much time is being thus needlessly consumed. Gilbert was on the stand all day, and in that time talked a good deal about the various types of insanity, etc. The counsel for the state had the hour-long question copied in full and examined on each point. This caused many debates between opposing counsel, many appeals to Judge Powers and many "exceptions" to rulings by the judge. These "exceptions are carefully noted, so they can be used by the defense to secure an appeal in case Deeters should be convicted. Of course these appeals are not always taken, but in case they should want to appeal, the "exceptions" would be useful. Mr. Barr stated to-day that he thought the defense would stop as soon as they got through with their "experts," though they might call up old Mrs. Deeters again. The state, however, has many more witnesses to use for rebuttal.

Dr. McCaskey, of Ft. Wayne, was also examined. The same long question was put to him "It occupies over three columns of solid brevier type in the Angola Republican.) In answer to the question, the Doctor said he thought such a man to be of unsound mind. Judge McClellan, for the state, asked if it might not be that such a person could simulate or pretend to be insane, but the Doctor thought that in such a case it could be detected. Here Judge McClellan asked the doctor what he would say of a party who sat and looked down while the subject of observation, but so soon as he got away from the observers he read and conversed freely and changed his demeanor. The doctor thought such a state of facts might indicate a simulation of insanity but would not necessarily do so.

Judge McClellan had propounded a hypothetical question to Dr. Gilbert, Wednesday, embodying the fact that the defendant had for years wanted to get married; that he overheard Mrs. Lowe make some statement reflecting on his character to a lady whom he wished to marry; that such lady afterwards refused to accept his attentions; that from that time on he refused to speak to Mrs. Lowe, who was one of his near neighbors, and had been his school mate, and that he did not speak to her for two years; that he even went to the home of Mrs. Lowe to see her husband and at one time stayed all night but refused to speak to her; that to assist him in getting a wife he built a splendid house on his farm, and that when he had been beating his mother Mrs. Lowe, whom he blamed for his lack of matrimonial success, came upon the scene and was a witness to his disgraceful act, and that defendant then went and got his revolver and shot Mrs. Lowe. The doctor was then asked what he would say upon the facts thus stated as to defendant's insanity at the time of the shooting. On these facts he said there was nothing to indicate insanity.

FRIDAY.

The state asked McCasky the long question by sections, taking a section at a time, and asking, "If this part were stricken from the question would you still consider him insane?" But the defense finally objected to this plan, but the court over ruled the objection. Penfield said, "If you pluck one hair from a man's head, will he not still have a head of hair?" Judge Powers here stated that jurymen's wives must write no more letters to their husbands, but must write to the judge, and confine themselves to business, so that jurors would have their minds at ease and clear. This was good advice. He said he would let them know if the men got sick.

SATURDAY.

But little was done except to go over a lot of "expert" business with the doctors who had been called, and the court adjourned at noon to meet Monday afternoon.

MONDAY, TUESDAY AND WEDNESDAY.

There is nothing new for these days. The examination of expert doctors is going on to prove that Deeters is insane. Dr. Nusbaum of this place was on the stand a long time Tuesday. Shuman received a compliment in the Republican for skill in cross examining this witness, and at the close of it, Deeters remarked that if Shuman kept on he would get into the lunatic asylum himself.

CIRCLING THE GLOBE.

CONCISE HISTORY OF SEVEN DAYS' DOINGS.

Four Miners Killed in a Pennsylvania Mine—A Bomb Outrage at Chicago—Troy, N. Y., the Scene of a Bloody Election Riot—Riot at Youngstown, Ohio.

ANOTHER HORROR.

Pennsylvania Has Another Mine Disaster.

Four men out of a gang of nine shaft sinkers were killed in the Richmond shaft, in the northern part of Scranton, Pa. The accident was caused by the fall of a shelf of rock from the side of the shaft, near the bottom, and a consequent explosion of a blower of gas. The victims are:

THOMAS HOLWILL, married, wife and child, burned to death.

RICHARD HUGHES, single, 27 years.

JAMES NORTHEN, single, 29 years.

ALBERT RICHARDS, single, 24 years.

Hughes, Northen, and Richards were crushed to death by the rock. Five others in the shaft made their escape, though some suffered slight bruises in their scramble for safety. The men were at work at the bottom of the shaft, almost 400 feet from the surface. They had but recently opened up the Clark vein, and were clearing away the coal at the foot of the shaft. Above them hung a bell-like piece of rock, which projected slightly from the side of the shaft. Suddenly the rock gave way. Three were caught and crushed to instant death. Chargeman Holwill rushed away as the fall came, with five others of the men. He went further into the opening than his fellow workmen. He still carried his naked lamp on his head. Instantly there was a shoot of flame that enveloped him in a blaze and with a cry of horror he sank down helpless and all afire. The others tried to put out the flames at their own peril, but before they succeeded he was dead. The fire-damp quickly gathered and it was only by prompt action that these survivors succeeded in reaching the foot of the shaft and signaling the engineer were hoisted to the surface.

ELECTION RIOTS.

Men Shot Down in the Streets of Troy.

Troy (N. Y.) special: Never has Troy witnessed a more exciting municipal election than that which took place Tuesday. There had been scenes of disorder at many of the polling places, but the outrageous disregard for law reached its height at noon, when one Republican was murdered and another was seriously wounded.

Robert and William Ross were the victims. They were among the citizens who gathered at the polls in the third district of the Thirteenth Ward to see that the election law was not violated. The voting had been spirited at this district, but not until the appearance of a gang of repeaters was there a ripple of excitement. A man who had no right to cast a vote then presented himself at the polls and demanded ballots. The Republicans who challenged him were ejected and the applicant was afterward pushed into the street by other Republicans. Then bullets flew through the air and four men were struck. Prominent among the fighters were "Bat" Shea, John McGough, and Jerry Cleary, who drew pistols, and so did others in the crowd. Bystanders say that Robert Ross was knocked down with a club, and while he was lying face down, the assassin sent a bullet into his brain. Another who fell was William Ross, the murdered man's brother. He was shot in the neck and his condition is critical. "Bat" Shea was slightly wounded. A fourth man was shot, who it is reported, is John McGough.

Riot at Youngstown.

There was a small riot at Youngstown, Ohio, recently, as the result of an attempt made by the Youngstown Electric Street Railway Company to resume operations with non-union men. After running out two cars the company decided to abandon the attempt for the day. The whole railroad has been tied up by a strike for a week. Dynamite cartridges were exploded on the tracks, and thousands of idle men hurled insulting epithets at the men on the cars. The cars were abandoned.

A Daring Thief.

S. J. Roebech, a grocer of Omaha, was held up and mortally wounded in his store by a highwaymen. At the point of a revolver the footpad demanded money, and on the merchant's refusal, shot him down. He then emptied the cash box, and standing off several persons in the store, escaped.

Bomb Outrage.

Chicago special: Katie Day's house of ill fame was wrecked by a bomb which was thrown into the hallway. The inmates of the house were all asleep at the time of the explosion. No one was injured. The front portion of the house was completely wrecked and the place rendered uninhabitable.

Returning with Stores.

Colon special: Two British schooners, loaded with arms and stores, recovered from the wreck of the United States cruiser, Kearsarge, have left the scene of the wreck for the island of Grand Cayman. The position of the Kearsarge on Roncador Reef is not changed.

Mr. Harrison's First Lecture.

Menlo Park (Cal.) special: Ex-President Harrison's introductory lecture was delivered to an audience of students, the faculty, and few visitors the other evening.

New York Elections.

Returns from nearly all parts of New York show Republicans successful in the municipal election. Republicans were successful at Rochester, Niagara Falls, Middletown, Gloverville, Amsterdam, and the Democrats at Rome.

To Investigate a Lynching.

The grand jury at Lebanon, Ind., was instructed to investigate the recent attempt to lynch the negro Hall.

Gladstone's Successor.

London special: It is officially announced that the Queen has accepted the resignation of Mr. Gladstone, and that Her Majesty has summoned Lord Rosebery and offered him the post of Prime Minister in Mr. Gladstone's stead. It is further officially announced that Lord Rosebery has accepted the position. Most of the members of the Cabinet were present at the dinner given by the Earl of Kimberly. Lord Rosebery, however, did not attend. It is understood that Mr. Edward Majoribanks, the Liberal Whip, to whom a Radical deputation, headed by Mr. Henry Labouchere, protested against the succession of Lord Rosebery to the Premiership, has replied to the protestants, addressing his reply to Mr. Labouchere. Mr. Majoribanks submitted the protest to the Ministers, and his reply is said to have been couched in conciliatory language, his very evident purpose being to prevent, if possible, the threatened defection of the Radicals.

DEADLY DUEL.

Two Men Instantly Killed, and Another Fatally Wounded.

Kosciusko (Miss.) special: A shooting affray resulting from a long newspaper controvesy occurred here between W. P. Ratliffe and S. A. Jackson, both members of the Legislature from Attalla County, of which Kosciusko is the county seat, but of different politics, Jackson being a straight-out Democrat, while Ratliffe is the Populist leader in Central Mississippi. The controversy, which arose over the election of a United States Senator, has been growing hotter and hotter for some time past. In the Kosciusko Star, the Democratic paper of the county, Mr. Jackson denounced Ratliffe as a liar. A meeting between the two men was feared, and it came about. When they encountered each other they drew their pistols and fired. It is somewhat difficult to give the facts about the shooting, because there were few witnesses of it and these, except Ratliffe, were killed or fatally wounded. When the firing was over it was found that Jackson was dead, shot through the head; that Sam Russell, a farmer living near Kosciusko, was dead, having been shot in the mouth, and that William E. Sanders, also a farmer, was fatally wounded, being shot through the thigh. Neither Russell nor Sanders had any connection with the difficulty, being merely onlookers who happened to be present when the shooting occurred. From the character of their wounds it seems certain that they were shot by Ratliffe, who has two dead and one fatally wounded to the credit of his pistol.

THE ROBY RACE TRACK.

Governor Matthews Says It Will Be Suppressed.

Indianapolis special: The prediction is made at the State Executive Deparment that the career of the race track at Roby will soon be at an end. The department has been in correspondence with the officials of Lake County, but the information received has been held in secret by the Governor. In response to instructions from the Governor, the Judge of the Lake Circuit Court has called the Grand Jury in special session, and the violations of the law at Roby will be inquired into. The Governor does not think the investigation will be carelessly made, as Judge Gillette is not in sympathy with the race track. Two representatives of the Roby Association called on the Governor recently and held a brief conference with him.

It is one thing, the Governor says, to talk of his taking charge of the suppression of the race track, and another thing to do it. To utilize the militia in it is to assume a serious responsibility, as well as a heavy expense to the State. He believes the Lake County officers will accomplish the work without great difficulty. He has assured the Roby representatives that if the County can not handle the law breakers, the State can and will do it.

BOLD ROBBERS

Compel a Bank Official to Open the Vault.

"Hold up your hands," was the prelude to a daring bank robbery which occurred at Dexter, Mich. Two masked men, with revolvers, compelled the assistant cashier, C. C. Gregory, to open the vault, and escaped with between $3,000 and $4,000, after having sandbagged Gregory, leaving him in an unconscious condition. Gregory, who acts as janitor also, was sweeping out the office, when he was confrontrd by two masked men with revolvers. He was ordered to open the vault, and with two revolvers threatening his life, he did so. Just as the bolt slid back, Gregory was knocked senseless and was unconscious when found an hour later by Cashier Newkirk. It is thought the robbers were frightened away before they had time to secure all the money in the vault as some of it was found scattered about the floor. The bank estimates its loss at between $3,000 and $4,000. There is no clew. The Dexter Saving Bank was recently organized with a capital of $20,000.

NOT ENDED.

The Revolution in Brazil Likely Yet to Be Troublesome.

Rio Janeiro special: On all sides here the people are congratulating themselves that the election passed off quietly, but the action of President Peixoto seems to denote that the end of the revolution is not so near as first supposed. President Peixoto has issued two important decrees, the first calling for an increase in the strength of the regular army which will impose additional burdens of taxation upon the people. The second provides that persons accused of treason be tried by military law. It is announced that martial law will not be proclaimed so long as the situation remain as tranquel as now.

The Insurgents now say frankly they are fighting for their lives, and it is believed if the Peixoto fleet made a bold swoop down from Bahia and engage the Insurgent fleet, the result would be a prompt and thorough victory for the Government.

Election in Iowa.

Municipal elections were held in a number of cities of Iowa. The vote was light. The Republicans gain several cities that have been steadily Democratic and in some others gained slightly in councilmen. The largest gain was in Iowa City, but in Cedar Rapids the Democrats elected the Mayor and all the city officers save the Treasurer. At Muscatine, the Democrats elected the Mayor. At Burlington, the result of a Democratic split, Eugene Buttes, Republican, was elected Mayor, the first Republican Mayor since 1886. At Sioux City the entire Republican ticket was elected. In Council Bluffs a Republican Mayor and nearly all the city officers were elected. At Corning the Democrats elected a Mayor, the Republicans the Recorder and Treasurer.

A Mob at Bay.

A mob of 200 men attempted to force the jail at Stroudsburg, Pa., with the purpose of lynching Richard Prior, the negro who, a week ago, murdered Christian Ehlers, a storekeeper in Monroe County. The attack was made at 2 o'clock in the morning, but was repulsed by the Sheriff, who held the mob at bay until the police appeared. The mob retired in a sullen mood, and it is feared they will be reinforced and will yet succeed in breaking into the jail and secure the murderer.

A Mute Killed.

As passenger train No. 5 was coming down the steep grade at the fair grounds, Troy, Ohio, the engineer saw a man walking on the track. He gave the signals and reversed the engine, but could not stop. The engine struck him and dragged him 700 yards. He was instantly killed. Both legs were cut off below the knees and fearfully mangled. He proved to be a deaf and dumb man named Miner Dye. He leaves a widow and two children in destitute circumstances.

White House Crank.

Early the other morning a middle aged man of respectable appearance, presented himself at the White House and notified the guards that he was Abraham Julius Kisler of Baltimore, and he had come in obedience to a divine revelation to take charge of the building. He called attention to the populist movement to secure control of the other branches of the Government and its ultimate success, and declared positively that he had been empowered to save the legislative mansion and turn it over to the Jews for the safety of its contents both material and immaterial. He was not embarrassed when his credentials were demanded, but began issuing orders and acting in such a threatening way that he was arrested and sent to the nearest station.

Skinned Alive.

Barboursville (Ky.) special: It is reported from Harlan County that Len Tye, the negro who murdered Miss Bryant, near Williamsburg, about a year ago, has recently visited Harlan County, where he kidnapped a farmer's daughter and kept her secreted in the woods for some time until a party of hunters found her. They waited for his return, when they caught and tied him and proceeded to skin him alive, and before he was dead the girl built a fire on his head and he was roasted alive. It is said he confessed the murder of Miss Bryant and that he had taken three other victims in Kentucky and Tennessee and kept them in the same manner he had the Harlan County girl, until they died for want of shelter and protection.

A Convict's Crime.

Joseph Wallwitz, alias Jno. Malwitz, a burglar serving a twenty-year term in the State Prison, at Trenton, N. J., attempted to escape at 1:30 o'clock the other morning, and in his efforts to secure his freedom shot and killed Deputy Keeper James B. Lippincott, one of the most trusted under officials of the prison, and a man of large family. No more daring or desperate attempt on the part of a prisoner to get outside of Jersey's great penal institution is chronicled in its history, and the same may be said of the ingenious character of the effort. Wallwitz is a Jersey City man. In the spring of 1891 he robbed a house in Union County, and it was then that he received the twenty year sentence.

Strikers Burn Cars.

Charleston (W. Va.) special: Twenty loaded cars of the Cheasapeake and Ohio road were burned by strikers at Paint Creek, ten miles below Eagle. The cars were standing on a switch. A general outbreak is momentarily expected as the strikers are becoming emboldened by their recent success with the torch.

Col. Wyant, under guard of a full company of militia, was taken from Montgomery a prisoner, to be tried on the charge of shooting at the strikers. Military protection was made necessary from the fact that 800 to 1,000 armed strikers are scattered at points along the route to Montgomery and Fayetteville and swear they will lynch Wyant.

Small-Pox in Chicago.

Chicago special: The reported threats of the Indiana health officials to quarantine against Chicago is creating a considerable stir. A conference is to be held at the Grand Pacific Hotel to discuss measures for fighting the small-pox plague and protecting adjacent States. Secretaries Probst, Metcalf, and Scott, of the Ohio, Indiana and Illinois health boards, Health Commissioner Reynolds and a number of leading doctors are to be present. Seven new cases of small-pox were reported here. The hospital is crowded and the health authorities expect March to show an increase of the disease.

$15,000 in Full.

Battle Creek (Mich.) special: J. Harvey Smith, wife and daughter Nellie, the last victims of the Chicago and Grand Trunk wreck of October 20 last, have left for their home in Fort Plain, N. Y. They have been in the hospital here ever since. Their son Frank was killed in the wreck. Before starting the Grand Trunk Company settled with the family and gave them a check for $15,000 in full for all damages, including the death of the son.

Harrison in California.

Ex-President Harrison and party arrived at San Jose, Cal. A large crowd assembled at the depot, and the members of the party were given a hearty welcome while leaving the cars and going to the carriages in waiting. The visitors were driven at once to the Hotel Vendome, where an elegant suite of rooms had been prepared.

Firemen Hurt While Doing Duty.

At Waterloo, N. Y., fire in the cellar of the Towsley house block did about $25,000 damages. Two firemen fell through the sidewalk openings and were badly wounded.

THE COUNTRY IS SAFE.—Puck.

GIVE US FREEDOM.

FREEDOM IS RIGHT—RESTRICTION IS WRONG.

Democratic Party Is Laboring for Freedom of Trade, Freedom of Action and Freedom of Speech—Republicans Monkey with a Buzz-Saw.

Democracy Is Freedom.

Americans are not this winter up to their normal mark of confidence in themselves. If they realized how much afraid of our future the other nations are, they would be more sanguine and would adopt measures to hasten the commercial supremacy that is coming pretty fast in spite of moss-back endeavors to drive it back.

Freedom stimulates the energies of a people. If laws and institutions forbid or discourage a change of condition, a man will not fight for improvement or fit himself for it.

Freedom gives the greatest incentive and opportunity to superior gifts. We have in America the best gifts any nation has received. Within our own borders we have the highest freedom for the people ever granted by political institutions, and we have a boon never before enjoyed by such a territory—absolute freedom of trade.

Political freedom and the absence of social caste have stimulated our people to immense energy. Freedom of trade among our States has stimulated production and exchange. Agriculture has spread without restriction, and has produced the crops it pleased. Iron manufactures have settled where the facilities suited. They have moved southward as opportunity invited. They have taken Lake Superior ores for steel when a new process made them the best. The manufacture of agricultural implements grew to great proportions in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. Where harbors, water courses and valleys favored, centers of travel and trade have been built.

Our superior gifts and superior freedom have encouraged us until we produce more than we know what to do with—until our products cheapen themselves by oversupply.

One of the things we now most need is a new incentive. Extending our freedom of trade is our next play. We are commercially the most powerful of nations, and we are foolish if we do not use our power.

Unless we do extend our freedom of trade we must suspend our advance in the use of machinery and pause in our farming production. We must have more trade or less industry; We must have more trade or less profit—more trade or lower wages.

European economists look at the sluggish industrial habits of their laboring populations and foresee the conquest of the trade world by the United States. They do not conceal their belief that with free trade the United States, which produce under the greatest advantages, will be able to deal with all other nations at an advantage. The United States have had absolute free trade among themselves and have become a commercial unit, so firmly has free communication knit them together. They utilize their resources without an internal hindrance except those meddling laws which human stupidity will still pass occasionally in spite of the loss to public welfare.

The one great drawback is restriction at the frontiers. Chicago can ship to Jacksonville, St. Louis can build a bridge in Mississippi, Boston can send calico to Seattle without asking a question of the Government. But Boston cannot deal with St. John, Chicago with Toronto, St. Louis with Mexico except against the efforts of two Governments to make trade impossible.

No other nation has so much to make by free trade. Our advantages are so great that we can absorb the capital of the world by just two additions—absolute free trade and absolute honesty in all commercial transactions, including the credit of our currency.

With absolute free trade and absolute honesty, capital could not afford to invest anywhere else on a large scale. No other people can do with capital what we can do. No other people can handle food products or manufacture staple machine-made articles at such low cost.

Democracy is freedom and strict equity between man and man. It must forever labor for freedom of trade, freedom of action and freedom of speech. Let it work out the salvation of this country and it will give the highest profits and the greatest wealth the people are capable of obtaining. It will make New York equal to two Londons and put ten Manchesters in the Southern States.

Freedom is right and is wealth. Restriction is wrong, unmanly and ungenerous and is poverty.—St. Louis Republic.

Defeat Without Dishonor.

There is absolutely no foundation for the charge that the New York Sun brings against the administration in connection with the recent Republican victory in Pennsylvania. Indeed, it must strike the careless observer of events, as well as the careful student of public matters, and industrial and business conditions, as supremely ridiculous. The Republican victory in Pennsylvania is the logical sequence of the hard times, and is no more to be construed as a repudiation of the principles upon which Mr. Cleveland was elected than would a prohibition victory in Ontario.

If the Sun will look about it, study the signs of returning prosperity that are everywhere present, and that only wait on favorable senatorial action on the Wilson measure, it must see the absurdity of its position. From all directions, north, south, east and west, comes news of resumption in mill and mine, and from the various trade centers we have the information that buyers are plenty, but are made cautious through the inaction of the Senate on a measure that the people have learned to look upon as the law of the land, and have arranged their various enterprises accordingly. Republican maladministration of the government's finance, coupled with the stupidity which resulted in a tariff law, the prohibitive character of which cut our revenues down to almost nothing, resulted in the panic of last summer, and the deprivations of the people have come. Unreasoning as they are, they strike at the nearest object to them when the hard times hurt them, and that, of course, is the party in power. The Sun knows this as well as anybody can tell it, but allows its disappointment over the conservatism of the Wilson bill to inspire an attack upon the administration as unjust as it is undemocratic and disloyal.—Buffalo Times.

"Prices for Export Only."

Hopkins of Illinois, Grosvenor of Ohio, and two or three other Republicans in the House were foolhardy enough the other day to challenge the statement made by Money, of Mississippi that our manufactures of agricultural implements are sold cheaper to foreigners than to our own farmers. Congressman Money quoted many instances mentioned in "Protection's Home Market," a pamphlet issued by the Reform Club. The Republicans sneered at the statements which they said had been exploded in both the House and Senate in the Fifty-second Congress.

At last Congressman Warner, of New York, got the floor. Here is a part of what he said:

"The pamphlet from which the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. Money) read was made up under my personal supervision, and I vouch for every item in it as truthfully stating the home and the foreign price for the identical article, taken from the identical lot, the only difference being that in one case the manufacturer had the right of delivering it 'free on board' ship for export to see that it was not sold in this country, and that in the other case by letting it go out of his shop without shipping it himself, he did permit it to compete with the American goods—in the first case the prices were low, and the second case the prices were high. * * * There is not an item in that pamphlet as to which the proof was not piled up in the shape of irrefutable documents, including in many cases the written confession (or an explanation which was a confession) of the very man who had sent the goods abroad for export at a lower price than they were sole in the home market, and who made a practice of so doing. So far as concerns the paper from which I am informed the gentleman from Mississippi quoted, I got that from Brazil. Of two other copies, one from the East Indies and one from Holland, one was lost and the other was stopped in transitu."

Mr. Warner then quoted at length from several journals devoted entirely to the export trade. He then quoted a statement from the Hon. Jeremiah M. Rusk made in 1890 in which he said:

"I had an opportunity to take some stock in the combination (American Harvester Company), and I know what inducements were offered. An investigation will show that this same combination is now selling, or offering to sell, machinery in Russia and Australia and other wheat-growing countries at a lower figure than they do in this country."

Mr. Warner showed that plows sold here for $18 are sold in South America for $9. Mowers sold here for $65 are worth $30 in South America. Cultivators sold in our "protected" home market for $30 are sold to the unprotected foreigner for $22.

He quoted from numerous irrefutable authorities until the Republicans were silenced. They will in future be more careful when fooling around this buzz-saw of "prices for export only."

There is no doubt as to the truth of this terrible charge against protection. Mr. A. E. Stout, a farmer living near Trenton, N. J., while on a visit to his brother in England, saved money by purchasing American made agricultural implements in England and bringing them back with him. American sewing machines have been bought in Germany and brought here at a cost of considerably less than the machines could be obtained for here. The Remington typewriter is, or was, openly sold at $100 to New-Yorkers and at $75 to foreigners. It was only a few weeks ago that Alfred Dolge, the protected millionaire manufacturer of piano felts and supplies thus excused himself and his protected brethren for giving lower prices to foreigners:

"It is a fact known to the commercial world that manufacturers will always sell at less prices for export than for home consumption. They will often be satisfied to obtain the bare cost of labor and material because the expense of running their factories is the same whether they work for export or not. Every importer and exporter will admit the truth of this statement."

Tax the Wealth.

The question of income tax vs. tariff on sugar is briefly summed up in these words: "Shall we tax a man on what he has or on what he eats?" True Democracy admits of but one answer. Give us the tax on wealth.—Oakland County Post.

KEEP your heart full of sunshine, and God will soon give you a face to match it.

ROSEBERY CONTROLS

IS NOW PRIME MINISTER OF ENGLAND.

Announcement of Gladstone's Retirement Is Made by the Queen in a Court Circular—Her Majesty Expresses No Regret—Sketch of His Career.

Gives Up His Office.

Mr. Gladstone has resigned the British Premiership, the leadership of his party, and his seat in the Cabinet. He will retain his seat in the House of Commons a few months longer, probably until a dissolution of Parliament, which cannot be delayed beyond the present year. Archibald Philip Primrose, Earl of Rosebery, is the Grand Old Man's successor.

Mr. Gladstone retires full of years and honors, with the reputation of having accomplished more for the common people of Great Britain and Ireland than any British statesman of any time or age. Entering Parliament sixty-one years ago as the nominee of a Tory Duke for a pocket borough he has advanced politically every year since that time. He has always been progressive. Hailed in his younger days as the rising hope of the stern and unbending Tories he quitted their service for that of the people when the reform of the corn laws was proposed. He became the associate of Cobden in that great agitation and soon outstripped Cobden and his more radical colleague, John Bright. He took a firm attitude in behalf of university reform, and was an eloquent advocate in favor of the removal of the Jewish disabilitids of 1847 and 1848. Serving in the various Whig ministries between 1848 and 1860, he devoted himself to questions of finance, in which he became the acknowledged master. He surpassed Bright and Beale in the energy with which he urged the second reform bill. He championed the ballot act. He disestablished the church of the Irish minority. He cooperated with the late Mr. Forster in establishing the English public school system, and later with Mr. Acland in making that system free and popular. The Irish tenants owe him the greatest debt of gratitude. He gave them security of tenure at a fair rent and a proprietary interest in their farms. His crowning glory, as he himself thought, was the passage of the Irish home rule bill through the British Commons after sixty years' agitation in Ireland and seven in Great Britain. To say that he has been the greatest reformer of the age would be to express it inadequately. He has probably been the greatest reformer of the English speaking race. The Grand Old Man now retires from public life in the 85th year of his age and in the sixty-second of his public usefulness.

The Queen's announcement of the retirement of Mr. Gladstone to the people is contained in the court circular and is written by a court official. The statement is made that the Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone had an audience of the Queen and tendered his resignation, which was graciously accepted by her Majesty. It adds that the Queen has summoned Earl Rosebery, K. G., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and offered him the post of Prime Minister, vacated by the Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone, member of Parliament, and that Lord Rosebery has accepted her Majesty's offer.

Prime Minister Roseberry held his first cabinet council at his residence. All the ministers were present except Mr. Asquith and Mr. Henry Fowler, the president of the local government board, who, however, will retain their offices. The council was in session for only a short time. Upon its conclusion Lord Roseberry sent a message to the Queen, submitting the names of the members of the new cabinet.

AN EXODUS TO CANADA.

A Colony of Hungarians to Settle on Northwestern Farms.

The eyes of the Hungarians of the United States are at this time fixed upon Rev. John Kovacs, pastor of the Grace Reformed Church of Pittsburg. Rev. Mr. Kovacs is a Hungarian himself and he is soon to head a colony of 100 families of his countrymen into the Canadian Northwest, there to settle and follow the occupation for which nature fitted them, which is farming. The exodus will take place about April 1 and several American cities will thus lose part of their foreign population. Among those from which the largest number will be taken are New York, Buffalo and Newark. Only three families are going from Pittsburg, but quite a number will leave the coke region in the vicinity of Uniontown.

The idea of getting the Hungarians in America to settle on the farming lands of the West has been a pet scheme with Mr. Kovacs ever since he came to this country and settled in Pittsburg two and a half years ago. He says the Hungarians are poorly adapted to the work in factories, at the coke ovens and in the mines which they have to perform. They were farmers at home, and he would have them farmers here. He has been negotiating with the Canadian Government for over a year, and, having at last perfected arrangements, the settlement of the land will begin. The Government is very anxious to get settlers and will give each one 160 acres of land on long time, a cash payment of $10 being all that is required. Mr. Kovacs has seen the land and says it is very good. A few of the settlers are to come from Hungary.

The general opinion is that he was held up for his money and resisted and was shot. His father is a lumber merchant in Cairo, Neb. Young Still bore a good reputation in the community.

THE NATION'S SOLONS.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed, and Acted Upon.

Doings of Congress.

Resolutions were presented in the House Tuesday afternoon by Congressman Somers, of Wisconsin, to investigate the action of several United States Judges who have issued injunctions in railroad cases, most prominent among them Justice Brewer, of the Supreme Court. They include also United States Judge Taft, Judge Ricks, of Ohio; Judge Pardee, of Texas; Judge Beatty, of Idaho, and Judge Dundy, of Nebraska. These cases all involve the rights of laboring men to strike and the decisions which are called in question extend over a term of years. Mr. Bryan, of Nebraska, introduced in the House a bill to amend the Revised Statutes so as to permit in civil cases the verdict of three-fourths of the jurors constituting the jury to stand as the verdict of the jury and such a verdict to have the same force and effect as a unanimous verdict. Said Mr. Bryan: "Disagreements are usually caused by one or two members of the jury and a three-fourths verdict would settle most cases, making a great saving of costs." The Senate held another brief session in which nothing of importance was accomplished, and at 1:20 o'clock adjourned, after an executive session of half an hour, in order that the caucus might be continued.

After two weeks of obstruction Representative Bland on Wednesday finally secured the adoption of his motion to limit debate on the seignorage bill. A quorum having been secured, Mr. Outhwaite, from the Committee on Rules, reported a special order to discharge the committee of the whole from further consideration of the pending bill and providing that after two hours' consideration in the House the previous question should be considered as ordered on the bill and pending amendments no intervening motion to be in order. He demanded the previous question. The speaker had his name called on the demand of the previous question on the adoption of the special order and it was sustained 170 to 10 one more than a quorum. The vote was then taken on the adoption of the special order. The quorum was lost on the vote on the adoption of the special order—165 to 11, three short of a quorum. Mr. Outhwaite, stating that this question would come up as soon as the house convened again moved an adjournment. It was carried. The senate held a two hours' session the whole of which was given to a speech by Senator Frye in opposition to President Cleveland's Hawaiian policy. After a short executive session the senate adjourned.

The Bland bill for the coinage of the silver seignorage and the silver bullion in the Treasury passed the House Thursday by a vote of 167 to 130. The bill as passed was in the nature of a substitute for the original text of the measure, but the changes do not affect the material features of the bill. An analysis of the vote shows that 140 Democrats, 19 Republicans, and 8 Populists (total 167) voted for it, and 79 Republicans and 51 Democrats (total 130) voted against it. The bill for the rescue of the armament of the wrecked Kearsarge passed just before adjournment. An unimportant session of the Senate took place, confirmation of the following nominations being the only feature: Granville Stuart, of Montana, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Paraguay and Uruguay; collector of customs, Martin J. Russell, Chicago. Collectors of Internal Revenue—James W. Hunter, Fifth District of Illinois. Iowa: Bert J. Wellman at Manchester. Illinois: Thomas A. McIlvaine at Tuscola, Thomas E. Garner at Paris, Charles C. Chain at Bushnell, Julian J. Beall at Mattoon, Christian W. Barnhart at Wilmington. The Senate adjourned to meet next Monday.

The House Friday entered upon the consideration of appropriation bills. The fortification bill, carrying something over $2,000,000, was passed in twenty-five minutes and then the pension appropriation bill was taken up. An altercation occurred between Mr. Meredith of Virginia and Mr. Funk of Illinois over the former's attempt to prove that there were many fraudulent pensions on the rolls which almost resulted in a personal collision. Mr. Meredith, who was the aggressor, rushed over to the place where Mr. Funk was standing and shook his fist in the latter's face. Hot words were spoken, but friends interfered, and the Speaker restored order before any blows were struck. Mr. Bankhead, Chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings, offered a resolution for the appointment of a subcommittee to go to Chicago and investigate the Post-office Building there, with a view to determining the question of its safety, etc. Mr. Bankhead explained the pressing necessity for examination. The amount involved was large and the committees were unwilling to make a recommendation without a personal investigation. The resolution carried an appropriation of $1,500. It was passed.

The debate on the pension appropriation bill continued all day Monday in the House, and at times considerable spirit was displayed. The principal speakers were Messrs. Dolliver, Hepburn, Enloe, and Cannon. The Senate held a short session, and but little business of importance was transacted. A brief debate on silver was precipitated by the intention expressed by the Vice President to refer the Bland seignorage bill, which had just been received from the House, to the Finance Committee. Mr. Stewart, of Nevada, opposed this disposition of the bill, and asked that it be allowed to lie on the table subject to being called up at any time. This was finally ordered. Mr. Stewart at the same time offered a free silver amendment to the bill. The only other event of interest was the offering by Mr. Morgan, of Alabama, of a resolution looking to the appointment of a tariff commission, which he offered as an amendment to the tariff bill. A number of bills of minor importance were passed. An executive session of a little more than an hour was held and a number of nominations confirmed.

How to Train a Canary Bird.

As soon as the young canary is large enough to sit upon a perch in the cage take it in the hand every day, fondle the little thing, feed it with the fingers, and in the course of two weeks you will find it at the cage door ready to come out when you approach. Let it fly about the rooms, perch upon your shoulder, and in time you will notice that it will be doing all sorts of things that will amuse and interest you. By this kind of training the birds will sing much sweeter, and in many ways repay you for your extra attention.

AT WAR WITH HERSELF.

The Story of a Woman's Atonement, by Charlotte M. Braeme.

CHAPTER XLI—Continued.

Was there ever such a scene of wealth, luxury, and magnificence? Leonie stood in a white muslin wrapper, her golden hair falling like a veil around her. On every side were spread out costly dresses and shining jewels. Leonie held in her hand a superb necklace of diamonds. She did not look up when Ethel entered the room.

"I know it is you, Ethel, by your footstep. I was just going to send for you to ask your advice."

Leonie was so deeply engrossed by her jewels that Ethel did not respond. She waited until her companion's attention was directed elsewhere.

"I am quite undecided as to what ornaments I shall wear to-night," said Leonie. "I am going to a concert. People have always so much time to study one another's dresses at a concert. Mine is the palest, prettiest pink. What will go best with it, Ethel—diamonds or pearls? pearls have a chaste appearance, but diamonds are most brilliant. I want to look well to-night."

Still Miss Dacre made no answer, and Leonie, looking up to discover the reason of her friend's silence, was struck by the grave, serious expression of her face.

"What is the matter, Ethel? You look graver than a judge."

"I want to speak to you, Leonie. Put those diamonds away for a few minutes, and come here."

Leonie laid the necklace down, and as she did so Ethel Dacre reflected that it did not belong to her, and she felt something like sorrow for the girl who would have to part with so much that she loved.

Leonie laid down the necklace and moved to Ethel's side; she placed one white arm caressingly round the girl's neck, and said:

"Do not keep me long, darling; I must attend to my dress."

But there came no smile to Ethel's face, or cheerful word to her lips.

It was a pretty picture—the magnificent room, with its warmth of color, and the two girls in graceful attitudes—Ethel seated on a crimson lounging chair, her fair, eloquent face so grave and anxious; Leonie kneeling at her feet, her golden hair and white dress seeming to draw all the sunshine to themselves.

"Leonie," asked Ethel Dacre, gravely, "have you ever heard anything of a will by which the late Lord Charnleigh left everything he had in the world to Captain Flemyng?"

For a moment it seemed to Leonie that some cold hand had clutched her heart and stopped its beating; a red mist floated before her eyes, a sound as of rushing wind filled her ears, her face grew deathly white.

"A will!" she repeated, in low, hoarse tones. "No—what makes you ask me that?"

A sudden deadly fear came over her—an awful dread. Had the will she believed so securely hidden come to light? Had any one discovered it? The things she had loved so dearly seem to be already slipping from her grasp. Vanity, pride, love of power, all awoke with renewed vigor in her soul—she would not give up without a struggle.

"What makes you ask me that?" she repeated in a voice so full of fear that Miss Dacre was surprised at it.

"Because I have every reason to believe that such a will exists, or has existed."

"It is not true," cried Leonie—"it is false! You know—every one knows—there was no such will; every search was made, every precaution taken. Why do you talk so, Ethel? Who has said anything of the kind?"

"One dead has spoken, Leonie? It is a voice from Ulric Charnleigh's grave that tells of a will."

The white face grew even more ghastly; for one moment it seemed to Leonie Rayner that life itself was leaving her.

"I have found this," continued Ethel, holding out the letter for her to read; "it was hidden in the picture of Paul's mother. Read it, Leonie."

The young girl held out her hand for the paper. She tried to read it, but she tried in vain; the letters appeared lik a red mist before her eyes.

"I cannot see to read it, Ethel."

And Miss Dacre, taking the paper from the trembling hands, read the solemn words. As she read, Leonie crouched lower and lower, until she lay at last with her face hidden on the floor.

"The question is," said Ethel, in her clear, low voice, "was that will ever made, or did Lord Charnleigh die before carrying out his intention?"

Faint hope crept back to the weak heart. After all, then, no one knew that she had found the will; her secret was safe still; that letter could not oblige her to give up the inheritance.

"If the will was made," continued Miss Dacre, "where is it?"

"It was never made," said Leonie Rayner—a faint color crept back to her face, her lips lost their rigidness—"it was never made, Ethel, and you have frightened me for nothing."

"Frightened you?" said Miss Dacre.

"Yes—frightened me. You made me think that I should have to give up Crown Leighton."

Ethel Dacre had drawn back from her, grave wonder in her eyes, a faint flush in her face.

"Made you think so, Leonie! Do you not think so still?"

"Certainly not; that letter is not a will—it is not binding."

"Not binding?" repeated Miss Dacre. "Leonie, you are surely dreaming—you do not know what you say. Please answer me one question: to whom did old Lord Charnleigh intend to leave his estates—to Paul Flemyng or to you?"

"That is not worth discussing. I am entitled to them by law, and no one can take them from me."

Ethel Dacre drew herself up to her full height; she looked on the kneeling figure with eyes that were full of noble reproach.

"I am a soldier's daughter," she said, "and have but one word for such conduct as yours—you are dishonorable, Leonie Rayner. You are dishonorable," repeated Miss Dacre. "You are bound in conscience and in honor to give up to Paul Flemyng that which Ulric Charnleigh meant to be his."

"I am not bound to do anything of the kind, Ethel. None but a generous mortal like yourself would say so. Paul Flemyng himself would tell you the idea is preposterous."

"Paul Flemyng is a noble man," said Ethel Dacre. "Suppose he were in possession here, and had found such a letter, do you think that he would keep the inheritance one hour after reading the writer's wishes?"

"I should imagine that he would," answered Leonie; yet, even as the words left her lips, she knew they were false.

"You know he would not. Great Heaven, Leonie, are you mad, to dream that a mere quibble of the law could give a claim more sacred than this letter—the written wishes of the dead? A man's will is but the written expression of his wish. Can anything be plainer than this?"

"I am the late earl's nearest of kin. He died without a will, therefore all that he possed is rightly mine."

"Oh, Leonie, how falsely you reason! It is no more yours than mine. You know at this moment that there is a voice in your own heart telling you to give up at once what does not belong to you."

"I hear no such voice," said Leonie.

Ethel Dacre went to her; she looked long and earnestly in the beautiful colorless face.

"I know you are jesting, Leonie. You are not saying what you really think. You would not do wrong; and you know that to keep what is not yours is—as we said the other day—simply stealing. Surely you, with the Charnleigh blood running in your veins—you, Paul Flemyng's intended wife—a patent of nobility in itself—surely you would not write yourself down 'thief.'"

Leonie's face flushed crimson at such words. They were but the repetition of her own thoughts. She stood erect before Ethel.

"Do not repeat that word, Miss Dacre. There are limits to everything, and my forbearance will not go much further. You call me 'thief' because I choose to keep that which belongs to me by law and by right. Do not repeat the offense."

Yet even as she spoke so proudly and haughtily, in the depths of her own heart she knew the charge was true, and she loathed herself for her sin—she hated herself because she could not look Ethel Dacre in the face—she hated herself for the fierce humiliation that her own act had brought upon her.

"I am sorry to have offended you," said Miss Dacre. "When I came in to speak to you, offense was the last thing I thought of; but, Leonie, right is right, and it must be done at any cost. I shall never think again of what you have said. I can make allowance for the disappointment and irritation, which are but natural; but you must do right—you must give up to Paul Flemyng this inheritance, which is justly his."

"For the last time I tell you that I shall do nothing of the kind. I shall keep what is legally mine."

"It seems unnatural for a girl so young and beautiful as you to be mercenary and dishonorable," said Ethel, sadly. "Leonie, if you will not do right I must. I shall send Captain Flemyng the paper I have found."

"You will not dare to do anything of the kind," exclaimed Leonie.

"I must," said Miss Dacre, still more sadly. "I could not rest with such a secret on my conscience."

"But, Ethel," persisted Leonie, "why need you tell him? We are to be married very soon, are we not? Then all that I have will be his. Of what use is it to make all this stir and excitement? If I were going to marry any any one else, I could better understand your decision; but, when all will be his so soon, why disturb matters, why cause unending mischief?"

"You cannot be serious, Leonie—you cannot think of making such a compromise with your conscience. The inheritance is Captain Flemyng's, irrespective of any marriage, and you must admit that it ought to be made over to him at once."

A sneer that was not pleasant to see marred the beauty of Leonie Rayner's young face.

"You are very zealous, Miss Dacre. It is hard to believe that your pleadings are entirely disinterested. Perhaps you think that if Captain Flemyng were Earl of Charnleigh he would transfer his affections."

The noble face grew paler, but a bright light shone in Ethel Dacre's eyes.

"You are wrong. Paul Flemyng is a noble, loyal gentleman; he loves you—you alone—of all in the world; and he will never care for any one else—never, while the world stands. It is because he is so loyal that I wish you were different for his sake. I must tell him what I have found. He can please himself to act upon the discovery or not."

"You will understand that, if you interfere, all friendship between us is at an end, Miss Dacre."

"I shall be sorry for it, but nothing can give me so much sorrow as to find that I have been deceived in you. Oh, Leonie, I pray heaven to change your heart, to take from you that fatal worldly vanity which has transformed a noble disposition into one that has no nobility."

She waited a few minutes longer to see if Leonie would say anything more to her, and then, noticing the sullen, gloomy expression of the beautiful face, she went slowly from the room.

Before she had closed the door Florette entered.

"It is growing late, my lady; is it not time that you dressed for the concert?"

"I am not going," said Leonie; and there was something in the despondent tone of her voice that caused the maid to look into her mistress' face. She was startled and surprised at what she saw there.

"You are ill, my lady," she said; "your face is as white as death."

"I am tired," explained Leonie; and there went up from her heart a great yearning cry for rest from the warfare that seemed to have no end.

"Then you will not go out, to-night, my lady, at all?" questioned the maid—"you will not go to the ball?"

"No; give my compliments to Lady Fanshawe, and tell her I have changed my mind. I shall not go out to-night."

"Shall I take any message to Miss Dacre?"

"No," replied Leonie, with a sudden hardening of her voice and face—"no; I have nothing to say to Miss Dacre."

It seemed very strange to Florette. An hour since she had left her lady all eagerness, all anxiety about her dress—full of animation, and thinking only of the ball, she returned to find her pale, dispirited, and gloomy.

"Shall I put away the diamonds, my lady?" asked the girl.

Leonie looked at them, those shining, precious, costly gems. She had been so proud of them, she had thought to much of them, how could she give shem up?

"There is one thing I must not neglect," she said to herself. "I must go at once to Crown Leighton and destroy that will. I shall know no more peace until it has perished. I will go to-morrow, before Ethel can let Paul know what she has found; and then I can defy them all to make me give up that which the law has said is mine."

CHAPTER XLII.

Lady Fanshawe was at a loss—never since she had lived with Lady Charnleigh had such a message been sent to her.

She sent once or twice to inquire if there was anything Lady Charnleigh required; the answer was always the same, "no." So, while the great world went on its way, heartless, rejoicing, careless of all suffering, Leonie lay in a darkened room during the fierce, hard battle—at war with herself.

She had foreseen no such complication as this when she had decided on hiding the will. Would anyone have dreamed that the old earl would be filled with such a sentimental idea as to write a letter and place it in the picture of the woman he loved for her son to find?

"I am in reality no worse off than I was before," she thought; "finding the letter will prove of no consequence unless they can find the will—and that I will destroy."

Such a hard, worn, wearied look came over the young face as completely changed it. She was thinking of such desperate deeds. Thus far on the path, she would not retrace her steps, she would not look back. She had imperiled all that she held most dear—her heart's love, her soul's salvation; it was not probable that a few words from Ethel Dacre would change her.

"She called me dishonorable," said the girl; "what would she call me if she knew that I had not only found the will, but had hidden it—that I had willfully defrauded Paul Flemyng."

A keen, burning sense of humiliation filled her heart all the time. She thought with angry impatience of the brilliant scene where she had intended this night to reign a queen; she thought of the engagements of the morrow which she would be obliged to forego.

"I wish I had never seen Ethel Dacre," she said to herself. "I wish I had not let her touch that picture."

She imagined to herself how Ethel would write that very evening to Paul, inclosing the letter and bidding him hasten to Crown Leighton to search for the will. He would hasten eagerly thither, and, though she believed it safe and secure, who could tell what might happen? He might find it, and——

Then her conscience reproached her; she knew Paul too well to imagine that he would act in that way—his trust in her was too great, he was too loyal to himself to dream of disloyalty in her. Still it was impossible to say what Ethel would do; she would in any case make her discovery public, and then Leonie, who had enjoyed the homage paid her—who had enjoyed her sovereignty over men—would incur their contempt. There was no foreseeing what might happen, and the only safe plan she could think of was to go at once to Crown Leighton and destroy the will; then she would feel secure.

There was a train that left London quite early in the morning for Crown Leighton. She would go by that. There was no need to inform Lady Fanshawe; she could leave a note telling her that she had gone to Crown Leighton on important business, but she should be only a few days away. She rang the bell, and told Florette to prepare for the journey.

"Do not look so astonished, Florette; there is nothing so weak as always expressing great surprise. You will get up to go with me in the morning; but, remember, not one word to any one about the journey."

"I will not mention it, my lady," said the maid, quite subdued by the vehemence of her mistress.

"I am not the only person who has been compelled to take a sudden journey," rejoined Leonie, as though her conduct required vindication.

The maid was dismissed, and she was left alone—alone to watch through the long summer night and wait impatiently for the dawn. She could not sleep; the danger seemed too near her—too ever-present. There could be no more rest for her until the will was destroyed. She sat at the window—she listened to the distant roll of carriages—she watched the dark shades of night creep over the earth—she watched the stars glow one by one in the azure sky. And then, when her eyes had grown wearied, she lay down to rest—not to sleep—with sleep came dreams too horrible to bear—but to rest, until the early dawn should chase away the shades of night.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The Trogon.

In the woody solitudes of South America, concealed for the most part in the densest forests, is found that most curious bird, the Trogon, not less remarkable for the delicacy of his flesh than the beauty of his plumage.

They are sometimes seen on the summit of trees, but in general they prefer the center, where they remain a portion of the day without descending to the ground, or even to the lower branches. There they lie in ambush for the insects which pass within reach and seize them with dexterity.

They have many cries, from the sound of one of which their name is derived. Some of them express the syllable "pio," repeated many times in succession, with a powerful yet plaintive tone. Their accent reminds one of the wailings of a child who has lost its way, and it is thus that they cry to each other amid the silence of the forest.

In the mythology of the ancient Mexicans, one species of this beautiful bird, the Golden Trogon, was celebrated and watched over with great care. According to Cortes, royal physicians were appointed to watch over the health of these birds, and they had attendants, some of whom procured their food, others distributed it, and others watched over the eggs at the time of incubation. At certain seasons they were robbed of their feathers, which were highly prized for their beauty.

A variety of the Trogon is found in Africa, of which it is said that the moment the young are hatched they take flight and follow their parents. It is also said that there are several species in Asia.

Only One Man in the Kingdom.

Among the colonial possessions or dependencies of Holland there is a remarkable little State which, in its constitution and the customs of its inhabitants, surpasses the boldest flights of the advocates of women's rights. In the Island of Java, between the cities of Batavia and Samarang, is the Kingdom of Bantam, which, although tributary to Holland, is in other respects an independent State, politically without importance, yet happy, rich, and since time immemorial governed and defended by women. The sovereign is, indeed, a man, but all the rest of the government belongs to women. The King is entirely dependent upon his State Council, composed of three women. The highest authorities, all State officers, court functionaries, military commanders and soldiers are, without exception, women. The men are agriculturists and merchants. The King's bodyguard is formed of amazons, who ride in the masculine style. The throne is inherited by the eldest son, and in case the King dies without issue 100 amazons assemble and choose a successor from among their own sons, the chosen one being then proclaimed lawful king.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Sultan of Turkey.

The seventeenth anniversary of the accession of the Sultan of Turkey to the throne has recently been celebrated in Constantinople. Abdul Hamid is said to be a man of great muscular strength, and it is asserted that, although small and slight of build, he is powerful enough to overcome the strongest of his janissaries in a trial of personal strength. He owes this to his regularity of life, the observance of the laws of health, and his passion for gymnastics. He is devoted to carpentry, and his palace is furnished with a workshop in which there are many artisans, whose work is directed by the Sultan himself. A considerable proportion of the furniture of the royal residence has been made from his designs, and in many cases executed by himself.

SANK THE ALABAMA.

CAREER OF THE FAMOUS OLD KEARSARGE.

Thrilling Story of the Duel Between the Historic Old War-Ship and the Confederate Terror of the Seas Off Cherbourg, France, in 1864.

Fight to a Finish.

The wreck of the corvette Kearsarge on a reef in the Caribbean Sea was a sad ending for a vessel which made her name immortal in the history of the American navy. The action that has endeared her to the hearts of the American people was the sinking of the Confederate cruiser Alabama off Cherbourg, France, Jan. 19, 1864. For almost two years the Alabama had been preying upon American commerce. She was a terror of the seas. Her first field of action was about the Azores. From there she attacked the South American trade. Thence she made her way to China Sea, carrying destruction with her until she had cleared the sea of vessels carrying the United States flag. Her name had become one to conjure with. The Federal Government said she must be destroyed. The mission was given to the Kearsarge, and the Alabama was found in the harbor at Cherbourg. Preparations were at once made for battle, and as soon as the Alabama sailed out of the neutral zone hostilities began.

CAPT. WINSLOW, OF THE KEARSARGE.

Both vessels were nearly equally matched. The Kearsarge had a crew of 163; the Alabama's crew numbered 144. The battery of the Kearsarge consisted of 7 guns, two 11-inch pivots, smooth bore; one 30-pounder rifle and four light 32-pounders. The Alabama carried 8 guns, one 68-pounder, pivot smooth bore; one 100-pounder pivot rifle and six 30-pounders. The tonnage of the Alabama was 1,040 and that of the Kearsarge 1,031. The Alabama's commander was Capt. Raphael Semmes and the Kearsarge's Capt. John Ancrum Winslow, both of whom had seen about equal service in the Mexican war.

The Battle.

The engagement between these vessels took place on Sunday, June 19, off Cherbourg. The Kearsarge steamed out to sea, a distance of seven miles, so as to be beyond neutral waters, and was followed by the Alabama. The Kearsarge wheeled and the two vessels approached each other. The first roar of cannon which told of the beginning of the battle came when the two vessels were a mile apart. It was the Alabama that fired. Again and still again the Alabama opened her broadside on the Kearsarge, but hardly had the third discharge left the guns when the Kearsarge for the first time opened fire. She had reached the range at which she proposed to fight. The two ships circled around each other at a distance of 600 yards, pouring shot and shell into each other's side with merciless energy. With the desperation of threatened death and the enthusiasm of promised victory, the men on both ships fought. A 68-pounder shell of the Alabama passed through the bulwarks of the Kearsarge and exploded on the quarter deck, wounding three men. The guns of the Kearsarge were doing dreadful damage on the Alabama. Three 11-inch shells did horrible execution. The decks were strewn with dead and dying. The starboard battery of the Alabama was almost disabled and the vessel careened heavily from the effects of shot holes on her water line. Capt. Semmes, seeing that his vessel was beaten, headed her for neutral waters, but the Kearsarge pursued, pouring shot and shell into the Alabama. Then the Confederate commander struck his colors and sent a boat alongside the Kearsarge, announcing his surrender. The Alabama was sinking and could not float over ten minutes. Capt. Winslow signaled the English yacht Deerhound to go to the rescue of the Alabama's crew. The Deerhound complied, but after picking up thirty-nine persons, including Capt. Semmes, she steamed away with them. Two French pilot boats picked up some more of the Alabama's crew and the Kearsarge rescued many.

In this battle nine of the Alabama's crew were killed and twenty-one were drowned. Three of the Kearsarge's crew were seriously wounded, and of these one afterward died.

The celebrated Alabama claims case followed, and England, during the administration of President Grant, in September, 1872, was compelled to pay the United States $15,000,000 on account of damages inflicted by the Alabama, because she had been fitted out in an English shipyard. This was the only serious engagement the Kearsarge had, but since then she has been in almost continuous service. The reef upon which the Kearsarge was wrecked is named Roncador, and is a small guano islet, without regulations of any kind. Here in 1891 the Aguan carrying the Warner Miller party to the Nicaragua canal, was wrecked, and the party remained six days on the island before they were rescued.

A Marshal's Portraits.

Maurice Patrick MacMahon was not sent to school young, but had private tuition at home. He was then placed at a seminary taught by priests at Autun, from which he was removed to a coaching establisment for the military school of St. Cyr, at Versailles. His two elder brothers were already officers in Hussar regiments. All the family were fond of horses and were daring riders. Charles, the eldest, broke his neck in 1845 while competing for a steeplechase prize for gentlemen riders at Autun.

They were all fanciers of English thoroughbreds. The Marshal was never without a few in his stables. He owed his life on many occasions, when acting as an aid-de-camp, to the fleetness and cleverness of an English or an Irish horse. At the exhibition of equestrian art, which was held eight years ago at the Rue de Seze, a family portrait was shown of Charles, Joseph, and Maurice Patrick de MacMahon (the future Marshal), in their uniforms, cantering in a glade. It was a spirited painting, and gave the impression of the elation and freshness of youth.

Another sketchy picture, by Horace Vernet, represented the MacMahon family at a hunting meet in front of the chateau of Sully (a kind of Burgundian Warwick Castle), with their friends, who had come to hunt in the woods round them. The material conditions and the company are aristocratic. Still, there is a sweet, genial, friendly air, common to all the MacMahons, which excludes the idea of "the cold shade of aristocracy." The servants seem as well off as the horses. Maurice Patrick (the Marshal), a gentlemanly, elegantly built young fellow, of a fair, beaming, and ruddy countenance, pats the neck of his thoroughbred. The horse, pleased and proud at this mark of affection, paws the ground with his forefoot.—The Contemporary Review.

Coal Gas and the Vanishing Forest.

The scientists are devoting much attention to the widespread theory that the earth's atmosphere is becoming seriously affected by the enormous quantity of coal that is converted into carbonic acid gas—the natural enemy of the human beings.

Along with this poison gas which is being generated in a thousand smoky cities and through other sources all over the world, comes the steady cutting down of forests, the leaves of which are the natural absorbents of poisonous gas.

General Wistar, who is said to be the highest authority in the matter, is so deeply interested in the subject that he is making great efforts to call the attention of the scientific world to it, and he believes that the growing bronchial troubles and epidemics like the grip, all over the world, have an ultimate connection with it.

How much the present enormous generation of carbonic acid gas can affect the whole body of the atmosphere science will ascertain just as soon as it applies itself to the problem in earnest.

At all events the great efforts now being made to preserve the forests are worthy of every encouragement. The planting of trees in cities, the development of extensive and well-wooded park systems, the planting of large groves of timber in the vicinity of towns and cities, are all calculated to assist in the absorbtion of the superabundance of carbonic acid gas with which, according to the scientists, our atmosphere is becoming dangerously overcharged.

Exhaustion of the British Fisheries.

Scientific investigation shows that the seas around the British coast are being exhausted of fish. The subject is receiving very grave consideration, and in all probability there will have to be very elaborate means established of restocking the English waters.

JOSEPH JEFFERSON.

The Famous Actor Celebrates His 65th Birthday.

Joseph Jefferson, whose fame as an actor is world-wide, recently celebrated the sixty-fifth anniversary of his birth. Singularly enough his favorite play, "Rip Van Winkle," is also 65 years old. "Jo" Jefferson's grandfather, Joseph Jefferson, was an English actor of some celebrity who came to the United States in

JOSEPH JEFFERSON.

1795. "Jo" went on the stage when very young and rose rapidly in the profession, having a wide range as a comedian.

When not upon the stage Mr. Jefferson spends his winters in Louisiana. He has a beautiful summer home at Buzzard's Bay, Mass., known as the Crow's Nest. It is said that a great many very fine paintings have come from the brush of Mr. Jefferson, who can thus be called not only a great actor but a talented artist. In June, 1892, he received the honorary degree of Bachelor of Arts from Yale University.

STRANGER THAN FICTION.

A Commonplace Adventure Unintelligibly Related in Good Dictionary Words.

Being easily exsuscitated, and an amnicolist fond of inescating fish and broggling, with an ineluctable desire for the amolition of care, I took a punt and descended the river in a snithy gale. The water being smooth, I felt I could venture with incolumity, as I was familiar with the obuncous river.

Having broggled without result, I rowed toward an eyot, intending merely to quiddle, when I suddenly saw a hackee. Wishing to capture him, I decided to circumnavigate and take him unaware. Landing, I derned myself where I could see the hackee deracinating grass. He discovered me and skugged behind a tree, occasionally protruding his noll.

Seizing a stick I awaited the caput. When the neg appeared I feagued him. The hackee, which is pedimanous, tried to climb the bole. He seemed sheepish, and I suspected him of some michery, especially as his cheeks seemed ampullaceous. I caught him by the tail and he skirled. Though he was sprack, I held on with reddour, and tried finally to sowle him. The hackee looked soyned and tried to scyle. I belabored him, and he cleped, making vigorous oppugnation and evigently longing for divagation.

Then a pircgue approached and an agricultor landed. This distracted the hackee, and I sowled him, but dropped him because he scratched so. I vowed to exungulate him when caught.

Borrowing a fazzolet, I tried to yend it over the hackee's head, as a means of occeation. The agricultor aided. He was not attractive, seeming crapulous and not unlike a picaroon. He had a siphunculated dinner-pail, which looked as if he had been battering it while pugging. But with a stick and some string he made a gin, and tried to make the hackee bisson. This caused quinching by the hackee, who seized the coadjutor's hallux. Thus exasperated, the agricultor captured the hackee without any migniardise; but he glouted over the bite, and his rage was not quaited until the hackee was a lich. Carrying it to the punt, I sank into a queachy spot, which delayed me until the gale obnubilated the sky.

While removing the pelage, I found the lich somewhat olid, because the swinker had feagued the hackee, and so I yended the lich away, went to market, and supped upon a spitchcock and a hot bisk.—St. Nicholas.

A Wealthy Farmer Acts as His Own Undertaker to Save Money.

Joseph Witcher, a wealthy farmer at Bloomingdale, in the Adirondacks, died the other day, leaving all his money to his brother George, himself worth about $75,000. Immediately upon his brother's death George visited a firm of woodworkers and wanted a coffin made. He picked out the lumber himself, the poorest in the yard and badly worm-eaten. The firm refused to allow their men to make the coffin, and Witcher carried the rotten lumber away to his home, where he made his brother's coffin himself. Leather taken from old boots was cut into strips for the handles. Then, placing the body in this crude affair, he loaded the coffin on his wagon and, with his old nag attached, drove with it to Plattsburg, eighty miles away, through the wildest parts of New York State. His reason for taking the body to Plattsburg was that he had a lot at that place, and, he said, land is too high at Bloomingdale to buy another.

GOOD ONLY FOR BALLAST.

Two Lumps of Metal for Which a Woman Paid $12,000.

With eyes brimful of happy anticipation, an aged woman presented two "kings" of bright metal to the chief weigher at the Mint. She believed that the two lumps of metal were gold, worth $30,000, and when informed that they were but copper and zinc, worth two or three dollars, she turned away with a heavy heart and sought the train to bear her back to her home in Jackson, Mich. She had paid $12,000 for the stuff, and had journeyed all the way East to realize upon it.

The story of the unfortunate woman's loss was told to the Mint officials. She was Mrs. Harriet Morgan, who resides in Jackson, and with her were her son-in-law, Charles Helleg, and Dr. Blanchard, the family physician. Some thirteen years ago Mrs. Morgan, who is quite wealthy, had advanced to a nephew $6,000 to start a business. He was profuse in his expressions of gratitude, and promised that, as business prospered with him, he would return the loan with ample interest. The nephew went away, and his aunt heard nothing of him until recently. She had about abandoned hope of securing the return of her loan, when one day a stranger came to her with the announcement that he represented her nephew. The latter had prospered well in gold mining, and, as an evidence of his success, had sent her two gold bricks, or "kings." These weighed fully fifty-eight pounds and were worth $30,000. These the nephew desired to present to his aunt in return for her loan and another small payment. Mrs. Morgan, delighted, paid the stranger $6,000 and received the "kings," which she guarded carefully. The trip to the Mint was planned, Dr. Blanchard and Mr. Helleg accompanying her to carry and properly guard the precious lumps. The trio reached the city on Sunday, and waited with feverish impatience for the coming of the morning, when the Mint doors should open. Business for the day had scarce begun when they walked into the money-making establishment with happy faces. The metal was in conical form, and throughout all the journey the two men had guarded the satchels containing the "kings" with watchful care and anxiety, never permitting them out of their sight for a moment. The "kings" were passed over to the chief weigher, and the trio sat awaiting the result of his examination. In a few moments he announced in crushing tones:

"This is nothing but copper, mixed with zinc."

Mrs. Morgan eyed the weigher skeptically, and turned to her companions with pale face and dimming eye. A painful silence of several seconds followed, and the aged woman wailed:

"Is it possible that I have lost all that money?"

The men briefly told the story of the swindle, and the trio departed to catch the Western express for their Michigan homes. They had planned to go on to New York after spending several days here, but they quickly abandoned the idea.—[Philadelphia Record.

Bird Against Snake.

It is not always sufficient for the hunter to find game and to reach it. If the game is of large size it may be able to hold its own, and the pursuit may end in a violent struggle, in which both skill and cunning are necessary to obtain conquest.

The bird which displays the most remarkable qualities in this struggle which terminates the chase, exhibiting indeed a real fencing match, is the secretary bird. He is the more interested in striking without being himself struck, since the fangs with which his prey, the snake, is generally armed, might at the first blow give him a mortal wound. In South Africa he pursues every snake, even the most venomous. Warned by instinct of the terrible enemy he has met, the reptile at first seeks safety in flight; the secretary follows him on foot, and the ardor of the chase does not prevent him from being constantly on guard. This is because the snake, finding himself nearly overtaken, suddenly turns round, ready to use his defensive weapons. The bird stops and turns in one of its wings to protect the lower parts of its body. A real duel then begins. The snake throws himself on his enemy, who at each stroke parries with the end of his wing; the fangs are buried in the great feathers which terminate it, and these leave their poison without producing any effect. All this time with the other wing the secretary repeatedly strikes the reptile, who is at last stunned, and rolls over on the earth. The conqueror rapidly thrusts his beak into his skull, throws his victim into the air, and swallows him.—[Popular Science Monthly.

A Description.

"Can you describe the man you saw hanging about the house the day before the robbery?" inquired the detective.

The Perkins Junction storekeeper, whose place of business had been broken into and robbed of a considerable quantity of plug tobacco, canned tomatoes, and dried peaches, together with the entire contents of the cash drawer, amounting to $1.56, reflected a moment and then asked:

"D'you know Bill Quinn?"

"I don't think I do."

"Lives down in the Wallick neighborhood."

"I don't know him."

The merchant shifted his quid to the other cheek, chewed thoughtfully awhile, and said:

"Know Si Roberts?"

"No."

"Auctioneer. Hangs 'round Thompson's a good deal."

"Never heard of him. But as to this man you saw loafing about here before the robbery took place—I would like to have you describe him as well as you can."

Again the storekeeper reflected.

"Well," he said at last, "he looks some like Bill Quinn, and some like Si Roberts."—[Chicago Tribune.

REPUBLICANS have such poor memories! They are squealing along the line because their men are turned out of such places as assistants in postoffices, etc. But they served democrats just that way when Harrison went in, and didn't wait half as long. The other ox is gored just now.

UNION FIBER Co. began additional buildings to its plant at Kokomo last week. The Corrugated Iron Works began their buildings at Anderson. All over the country it is the same. GALUSHA A. GROW, republican candidate for congressman-at-large in Pennsylvania, carried that state by 180,000 majority at the recent special election. Of course the cheap foreigners, such as Hungarians and Italians, all voted the ticket as ordered by their bosses, and the American voters who like this kind of "protection" voted with them. That state needs a higher order order of intelligence more than it needs anything else.

THE BLAND BILL, the one that provides for the coinage of the "seigneorage" of the silver bullion in the treasury, passed the House of representatives last Thursday. The vote was 168 to 120 This secures the coinage of over 55 million. The silver dollars so coined, do not go into circulation, as we understand it, but their place in circulation is to be taken by silver certificates to be issued on them as fast as coined. This actual coinage feature, had it been in the original Sherman bill, would have saved the country over 40 millions for the silver bullion bought and stored away under the Sherman act, as so much goods, went down in value 40 millions. Had it been coined as fast as purchsed, the coined dollars would not have depreciated. We believe this new Bland Bill is a good one. Now let the senate pass it. This "Bland Bill" must not be confused with the "Bland Bill" of last fall. That was for free and unlimited coinage of silver. This one secures first the coinage of the "seigniorage," and when that is coined, it takes up and coins the rest of the silver that was purchased under the Sherman law.

THE Columbia City Post says that "the South Bend Times' advice is not needed in the Twelfth district." It will be needed if things keep on, for Mr. Stoll is a man who has helped this section out of trouble many times. But aside from this, the remark is impertinent. Mr. Stoll is a newspaper man, and therefore publishes the news. But we do not know that he has interested himself further. The Post, like the Albion Democrat, is trying to make an ox of itself.

NEW YORK is without a man on the U. S. supreme bench for the first time since we were a nation. She can thank her two senators for this. They defeated Hornblower and then Peckham, and so the President appointed a man from another state, Mr. White, one of the U. S. senators from Louisiana. The judges are: Justices Gray of Massachusetts and Shiras of Pennsylvania, representing the east; Chief Justice Fuller of Illinois, Justices Brown of Michigan, Brewer of Kansas and Field of California, representing the west; and Justices Harlan of Kentucky, Jackson of Tennessee and White of Louisiana, representing the south. The late Justice Blatchford, whom White succeeds, was from New York.

THE KENDALLVILLE NEWS last week shows up the present managers of the Albion Democrat, the men who are now so zealously engaged in dragooning democrats who have the courage to refuse to obey bosses. It would seem as if the Presslers have not been much democrats till they got a new collar recently: A writer in the News says: "I notice that the Albion Democrat takes a hand in your fight this week. The Presslers are pretty birds to talk to men about straight democracy. H. C. Pressler was known in Whitley as a chronic office seeker and lately as a rank kicker. He was even classed as a republican on some of the poll books. For two years he has not been a democrat, and was distrusted and received no consideration by the leaders of the party. He was a saloon keeper before he came to Albion. The young man never was a democrat when at Columbia City. He was the city editor of the Commercial and was classed as a republican. He was given no credence as anything else. While at Ft. Wayne he was a peoples' party man; was outspoken and loud in the denunciation of Cleveland. They are nice fellows to talk to Noble county democrats about how to conduct the party. The item this week is an outrage upon you. A young suckling talking about Doc. Parker."

Squire Walborn's Court.

The popular 'Squire was kept pretty busy last week and a part of this, hearing cases. After the school case we noted last week, was disposed of, came up another that grew out of it. Joseph Leeson, who had gone to the school and had upbraided the teacher in the presence of the school, was called up and fined, as the law is very strict on that Saturday forenoon the Derthicks were called in. There had been trouble there the night before, and we believe Wm. Derthick started in to thrash some decency into his wife, when Wes. Harris interfered and struck him on the head with a hammer Derthick was fined by the 'Squire and was in jail for a time. That afternoon Wes Harris and Frank Derthick were out east of town shooting at a mark. On starting for home they came across the section men and some others, including Frank Ashelman and J. D. Price, the latter being on his way home from chopping some wood. Price noticed that Harris and Derthick had a lot of revolvers, the latter having one in each vest pocket, when Price remarked that this looked like western style. One of the men said, "You ought to see Harris, then." At this, Harris pulled a revolver from each hip pocket to show how well he was fixed. But it happened that one of his revolvers was a self cocker, and in flourishing it around, somehow, it went off, the ball tearing the flesh from one side of Price's first finger on the right hand. Price had Harris arrested, and on Monday, he had a trial before Walborn and was bound over to court and in default of bail was taken to the jail where he now is. His friend, Frank Derthick, went up to Waterloo Saturday. It would be a relief if the whole crowd could be induced to move.

A case of unusual legal interest was started in this court yesterday. J. G. Stonebreaker sued Jacob Wagner on complaint that Wagner's bees are a nuisance. They come out in the spring and muss up the clothes hung out to dry, etc. The case is set for March 14, next Wednesday. Bay VanAuken was also arrested again on an old charge.

CYCLING NEWS

Give us good roads.

I shall not "stoop" to ride any bicycle, even my own, "hill climbing excepted."

I shall be upright and not fall by the wayside, if I can help it.

Deliver us from the tough headed chump who won't vote for good roads.

The Palmer tire has found its way into France The occasion was signalized by a banquet.'

It is said and acknowledged by competent judges that Cleveland bicycles are one gear ahead of date.

Bicycle cleaning is a new industry in Paris. Will some enterprising American fill the want in this country?

How did Miss Wheeler happen to meet with her accident? Passed another lady rider who had on a new hat. Same old story, she had to look back at her.

Smith—I should think that wheeling would be very sharpening to the eyes. Brown—Yes, it is; but I have lately discovered it is also very dulling to the nose.

"You can't write your name with a bicycle like you can with skates." What's the reason you can't? Look at Zimmy. Didn't he write his name on the scroll of fame with his bicycle?

Great care should be exercised when riding on the walks not to infringe on the rights of pedestrians. A woman was collided with in an eastern city recently. Neither wheel nor lady was damaged. The wheelman died from injuries sustained.

Several of our Auburn boys expect to start upon extended tours awheel during the coming season. Some will head for Niagara, others for the jumping off place west. These will be delightful trips and thoroughly enjoyable. Wish we had the time and "our company was agreeable" to join them.

A Rochester baker with his wagon ran down a wheelman and damaged both wheel and rider. The rider brought suit and won it. The wheelmen have right to half of the street. The law says so.

Business demands more room. The Auburn Cyclery will occupy the entire room, the partitions dividing same will be removed and the walls finely decorated. This will make as fine a display room as can be found anywhere.

Many have visited the Auburn Cyclery from adjoining towns and counties, among others, G. A. Conkle, of Defiance and chief council of the L. A. W. of that city, called in the interest of the League Chainless Safety.

Everywhere the wide world over the influence of the cycle spreads, and as might be supposed, a country like Japan, that makes such honest efforts to be up to date, has not overlooked the sport of cycling, although few are aware what a hold it has had and still has on the intelligent Jap in his beautiful land.

"I don't think much of that League Chainless." "Why so?" "Oh, it's run on cogwheels and will soon wear out. Don't think it will be a success." Say, have you seen it, read about it or ridden it?" "No, I am afraid of it." "Well, then you can't know much about it." The chainless runs on "bevel gears"—not "cogwheels"—of finest steel forgings, adjusted on ball bearings and has been too long in use and ridden by too many experienced riders to be considered experimental. It is a deciped success, and there is no hesitation in placing it in competition with any other machine known.

The Nappanee Trial.

Our people will be interested in hearing of the suit that came up after the explosion at Nappanee, in which John Johnson's brother came so near losing his life. The Lagrange Standard gives this account of the trial which had been taken there on change of venue:

After fifteen days of contest the Nappanee water works case was given to the jury last Friday night. The day had been spent in argument by counsel. J. Morris, Jr., and W. J. Vesey, of Ft. Wayne, and J. D. Ferrall for the plaintiffs—the contractors, and Judge Osborne, of Goshen, and O. L. Ballou for the defendant. The jury was promptly on hand at the opening of court Saturday morning with a verdict of $1,000 for the defendant—the town of Nappanee. As we understant it, the contractors had contracted to put in parts of the waterworks for some $10,500, and were paid nearly $8,000, while the work was progressing, but before they were through the water tank bursted and the boiler exploded, and the town had to restore and complete the work. The contractors sued for balance due, claiming the accidents were no fault of theirs. The verdict of the jury is to the effect that the town had already paid $1,000 too much on the contract, and should recover that amount back. It has been an expensive suit to both parties, but the $1,000 received will probably reimburse the town. The expense incurred by this county in the trial will be repaid by Elkhart county, the venue of the case having been changed from that county.

The Cyclery.

A visit to the "Cyclery" gives one a new vision of the great industry that has recently sprung into existence—the making of bicycles. Mr. Cobb, the gentlemanly manager, is an expert in all the details of the business, and is familiar with the mechanism of these splendid machines in all their intricate parts. He can take a machine apart and show its "true inwardness" with the rapidity and ease of the men who made them, and to a man who never studied these things, many wonders are revealed. Such delicacy of construction with such astonishing strength, combining beauty of form with perfection in working, were perhaps never seen before in any piece of mechanism. Then the great number of useful and at the same time ornamental attachments and appliances that go, or may go, with these machines, makes one wonder what to expect next. There are not only gongs and lanterns, but perfect clocks and cyclometers to measure distance gone over, that may be attached to these machines. Mr. Cobb is not only an expert in all these, and a skillful rider, but an enthusiast in everything that pertains to the "wheel." It will be remembered that he took a winter's ride through southern California a little over a year ago, and the "kodak" pictures he took of the romantic portions of the country and the lovely homes of that favored clime, were extensively copied. If Mr. Cobb does not have a good run of sales it will not be the fault of the splendid stock of machines he shows, nor of his ability to show them. We believe the "cyclery" will be popular and successful.

Patriotic Song Competition.

The Dominant, one of the best musical monthlies published in this country, being desirous of stimulating the efforts to secure to the United States a patriotic song possessing the characteristics requisite to endear it to the hearts of the people, has decided to inaugurate a competition among poets and composers for that purpose. The prizes offered are as follows: For the best poem, $100; for the next best poem, $50; for the best musical setting, $100; for the next best musical setting, $50.

These prizes are the least that would accrue to the successful poet or musician as their names, through the medium of the Dominant, would immediately become household words and win an affectionate place in the hearts of their fellow citizens. The successful creator of a nation's song is a man to be envied. He exercises a power and influence superior to that of rulers and legislators. This is what led Andrew Fletcher to remark, "I care not who makes the nation's laws, if I might write its ballads." For these reasons, the money prize should not be considered the chief incentive. A higher motive must inspire the competitor's muse, viz.: honor and fame.

The competition will take place as follows: Poems, open from January 1 to April 1, 1894. The musical competition will open immediately subsequent to the publication of the poems, and be continued from that date to the first day of the fourth month following.

For further particulars address, the Dominant, 228 N. Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

OF the Greater New York it may be said in all seriousness that the raising of garden truck will be one of her principal industries.

EVERY time the Government of Chili wants to get rid of a batch of troublesome political opponents it discovered a Balmacedist plot.

BOSTON alderman, after watching a certain dance for three weeks with noble and unselfish pertinacity, have pronounced it immoral. The Boston mind does not under all circumstances leap to hasty conclusions.

A LECTURER at Kansas City came upon the platform armed with a rifle and revolver. He was listened to so respectfully that no one hit him with a brick until after he had left the hall. What a lecturer really needs in Kansas City is a Gatling gun.

A BOSTON man has made a wager that he can start penniless and naked around the world returning in a year with $5,000, which must be earned by the way. He begins the undertaking in the seclusion of his clubroom. The point definitely settled by the wager seems to be that a man may live in Boston and yet be a fool.

WELL-FED Edward Atkinson is lecturing to prove that $1 a week is all that a workingman needs to support himself on comfortably. Mr. Atkinson is much less useful to the universe that a workingman is, and if he really believes his own theory let him adopt it for personal use. If, unhappily, he survive, he may secure a few adherents, but not among men who toil and who have stomachs.

IT now appears that the screaming, pestiferous trolley is not only a menace to life and limb but that its evil effects are felt underground. The return current leaks from the rails and attacks water and gas pipes, producing electrolysis, or rapid rusting and disintegration of the iron. Boston's gas and water systems have already suffered and Philadelphia is threatened with the same result. The trolley is a danger and a nuisance everywhere.

CRUELTY in the prison should be made a crime. In the Ohio Penitentiary there is a Brockway who terrifies convicts. Charles Mitchell, who had only a few days to serve, stabbed himself with a broomknife rather than be disciplined for a slight violation of the rules by Deputy Warden Stackhouse. Said the convict: "The Deputy Warden is so cruel that I had rather die than endure the torture again." The ducking tub and an electrical shocking apparatus called the "humming bird," are the instruments of torture. No Legislature should fail to see that inquisitorial punishment is disgraceful to our age.

THE prospects for a full crop of house flies next summer is not dependent upon such risky possibilities as a wise contemporary would have us believe. It is stated by this authority that "a few individuals, in the torpid state, survive even the coldest winter, and with the first warm days of summer lay their eggs." Nature makes no such mistake as taking the chance of losing a whole fly crop by freezing off the old survivors, nor is the rigor of the crop jeopardized by infirm propagating. The fly supply for next summer was provided for in the waning days of last autumn. Myriads of fly eggs are now safely tucked away, ready to be transformed into the familiar little pests by the incubating rays of the sun.

THE estimate of the area and product of the principal cereal crops, potatoes, tobacco, and hay for the year 1893, as completed by the statistician of the Department of Agriculture, make the aggregate of corn area 72,036,465 acres, product, 1,619,496,131 bushels; wheat, 34,629,418 acres, product, 396,131,725 bushels; oats, 27,273,033 acres, product, 638,854,850 bushels; rye, 2,038,485 acres, product, 26,555,446 bushels; barley, 7,220,371 acres, product, 69,869,495 bushels; buckwheat, 815,614 acres, product, 12,132,311 bushels; potatoes, 2,605,186 acres, product, 183,034,203 bushels; tobacco, 702,952 acres, product 483,023,963 pounds; hay, 49,613,169 acres, product, 65,766,158 tons. The average yield of corn an acre was 22.5 bushels, wheat, 11.4 bushels, oats, 23.4, rye, 13.0, barley, 21.7, buckwheat, 14.9, potatoes, 72.2, tobacco 687 pounds, hay 1 33-100 tons. The returns of the correspondents of the department make the acreage of winter wheat sown last fall 93.2 per cent. of the area harvested in 1893.

CASES of lynching grow no less in number, nor are they now confined to the Southern States. The brutal stain seems to be developing in new places. It is simply an outrage on justice to say that the hangings which disgrace our Nation are done by the people to preserve law and order and the safety of people. They are prompted by brutality, and that is confined to no one place. The Springfield Republican thinks, in the name of some facts that it has collected during a week, that it is time for the Northern papers to preach to their own people instead of preaching to the South. "Ohio has no negro problem, yet the people of Winchester in that State lynched a 16-years'-old colored boy. A white man was lynched in Marion County, Ind. Three white men were lynched at Russell, Kan.; and as throwing a little more light on Kansas civilization, it should be added that a jury in Sabina allowed $2 damages to a negro whose son was lynched last April. Nothing worse happens in Tennessee, Mississippi, or Texas."

IT gives some indication of the progress of shipbuilding to note that at the time the entrance locks of the Manchester ship-canal were designed there was not a vessel afloat which could not enter the gates and proceed up the canal. These locks are at Eastham, between Runcorn and Liverpool, and vessels may enter them at any time irrespective of the state of the tide. This is a very great advantage over Liverpool, the docks of which are tidal. If two vessels cross the Mersey bar at the same time, one for Liverpool and the other for Manchester, the latter may actually begin unloading first, from not having any delay but the transit of the canal. The largest lock at Eastham has a measurement of 600 by 80 feet, and the bottom is twenty-three feet below the sill of the old docks in Liverpool and nearly twelve feet below that of the newest docks. As the minimum depth of the canal is twenty-six feet, vessels of almost any size may navigate the canal, and very likely improvements will be made rendering it suitable for the largest steamers. A railway bridge, under which the canal passes, has determined the maximum height of masts allowed to be seventy-five feet. Any masts higher have to be lowered. This is an obvious disadvantage to sailing ships, many of which have the tops of their lower masts about that height, but steamers are rapidly supplanting sailing vessels except for very long voyages. The canal is now one of the wonders of the day at a cost of $75,000,000, and it probably will pay.

THE death of Rosina Vokes, which occurred at Torquay, in Devonshire, entails the loss of a gifted woman and a beautiful character. Mrs. Vokes-Clay was an English woman, but for many years she had confined her professional career to this country. In addition her husband's family was closely allied to one of the greatest names in our history, so that the loss is felt even more keenly in America than in England. The professional charms of this gifted woman are sufficiently known to theater-goers of a generation past. As an actress she lacked the finish of some and the versatility of others, but she had a superabundant cheerfulness and vivacity, which, combined with sincerity and an obvious desire to please, won all hearts. The public abundantly testified their love of the actress and their appreciation of her charming and always inoffensive art. Not all the public knew the inner history of a private life which was even more admirable than the stage career. Rosina Vokes, without the almost offensive display which has prejudiced the public mind against some "British matrons" on the stage, was a model of all the domestic virtues. After her marriage she never played in England. Her children, to whom she was most tenderly attached, never visited America, so that they never saw their mother on the stage. By the fruits of her labors, however, they were reared in luxury to inherit from her a competence. For some years the mother had known that her death was imminent. When the end came she went home to her children to die.

Future Postage.

"We have gone on selecting cotton wool till we have got some lighter than air. You've no idea what a useful material it is. We call it 'Imponderal.'"

"What do you use it for?"

"Well, chiefly for packing articles to go by parcel post. It makes them weigh less than nothing, you know."

"And how do the Postoffice people know what you have to pay?"

"That's the beauty of the new system," Mein Herr cried, exultingly. "They pay us; we don't pay them. I've often got as much as 5 shillings for sending a parcel."

"But doesn't your Government object?"

"Well, they do object a little. They say it comes so expensive, in the long run. But the thing's as clear as daylight, by their own rules. If I send a parcel that weighs a pound more than nothing, I pay three-pence; so, of course if it weighs a pound less than nothing, I ought to receive three-pence."—Lewis Carroll.

Sunny Italy Buried in Snow Drifts.

The oldest inhabitant of Rome is reported to have said that he never knew such a sight as the capital has presented this winter. The snow has certainly been a terribly thing in the streets, and the poor people seem to be quite broken-spirited and unable to compete against it. They have no notion of using shovels and a little muscular force to clear a way through, but lounge about in an abstracted and benumbed condition, hoping for a little benevolent rain to fall and do that which they are unable or unwilling to attempt. It may be said that all have suffered, from the residents of the palace down to the denizens of cellars and hovels. In the country the snow has been two or three feet deep in all directions.—London Court Journal.

ANOTHER FAIR CITY.

CALIFORNIA'S INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

Some Typical Features of the Early Historic Life of the State—Some of the Old Gambling Dens Reproduced—Small-Pox Becomes Alarming.

In the Sunset City.

The California Midwinter International Exposition, at San Francisco, is proving a great success. The Exposition has awakened all the energies of the people of the State and there is now on exhibition such a variety of products of the soil—agricultural, horticultural, viticultural and mineral—as was never before seen on the Pacific slope. Eastern and foreign exhibitors are well represented in their choicest and rarest wares.

The most interesting features of the exposition, perhaps, are the reproduction of old California architecture—object lessons of the early historic life of the State. Many of the mining cabins have been brought from the mountains and set up in the grounds. These have a historic value from their associations with men who have since acquired wealth and fame. Among the old miners' cabins, one of the shabbiest is the house in which John W. Mackay lived for several years at Allegheny, Sierra County, where he made his first strike, which furnished the means for his further work in quartz-mining. Another equally interesting cabin is that which once belonged to Hon. George H. Perkins, now United States Senator from California, and ranking as one of the millionaires of the State. Another cabin was occupied at one time by Mark Twain, when he was working as a miner.

LIBERAL ARTS BUILDING.

IN THE ORIENTAL VILLAGE, MAIN STREET, CAIRO.

One of the mining camps has all the gambling accessories which characterized the old camps, keno and faro outfits, a roulette wheel, etc., and the games are called by Mexican women who have presided over similar games in the roughest camps of California, Arizona and Nevada, and who have witnessed more fights than they could count on their jingling bracelets, made out of gold coins contributed by "admirers." There is also a dancing hall, the inevitable saloon, the counter of which is formed by two planks laid on barrels, and a hotel, which is an exact reproduction of the pioneer hostelry. There is also a museum which is stocked with relics of the '49 period.

APPROACH TO THE FINE ARTS BUILDING.

In one corner of the grounds is a model placer mining camp. Here are flume, sluices, rockers, long-toms, riffles, and other devices for catching gold. Several old miners show the visitors exactly how the gold was dug out in '49. The ground has been "salted" with gold dust and small nuggets, giving the spectacle the full air of realism.

The large buildings on the ground are splendid in appearance and constitute another World's Fair City on a smaller scale. Of several scenes on the grounds we print illustrations.

SMALLPOX HOSPITAL.

Chicago Thinks It May Be Necessary to Quarantine Patients at Home.

The Chicago Health Department is in a quandary as to what is to be done with smallpox patients if the disease does not rapidly abate. The hospital is becoming so crowded that it will soon be impossible to accommodate any more within its walls. Tuesday there were 160 cases under treatment there, and nearly all the available space in the building and in the new wing was occupied. Cots were placed in the corridors in the upper part of the building and the drying-room had been converted into a ward. Dr. Potter said to a press correspondent that the outcome of the crowded condition of affairs will probably be that the city will abandon the policy of removing all patients to the hospital. "It will probably be necessary," said he, to quarantine the patients in their homes. This was done during the epidemic of 1882, and it can easily be done now." There were fifteen new cases found Tuesday and the sufferers were removed to the hospital.

An Indianapolis dispatch says that Indiana authorities may ask that all passengers to or through Indiana be subjected to inspection by the Illinois officials, and if this be refused quarantine stations will be established along the Indiana line and the trains out of Chicago will be held for inspection and examination. The officials believe that less inconvenience would be occasioned the traveling public by applying the remedy in Chicago, but if this cannot be done the Indiana authorities will act on their own soil.

Dr. M. R. Trumbower, State Veterinarian of Illinois, was some time ago requested by Dr. J. W. Scott, Secretary of the State Board of Health, to proceed to Lombard, Dupage County, and make an inspection of the cattle that are used there for cultivating vaccine virus. He did so, and has submitted his report. After giving the character of the cattle selected from the Union Stockyards at Chicago, he tells how they are cared for on the vaccine farm, and concludes his report as follows:

This business has been carried on for the past seven years, and at present from twelve to fourteen cattle are used weekly, about 36,000 points are produced from twelve cattle. So far as I can see, everything is conducted in a proper manner; no diseased or improper cattle are used, and the product ought to be reliable and beyond suspicion.

The State prison at Sing Sing, N. Y., has been placed under close quarantine because several of the convicts engaged in securing rags have been seized with smallpox.

Charles H. Luscomb of Brooklyn Is the New President.

At the annual meeting of the League of American Wheelmen held at Louisville, Ky., Charles H. Luscomb of Brooklyn was elected President. Mr. Luscomb is a graduate of the College of the City of New York and Columbia Law School and is a well-known and successful New York lawyer. He became identified with wheeling interests in the summer of 1883, and shortly became captain of the Brooklyn Club, holding that position three years. In 1888 he was elected President of the League of American Wheelmen, a position which he filled with great credit.

CHAS. H. LUSCOMB.

The present membership of the League is 36,950, an increase of 2,646 the past season. Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and New York rank in the order named in the League membership at the present time. There has been a decrease in the membership of women during the past season, the membership of the fair sex being now 915. The Auditing Committee of the League has taken care of over $100,000 in the past year.

ROAD-MAKING IN THE COUNTRY

Efforts of the Agricultural Department Meeting with Success.

The inquiry being made by the Agricultural Department into the system of road management and road-making methods in the United States is meeting with favorable results. Among other things the co-operation of practically all of the principal railroads in reducing freight rates on road materials has been secured. The edition, 3,000 copies, of bulletin No. 1 on "Recent Road Laws of the Various States" has been exhausted and a reprint has been ordered. Information is being gathered for further publications for which many applications are now on file. Concerning some of the results reached, General Roy Stone, who is in charge of the investigation, said:

"It appears that while many short sections of good highways are being built in various parts of the country, with a gratifying general cheapness in cost and freedom from burdensome taxation, yet in some of the States a serious setback to the movement has occurred through the failure of legislation intended to advance it and relied upon for general results. The optional country road laws passed in 1893 have nowhere proved acceptable to the county boards, except with two counties in Michigan. It is clear, therefore, that these laws are either in advance of public education or at variance with the public judgment in the States concerned, and that a new departure must be taken to insure any prompt and general advance in highway construction in those States.

"Fortunately it has been able to point to the remarkable success of the State aid and local option law of New Jersey, and to commend it with certain modifications to the consideration of other States. That law proceeds upon the theory that while the country as a whole may be unwilling to embark in road building, those smaller communities which are themselves willing to contribute fairly toward the improvement of their highways may justly demand county and State aid in carrying on such improvements."

MR. WILSON MUCH BETTER.

Eats with Relish Atole, a Nutritious Dish, Prepared by Indian Women.

A late bulletin from Dr. Underwood, who is nursing Congressman Wilson at Guadalajara, is very encouraging. His pulse is steady, his temperature fairly normal, and his appetite good. The Mexican physician has prescribed atole as diet. Atole is a very nutritious dish. Corn is ground by hand by Indian women; and the meal is then parched and sifted into boiling hot water or milk in the same manner as used in mush in the United States. It is, however, much more appetizing than mush when freshly ground and cooked. Congressman Tarsney has the best Indian woman obtainable cooking it fresh at all hours of the day, as Mr. Wilson eats it with relish, but can take only a few spoonfuls at a time. Consul General Crittenden received a message from Mr. Tarsney saying Mr. Wilson is improving, that the climate is splendid, and he thinks the patient will pull through. Mr. Wilson is much prostrated, but it is believed that the crisis is past.

Gen. Miles will soon be transferred from Chicago to New York to fill the place caused by the retirement of O.O. Howard. Gen. Miles will go East at the beginning of the new fiscal year. It is expected that Gen. Miles will remain at this new station until September, 1895, when he will be promoted to succeed Gen. Schofield as commander of the United States army.

STARVING IN TEXAS.

TALES OF HUNGER, DEATH, AND DESOLATION.

A Once Prosperous Region, on Which Nature Bestowed Her Choicest Gifts, Now a Vast Desert, Strewn with the Bones of Cattle—Untold Suffering.

Along the Rio Grande.

The Rio Grande Valley might be likened unto the valley of the shadow of death. Where a few years ago thousands of head of cattle, horses, sheep and goats grazed on luxuriant and nutritious grasses is now a floor of sand and alkali. Buzzards and wolves are all that is left in animal life, except a few destitute and starving families. In vegetation nothing is seen except the great green cactus, with its forbidding thorns, which secure it against an attack of even sheep and goats. In Starr, Zapata and portions of Encinal, Hidalgo, Cameron, Dimmet, Maverick and Duval Counties in the extreme southwestern portion of the State the direst want prevails.

In Starr County the situation is more deplorable and the ruin and desolation more widespread than in the adjoining counties, but in sections of each the same awful and gruesome state of affairs is manifest. Until four years ago this section was one apparently most favored by nature. Vegetation was rank in growth. The mild, salubrious climate lent a charm to life, and all was prosperity and happiness. Cattle and sheep thrived and fattened on the wild grasses, and with little effort in the way of cultivation the husbandman garnered enough to supply all needs. In the more favored localities, where springs were numerous, little villages had been established and a large population was contentedly living, deriving its income from the vast stock and sheep industries. All this has been transformed. The scene shifted and the white, bleaching bones of animals covering the ground for miles and miles is all the eye now meets. No crops have been raised or harvested for four consecutive years. Even the springs have dried up. The scene presented is that of a vast desert, with nothing to relieve the monotony.

A Sad State of Affairs.

To increase the want and misery, hunger has attacked mankind as well as the dumb animals, and many have died praying for bread. For a time the poor subsisted on roots and prickly pears, adding half putrid flesh stripped from dead animals which the buzzards had not completely devoured. The little Mexican children are naked, and the older ones without clothes to cover their bodies. Taking Starr County as an example, fully 90 per cent. of all live stock has perished. A year ago there were in that county 22,000 horses, 55,000 cattle, 125,000 sheep, and 25,000 goats. To-day there are not all told in the county more than 10,000 head of four-footed animals. Wealthy men are bankrupt and absolutely starving. What is true of Starr County applies to portions of other counties. The better to give some idea of the distressing state of affairs, some of the losses sustained by ranchmen are: P. Garza last August owned 2,500 sheep, 160 cattle and 80 horses; he has 2 horses, 10 sheep and 1 cow left. E. Gonzales, 1,200 sheep; has 25 left, all other stock dead. C. Gomez, 2,000 sheep, 600 cattle, 100 horses; 60 sheep left, cattle and horses all dead. C. and P. ranch, 4,000 sheep; 300 left. E. P. ranch, 1,500 sheep; all dead. Peterson Brothers, 2,000 cattle and horses; about 150 left. This list might be extended indefinitely, but this will suffice to show the condition of the country.

So grave has the situation become that all hopes have been abandoned. The gnawing pangs of hunger are being felt by all alive, and scores are falling victims to starvation. The drain upon the more fortunate has been so steady that they cannot longer help one another, and they have appealed to the charity of the world for contributions of money, clothing, or provisions of any kind. As far as the live-stock industry is concerned, the agony is over, as the animals' bones now strew the once green pastures. It becomes necessary to feed the living, and remove them to other localities where they can begin the battle of life anew. Mass meetings have been held at some of the near-by towns, and preparations are now going on to relieve the sufferers.

SIOUX ARE IN THE SWIM.

Flush with Money and Wear Fine Clothes, but Still Eat Stewed Dog.

The Indians composing the Sioux nation are just now the happiest and most contented mortals in the country. This state of affairs is brought about by the distribution among them of tens of thousands of dollars by the government, being the first payment made for ceding about a million acres of land to the government a few years ago. As a further payment for the land the Sioux will receive during the next few months large quantities of agricultural implements, thousands of horses, cattle, oxen, etc. The Indians who are entitled to their portion of the money and goods distributed, says a Chamberlain (S. D.) dispatch, are those at Pine Ridge, Rosebud, Santee, Flandreau, Lower Brule, Crow Creek, Forest City, Standing Rock and Ponca agencies. As a result of these cash payments the towns nearest the agencies have been filled of late with Indians of all ages, sexes and condition, who lost no time in exchanging their money for articles of various kinds. Although the government furnishes them with practically all the necessaries of life, the red man can find many ways of squandering his money. Among the first places visited when they are looking for investments are clothing, boot and shoe and dry goods stores. They buy ginghams, calicoes of bright colors and flowered patterns, velvets, and occasionally silk for the squaws, and muslin, bright-colored shawls, trunks, valises, hats, children's overshoes, beads, etc. Millinery stores are also extensively patronized. It is only a short time before dealers are sold out of cigarettes, young Indians less than 10 years of age being as eager to smoke them as their elders.

Scores of the Sioux are annually becoming more aristocratic, and in order to maintain the proper dignity, invest their surplus wealth in buggies and double-seated carriages, the harnesses on the horses being the best in the market, and the Indians preferring those with brass trimmings. Now that most of the Sioux are content to reside in comfortable log or frame houses, especially in the winter time, when the airy tepee is hardly sufficient to protect them against the rigors of the northern weather, they wish to make the interior of their dwelling as comfortable and homelike as possible, and for this reason they are, when flush, good patrons of furniture stores. Here they purchase cupboards, bedsteads, chairs and occasionally a baby carriage. Owners of newly purchased baby carriages present an amusing sight. Coming from a store where he and his wife have just purchased a handsome one, the Sioux takes the lead, wheeling the empty carriage, while his wife follows in the rear, bringing on her back a large-sized papoose.

The Government furnishes the Indians with liberal supplies of meat of nearly all kinds, but, nevertheless, they expend large sums for this while in the border towns. During the present pilgrimage one Indian visited a local meat market and purchased pork to the amount of $13.50. During these visits of the Indians it is remarkable how many stray dogs disappear from the streets. A visit to the temporary Indian village in the outskirts of the town and an inspection of the contents of the large iron kettles steaming and boiling over the bright fires would solve the mystery. When the last stray dog has disappeared into the iron kettles of the Sioux, and subsequently into the stomachs of the red man and his friends, the Indians stroll through the residence portion of the town and watch for dogs that are large and fat.

When such a cur is discovered the Indians ascertain the owner, go to him or her and offer to buy the animal. Dog soup is still a favorite dish with the Sioux, and probably will be for many generations to come. An Indian will cut his hair, wear white man's clothes, adorn himself with a white shirt collar and necktie, cover his head with a stovepipe hat, shine his shoes occasionally, but he is not yet prepared to relinquish his craving for dog soup. After several days of trading and sightseeing the Indians return quietly to their reservations, empty in pocket, but rich in this world's goods. Their money is all gone, but they know the Great Father will give them more in the future.

PEACE IN HONDURAS.

President Vasquez Seeks an Asylum in Salvador.

The prospects of peace in Central America have not been so bright for nearly three years as they are now. This is because Vasquez, the President of Honduras, has sought safety in flight, and the leader of the rebels, Policarpo Bonilla, will soon be elected in his stead. It is about three years since Bogran's term of office expired as President of Honduras. Not being eligible to re-election, he managed to secure the election of Ponciano Leiva, a subservient tool. The candidate of the anti-administration party was Bonilla, who claimed that Leiva's election was unconstitutional and unfair, and at once began to sow the seeds of revolution. Bogran died, but Leiva was inaugurated. Gen. Domingo Vasquez became his chief friend and adviser and the head of his cabinet. Leiva finally became frightened at the proportions the insurrection had assumed, and turned the Presidency over to Vasquez. Vasquez was not popular, but he conducted a vigorous campaign against Bonilla, so that the latter was finally driven out of the country into Nicaragua.

Peace followed for a time, although Bonilla was quietly nursing his wrath and preparing for future operations. Conspirators against Vasquez were executed every now and then by order of the President and an outbreak was almost constantly expected. In the meantime Bonilla was collecting other exiles, and biding his time for the invasion of Honduras. Vasquez protested to the Nicaraguan Government against its harboring of such an expedition. The controversy ended finally in war. Last December the Nicaraguans together with a number of Honduran malcontents, under the leadership of Bonilla, invaded Honduras. Vasquez resisted as well as he was able, but was finally penned up with the remnant of his forces in the cadital. The city was besieged, until Tegucigalpa was surrendered to the rebel. It was predicted that Vasquez would be shot. It appears, however, that he has sought an asylum in Salvador. President Ezeta of that country will recognize Bonilla as the ruler of Honduras, and at the elections soon to follow Bonilla will undoubtedly be chosen President, and will grant amnesty to all who participated in the conflict.

In the long siege the allied armies lost only two generals, seven colonels and 200 privates. When peace is firmly established the Nicaraguan army with its leader, Gen. Ortez, will return to their own country. Vasquez was at La Union when last heard from, but will probably be taken into the interior for greater safety.

TORN IN TWO AND SUNK.

Report of the Loss of the Rebel Transport Venus Confirmed.

Rio Janeiro advices say that the reports of the loss of the rebel transport Venus have been confirmed, but the details of the loss of the vessel are meager. Friday morning the armed rebel transports Jupiter, Marte and Venus, which are lying off Porto Madama, took up positions and opened bombardment against the government batteries. The guns in the batteries responded quickly and a lively fire was exchanged. Suddenly there was a terrific roar heard above the booming of the guns and it was at once conjectured that an explosion had occurred. At first it was thought that disaster had befallen the transport Mater.

Immediately after the sound of the explosion was heard the men in the batteries and elsewhere along the shore saw a hugh cloud column of reddish brown smoke ascending and spreading out to wide dimensions as it rose. It was seen as the smoke cleared away a little that the explosion had occurred on the Venus. The vessel had been torn in half, and almost immediately afterward the stern half of the wreck went to the bottom. The bow half was on fire and in a few minutes the flames were raging furiously. This portion of the vessel floated for a half hour and then went down.

The Venus was commanded by Capt. Vasconcellos. He, with three officers and twenty-nine men, made up the complement of the vessel. Every soul on board was lost. Some of the crew could be seen for a time on the forward part of the vessel as it drifted helplessly burning, and efforts were made to rescue them, but the boats that were dispatched on this work were slow in reaching the scene of the disaster, and by the time they arrived the men on the wreck were forced by the fire into the water. Many theories are current as to the cause of the disaster. The most probable of these is that a shot from the shore batteries struck the Venus amidships and plowed its way through the hull and boilers.

'TWAS A RIDE FOR LIFE.

A Western Man's Tale of a Buffalo Hunt.

It happened in the winter of 1869-'70, began the old hunter and plainsman, when the subject of buffaloes was brought up. It was a bad winter in my country and the mercury was well down on the short-cut to China. The buffaloes had taken refuge in mighty herds in the country around the Porcupine River, which is one of tributaries of the Yellowstone. One day the word reached our camp that a herd was grazing about two miles distant, and our men got together for a hunt. I knew the country round about like a book, and instead of going with the rest of the boys started on a short-cut across a hog back and into the next valley where the buffaloes were said to be. I rode on some distance, but did not see the herd. Suddenly I heard shots. A regular chorus of bangs rang out. I turned my horse's head in the direction of the shooting and made up my mind to ride back and join the crowd. But my plans wouldn't work. They had fired into the bunch from the other side and had stampeded it. The maddened animals, and there were fully one thousand of them, were tearing over the snow, jumping ravines and dashing toward me at a terrific pace. Behind the herd the cracks of the guns rattled.

The valley was narrow and the sides steep. I did not have time to get out. There was only one thing to do—fly and keep ahead of the herd until I found an opening in the hills. It was a furious ride. The snow here and there had been made soft by the sun and it was very treacherous under a horse's hoof. Suddenly, when the leaders of the herd were but 200 yards behind, my pony stumbled and turned a somersault and I was thrown a considerable distance into a snowdrift. My rifle was strapped upon the saddle and I had no time to go back and get it, for the herd was upon us. I fired my pistol at the leaders and they slackened their speed a little. But one old bull looked at me a minute and then made a dash. When he ducked to impale me on his horns I dodged and caught his shaggy wool and was soon astride his back. This made him mad and he tried his best to unseat me, but I held on. The pressure of the herd behind him compelled him to run for his life.

I knew my only hope was to stick to that uncomfortable seat until I had ridden the beast to death. By and by the pressure behind began to slacken and my bull wanted to rest, but I spurred him on. It was 3 o'clock when I mounted him. About 2 o'clock the next morning he began to wabble. He lurched a few times and then stumbled to his knees. He rolled over and before I had time to save myself my left leg was under him. At last I got it free and managed to cut his throat. I then took my bearings and found I was a hundred miles from camp. I made my self comfortable and feasted on buffalo steak. Before long the boys came up to where I was sitting. They had found the carcass of my horse and had kept on in the hope of finding that of myself. The herd must have turned off through some break in the hills, for my bull was the only one left in sight.

Mice Used as Thread Spinners.

A Scotchman, who is evidently as patient as he is ingenious, has trained two little mice to spin thread with an apparatus of which he is the inventor. The mechanical principle of the contrivance is a small mill, which is operated by the paws of the mice. They can each wind on and off per day from 100 to 120 pieces of thread, and to do this they must supply a motor power by which a course of ten and one-half miles could be traversed. Although the two mice are quite small they perform this task every day without apparent fatigue. A cent's worth of flour furnishes them food enough for five weeks. During that time the little animals have spun in the neighborhood of 3,850 threads, each about one and one-half yards long. At this rate each mouse earns not quite ½ cent per day, or the munificent sum of about $2 per year. The ingenious inventor proposes to build a house 90 feet long, 60 feet wide and 48 feet high, which he expects to equip on a large scale with thread mills operated by mice. He says he can put in about 10,000 mills.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Britain's Output of Books for 1893.

It appears that the total number of books published in 1893, was 6,382. This, however, is 150 below the number of the previous year. If we distinguish between new books and new editions the numbers are of new books, 5,129 as compared with 4,915 in 1892. The new works of fiction have fallen from 1,147 to 935; but this is probably due to some differences in classification, and many works probably classed before as fiction now go to swell the list of "juvenile works and tales," which have made an otherwise astonishing rise from 292 to 659. In an advance sheet of "The Publishers' Circular," from which we gather these facts, this is the explanation given. In political economy there is a falling off from 151 to 71. Voyages and travels are nearly the same as the previous year, about 230, while works of history and biography are slightly fewer. There is a small increase in volumes of poetry, as also in year books and serial volumes. Medical and surgical works are not so numerous. This remark applies also to belles lettres.—London Daily Telegraph.

Made Him Sick.

Colonel Dodge in a recent book tells a story about a well-bred Englishman, a visitor in this country, who was fed by his American cousins "constantly on that confection yclept Washington pie." One day, after he had been fed too much of the confection, he felt uncomfortable. Instead of growling and grumbling, and alluding to the blasted climate, like the proverbial Englishman of fiction, he meekly and quietly remarked: "Doubtless General Washington was a great and good man, but d—— his pie."

The Puzzle Solved.

Perhaps no local disease has puzzled and baffled the medical profession more than nasal catarrh. While not immediately fatal it is among the most troublesome and disgusting ills the flesh is heir to, and the things to shun very few or no cases of radical cure of chronic catarrh by any of the many modes of treatment until the introduction of Ely's Cream Balm a few years ago. The success of this preparation has been most gratifying and surprising.

WILLIAM FRYER of Crawfordsville, was trampled under the heels of several horses and his skull fractured. He was aiding in taking horses to the cars to be shipped away, and was riding a horse and leading four others, when they ran away.

THE 2-months'-old daughter of George Woodfork, colored, residing at Fifth and Howard streets, Indianapolis, was found dead in bed by her mother the other morning. Coroner Beck was summoned and he is of the opinion that the child was suffocated by the unusual heavy covering while the mother was asleep.

THOMAS HARDIN and Ora Davis were arrested at Crawfordsville for stealing a pair of socks from a line in broad daylight. Hardin, who carried a revolver, was fined $10, sent to jail for ten days, and had the socks taken from him. Davis was ordered out of town.

PRESIDENT J. E. JONES, of the Emley Steel and Tin-plate Company has placed his orders for 500,000 fire brick, 100 barrels of cement, and 100 carloads of sand to be used on the buildings which the company is erecting at Summitville. A force of fifty men is now at work digging the foundations. Mr. Jones says it is his intention to be making tin-plate in Summitville inside of six weeks.

Slaughter with Machine Guns.

The interesting account of the fighting in Matabeleland which Captains White and Donevan have given us, in effect, a glorification of the machine guns. It was all due to the Maxims, and the Hotchkiss guns completed the rout in every instance. So long as the English troops took ordinary precautions there was no possibility of disaster. "The laagers were a sheet of flame; it was no use trying to advance." Seven thousand warriors hurled themselves upon the guns in vain. They were not "mowed down," says Capt. Wilson, but "lay pretty thick." Well, we will not quarrel over a phrase. The fact remains that between 1,500 and 2,000 natives were killed. The moral of the campaign, as far as the army is concerned, is in the triumph of the Maxim, and European war officers will please note.

And the Lions Roared.

It is rather difficult to distrain upon a man's goods when his only earthly possessions consist of a cage full of lions. This fact has been forcibly brought home to M. Leclaire, a Paris engineer who made a perambulating cage for a lion tamer named Marck. The lions were introduced into a piece called "Les Bicyclist en Voyage," in which an actress danced a skirt dance in the cage, doubtless to the great astonishment of the poor beasts. M. Leclaire could not obtain the 4,500 francs due, whereupon he put the law in motion. A broker went down to seize the the wild beasts, who, possibly at the secret instigation of the owner, roared at him so threateningly directly he appeared that he did not care to have anything to do with their removal. M. Leclaire is casting about for a way out of the difficulty.

An Ancient Custom.

In the courts of Venice, when a prisoner is about to be condemned to death, a tall and ghostly looking individual dressed in a long black gown, walks majestically to the center of the court-room, bows solemnly to the judges, and in a cavernous voice pronounces the words, "Remember the baker!" Then he bows again and stalks away. Abut 300 years ago a baker was executed in Venice for a crime of which he was not guilty. When his innocence was established, the judges who condemned him gave a sum of money to the city, the interest on which was to be devoted to the setting up and perpetual burning of a lamp, known as the "lamp of expiation," in the Palace of the Doges.

Battles of the Future.

Writers on military science unite in claiming that future battles will begin with a series of hot skirmishes along the front. These skirmishes will gradually increase in heat and the number of combatants, reinforcements being sent according to circumstances, until the entire front is involved. Artillery will be used as far as possible, but after the battle is fully under way little use can be made of cavalry save in outflanking. The day of charges in wars is over, on account of the increase of range and effect in cannons and rifles. Little can be predicted of future battles beyond opening, inasmuch as the rest must now be learned by experiment.—New York Ledger.

Life or Death?

It is of vital importance that it should be understood by persons whose kidneys are inactive, that this condition of things is finally inductive of a state of the organs where life hangs in the balance. Bright's disease, diabetes, albuminuria are all diseases of a very obstinate character in their mature stage, and all have a fatal tendency. They often baffle the most practiced medical skill and the most approved remedies of materia medica. But opposed at the outset—that is to say, when the kidneys begin to discharge their functions inactively—with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the dangerous tendency is checked. Very useful, also, is this household medicine for those ailments of common occurrence—constipation, biliousness, dyspepsia and nervousness. It is a safeguard against malaria and averts chronic rheumatism.

Four Heirs Get a Quarter Each.

Four legacies at 26 cents each result from the will of Matthew Stanley, late of Watervliet, probated before Surrogate Conway the other day. The estate consists of real estate valued at $7,500, mortgaged for $5,000, and $2,500 worth of personal estate. The will devises to the testator's wife, Eveline, the income of one-third of the property during her lifetime. A son Edward of Barton, Vt., is bequeathed $1. The rest of the estate is devised to William L. Stanley and James Oscar Stanley. Edward Stanley is dead and his bequest of $1 goes to his children—Susie C. Standish, Eliza A. Chapman, Springfield, Mass.; Samuel E. Standish, Barton, Vt., and Freeman C. Standish, San Francisco, Cal.—who will receive 25 cents each.—Albany Argus.

Deafness Can't Be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Not Admitted.

There once lived two friends who were bound together not only by common interests and by a love like that of David and Jonathan, but by the tie that the wife of the one was the cousin of the other. Alas! the two friends quarreled. Great and bitter was the quarrel. Terrible were the things they said of each other. One day the man who had the wife was speaking of his late friend and present enemy. "Sir," he said, "the man was never a gentleman. He couldn't be. None of that family ever could pretend to be gentlemen." "Why," said the listener, "you told me once that your wife was his cousin." For a moment he quailed—then he recovered, and he smiled with the sweetest smile, "My dear fellow, did you ever hear me say that my wife was a lady?"

Man Milliners.

So highly is the work of man milliners appreciated, that leading New York modistes hire them by the day or week as trimmers. It goes without saying that these trimmers are art artists. Their greatest value lies in what they call original designing. The frames or shapes in stock are taken with whatever decorative material may be available and unique bonnets and hats are evolved which may serve as models or be used for special orders. The men trimmers command a salary of $50 a week or $10 a day of six hours. They are regularly employed by modistes who, in connection with dress and cloak making do some milinery work, but the largest class of patronage comes from the millinery shops.

Strikes in Turkey.

Only two strikes were ever known to occur in Turkey. One was of dock yard laborers in the Government employ for their arrears in pay—they had received nothing for several months. The other was of cigarette makers in the Government factories for the exclusion of women from the works. Both were successful. The dockmen got their money; and the women were turned out of the factories with the comment: "Allah! What does it matter? They are only women."

Dressmaking.

Most likely the oldest dressmaker's bill in the world has been discovered on a Chaldean tablet, dating 2800 B. C. It has an entry of "ninety-two pure vestments for the priests." Among the items are "ten white robes of the Temple, eight robes of the house of his lady, ten collars of the house of his lady, ten pair of gold collars, two white robes, and four scented robes." Also "two winders," probably scarfs for binding about the waist.

A Russian Cursing Prayer.

An English paper says that on every Christmas day since the Nopoleonic invasion of Russia in 1812 a prayer has been recited in all the churches of the Czar's empire calling down the curses of Heaven upon the French. Indeed, the anathema formed part of the Christmas day liturgy of the orthodox church. But last Christmas day, Russia and France having become friendly, the Czar ordered the cursing prayer to be omitted.

Any animal that is stunted in its early youth will fail to make as good an ultimate development as it would have done otherwise, no matter how much it is pampered in later life. Somebody's Good.

To make our own troubles the means of helping the troubles of others is a noble effort for good. A well-illustrated instance of this kindly sympathy is shown in a letter from Mr. Enoch L. Hanscom, School Agent, Marshfield, Me., an old Union soldier. He says: «It may do somebody some good to state, I am a man of 60 and when 40 had a bad knee and rheumatism set in. I was lame three years and very bad most of the time. I got St. Jacobs Oil and put it on three times and it made a cure. I am now in good health.»

Crops.

If the sowing of a crop is not rightly done, all remaining labor will be in vain, so far as the effort to produce a full yield is concerned. We have seen men who leave this most important operation wholly to hired help. If there is any one thing that the farmer should do himself, it is to sow the seed.

WHAT WILL THE SAVE AND THE WORLD DO NEXT

Because of the high speed at which Gender Saws are run more power is wasted in friction than is used in sawing, where the bearings of the shaky, wooden saw frame put out of line.

In the Aermotor Saw Frame, the only Steel Saw Frame, this difficulty is absolutely and wholly overcome. THE BEARINGS FOR THE SHAFT ARE MADE BY SIMPLY BUTTING IT IN THE END OF A PIECE OF STEEL TUBING. The rod linking and bobbit are then slotted so as to take up wear with a bolt. The frame is all steel, very rigid, and riveted together so that nothing can get loose or out of plane. The power so saved is equal to one horse, and this is the thing that has for some time kept a point of the greatest importance in a saw mill, to be used by modified horses.

The swing frame which carries the wood to be sawed and which automatically returns to its place has also a guard to keep a pole off from the fly wheel and yet does not cause it to present very much of an angle to the saw. The use of a 360 lb. fly wheel and 20 inch saw makes this easily possible. It is therefore, a very desirable Pole Saw, making it easy to saw up any long material quickly and safely. Another feature of

Here we offer this very superior saw frame with a 20 inch superior saw at a much less price than any cheap imperfect wooden frame can be bought for, we are sure that the friends of the Aermotor will appreciate the fact that we have again been doing the public a great service and have distinguished ourselves in redesigning an old article and putting it into an infinitely improved shape.

For a saw of similar size and quality, and ordinary wooden frame, you would be charged $60. We make this all-steel frame and this superior saw at $40, AND GIVE YOU A CHANCE TO GET IT AT $15, for the benefit of our General Aermotor.

We have sold an enormous number of Power Aermotors outfits with which saws are used, and a poor saw that runs hard detracts from their usefulness and their reputation. If we furnish a very superior saw at a very low price, many geared outfits will be bought to drive them. Wherever one Geared Aermotor goes, others are sure to follow.

When we take a well known article, redesign it, and put it in a shape very superior to anything that has appeared before, it widens and enlarges our reputation for doing well everything to which we put our hands, and this is the thing that has for the past brought us so much business to our factory, and which in the future, we have no doubt, will bring, practically, all the business in our line. It is this reputation that we are daily working for.

We believe that this Aermotor Steel Saw Frame and Saw will confirm and enhance the fame which we have gained in the manufacture of Steel Windmills and Steel Towers, hence, for the purpose of making it known so that everybody may know that a good thing can be had for a small price, WE OFFER THIS STEEL SAW AND FRAME FOR $15 CASH AND FIVE COPIES OF ADVERTISEMENT No. 3 of this series as per conditions stated in No. 2. In our next advertisement, No. 4, we shall talk of galvanizing, and make an offer that will be of universal interest. This is adv. No. 3. AERMOTOR CO.

A NARROW ESCAPE!

How it Happened.

The following remarkable event in a lad's life will interest the reader: "For a long time had a terrible pain at my heart, which fluttered almost incessantly. I had no appetite and could not sleep. I would be compelled to sit up in bed and belch gas from my stomach until I thought every minute would be my last. There was a feeling of oppression about my heart, and I was afraid to draw a full breath. I couldn't sweep a room without sitting down and resting; but, thank God, by the help of New Heart Cure all this is past and I feel like another woman. Before using the New Heart Cure I had taken different so-called remedies and been treated by doctors without any benefit until I was both discouraged and disgusted. My husband bought me a bottle of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and am happy to say I never regretted it, as I now have a splendid appetite and sleep well. I weighed 125 pounds when I began taking the remedy, and now I weigh 130½. Its effect in my case has been truly marvelous. It far surpasses any other medicine I have ever taken or any benefit I ever received from physicians."—Mrs. Harry Starr, Pottsville, Pa., October 12, 1892.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is sold on a positive guarantee by all druggists, or by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles $5, express prepaid. WATERLOO.

Mrs. J. H. Thomas is dangerously ill.

Mrs. Benage Long is home from Wauseon.

The L. M. C. met Tuesday evening, Feb. 27, at the home of Mrs. C. N. Francis.

On the evening of March 6 the regular meeting of the L. M. C. was held at the home of Mrs. A. Fawcett.

Mrs. Ella O'Keefe died in Michigan, Feb 28, leaving one child, a little girl. She has lived in Waterloo some years.

Mrs. C. Brandaberry died last Thursday morning. The was well a short time before. Her death resulted from a fall.

Mrs. Henry Willis is improving in health, but at last accounts Mr. Willis was not as well, although he had been out once a short distance from home.

Peter Grambling died Wednesday of last week very suddenly. Upon arising in the morning he complained of not feeling well and in a few momente was dead.

Saturday afternoon, little Earl Luce, son of Warren Luce, in trying to imitate older boys in sliding down the railing to the flight of stairs on the north side of Mrs. Winslow's drug store, lost his balance in his effort to get astride the banister and fell to the sidewalk below, hitting on the left side of his forehead. He is very sore, but no bones broken, and says he is all right now.

Your correspondent went Sunday morning to hear "the boy preacher" at the Evangelical church, where the United Brethren are holding protracted meeting. The reverend gentleman is only nineteen years old, is easy, speaks readily and never hesitates for words. His sermon was practical and interesting and should be of interest to all his listeners. We trust his efforts may be largely blessed.

The result of a series of meetings in Decatur, Indiana, has been of intense interest in the cause of religion, and a great number of conversions are reported, not only among adults, but many children. The friends of Mr. and Mrs. Dell Locke will be gratified to hear that both are among the happy number who have sought and found the pearl of great price. Their son, Leon, has also chosen the better part. The parents united with the Methodist church of that place.

GARRETT.

Tim. Debruler is on the sick list.

Joe. Debruler, of Cromwell, is visiting in the city.

Mrs. Irvin Imler, of Elkhart, was in the city last week.

Al. Andrews was at Elwood, this state, several days this week.

Harry L. Askew, editor of the Avilla News, was in the city Monday.

Messrs. Nickelson and McDermott, of Chicago, were in the city last week.

Dr. Gamble and wife left this week for Laporte, Ind., where they will make their future home.

Oscar Burtnett and Nannie VanCuran were married at Auburn last week. We wish the young couple much success.

Harry Gilhausen held the lucky number which drew the fancy quilt that was chanced off by the ladies auxiliary to the B. of L. E., March 2.

The Tarney House was discovered to be on fire about one o'clock Monday afternoon, but the flames were extinguished before much damage was done.

"Mugg's Landing," given for the benefit of the Red Men's band and under the direction of W. J. Martin, Monday evening, was well attended. They gave a very creditable entertainment.

A wrestling match under the direction of the Garrett City Athletic Association will be given at Clark's hall Friday evening. The contestants will be D. W. Linville, of this place, and Harvey Parker, of Erie, Penn. Mr. Parker is one of the finest middle weight wrestlers in the world, and it will probably be the best entertainment of this kind ever given in the county.

Three "canaries," two of which claimed residence at Angola and one at Fort Wayne, were arrested by Marshal Dare last Thursday for being disorderly on the streets. They were taken before Mayor Camp and fined. We think it is about time for this kind of females to find out that Garrett is no place for them and we hope that in the future they will stay away.

Last Saturday Marshal Dare was informed that a poker game was in progress in the east end of town in a house occupied by Charles Archer. With a deputy he went to the house and demanded admission, which was refused and he kicked the door in. After looking around a short time he heard noises in the pantry and pulling the door open, which was by no means an easy task, he found Wm. Saturfield, Wm. Driscoll and Chas. Archer. They were taken before Mayor Camp, but on lack of evidence were acquitted.

MOORES.

Mrs. Wm. Oiler is reported as being very sick.

Protracted meeting at Mt. Pleasant, conducted by Rev. Tedrow.

J. Grubb, of Auburn, has organized a singing class at Norris Chapel.

J. R. Lanning, jr., was at Angola last week as a witness on the Deeters trial.

Jennie Steward, who was reported to be very low with lagrippe is now improving.

The Mooresville school is preparing for an exhibition March 30. All are cordially invited.

Writing school closed at Mooresville last Thursday evening, O. Wiggins, of Angola, teacher.

Will Little passed through this place last week to summon more witnesses for the Deeters trial.

L. A. Hathaway passed through our quiet little city last week with a large assortment of stuffed animals and birds.

Ella Lanning has been going to Dillon quite frequently in the last three or four weeks, but it is hard to tell whom she admires.

Edith Staley says she thinks the brakeman on the Wabash railroad is about the stuff, but is not quite ready to run away with him.

J. V. Smurr, teacher of the Mooresville school, has adopted a new and very good rule. When you get three marks you go home from school. This does not mean three marks from a hickory gad, but three chalk marks on the blackboard.

BUTLER.

Mother Bowman is seriously ill, with only meager hopes of recovery.

Quite a number of farmers in this vicinity will rent or sell their farms and move to Butler in the near future.

William Yates has sold his farm and moved to Butler and occupies the Henry Wilson property on Green street.

A number of additions have been made to the M. E. and Latheran churches recently, with good indications of more to follow.

Thomas Rudd has sold his meat market business to Jonathan Haverstock and his son-in-law Nick Shiel. We wish the new firm abundant success. Mr. Rudd has been with us many years and our people have only good words for him.

Cyrus S. Stoy has had the grand good fortune to secure a clerkship under M. V. B. Spencer, United States Pension Commissioner at Indianapolis, Ind. Our people regardless of party affiliations are very much pleased over Mr. Stoy's appointment, as he is in every way well fitted to make a good and efficient clerk and we heartily congratulate him.

The managers of the defense in the Deeters murder trial seem to be making the most of their expensive medical expert testimony. It seems a little strange that reputable physicians would sell their testimony on such occasions. When such testimony enters largely into the prosecution or defense and is purchased at a greater price than ordinary testimony, its value should be sifted very closely by an intelligent jury or court.

Rev. Charles Scoville continues his revival effort at the Christian church and has added about 170 members to their faith. As a result one saloon has closed its doors and the others have a sadly deserted appearance, a few mourners still hanging around lamenting for the time of free drinks that seems to come no more. The success of this meeting is phenomenal from the fact that its accessions have been to so great an extent from that element of our community that are not usually church goers or frequenters of our Sunday schools. May the good work go on until grass and weeds hide the path that lead to the saloon, gambling den and brothel.

Aluminum.

From Chicago Inter Ocean, Feb. 7, 1894.

We are reminded of the various uses to which aluminum can be put by the receipt of a neat lead pencil made of that metal from the manufacturers of "Garland" stoves and ranges.

The souvenir is three-cornered, fitting the hand nicely, and being as light as hardwood and as strong as steel is a very acceptable article.

Aluminum was quite costly when first discovered, but is gradually becoming cheaper, and should it ever become cheap enough there is no end of the uses to which it could be put to advantage; for bridges, armor plate, ships, etc., no better metal has been discovered, and while most clay contains aluminum, the principal cost is in its extraction from the clay. Experiment has proven that aluminum mixed with iron makes the latter pour smoothly, prevents blow holes and liability of cracking, and benefits the iron in every way. As "Garland" stoves and ranges are made of this mixture, and as more of them are made and sold every year than any other stoves, it proves that The Michigan Stove Company's methods are the best.

Lavina Cramer, wife of Andrew Cramer and daughter of William and Nancy Mechamer, was born in Williams county, Ohio, July 17, 1844. She, with her parents, came to DeKalb county in 1845, where she was married to Andrew S Cramer Sept. 20, 1865. She died at Altona, Ind., Feb. 27 at 12:15 a. m., aged 49 years, 7 months and 10 days. She was the mother of nine children, six of whom live to mourn her departure. A husband, a father, sisters and friends survive her. Interment at Evergreen cemetery February 28.

Obituary.

Margaret Ann Robeson was born in Alleghany county, Maryland, March 2, 1836, departed this life February 22, 1894, aged 57 years, 11 months and 20 days. She was united in marriage to William N. Blucher December 16, 1855. To this union were born four children, two sons and two daughters, three of whom survive her. Her husband preceded her to his final resting place nearly 29 years, having departed this life November 21, 1875. She was baptized in her childhood, united with the Lutheran church in this place under Rev. Leathers' ministry about 21 years ago, from which time she has been a member of the church. She lived an exemplary christian life, always trying to follow in the footsteps of her Savior. She was greatly attached to her home and children. Her friends in this vicinity mourn her departure, although realizing that their loss is her eternal gain. The funeral services were held in the Lutheran church, conducted by Rev. J. A. Burkett.

Where Ignorance was Bliss.

The American compacters had a meeting at the court room last Thursday evening and quite a number were in attendance. The speaking was all done by Bliss, Husselman and Smith. Husselman's speech had the most originality in it, but he made the usual error of the populists, of claiming that farmers are called "hayseeds," "clodhoppers," etc. Everyone knows this is not so and never has been so, and we give him the advantage of believing he was not in earnest about it. His remarks on the "Relation of farmer, manufacturer and merchant," were very fair, but quite contrary from what populists have been trying to put into practice. He said each was necessary to the success of the other, which is true. But the Alliance, the P. L, the HO, the N3, etc., have always insisted that there was an impassable chasm that did and should keep all these classes apart and make them opponents. D. T. Smith in the debate said that the "foreign ownership of lands" was worse than the "issuing of bonds." He had a correct list of lands given or sold to foreign capitalists and to railroads, but forgot to say that this bad disposal of public lands was mostly due to republican management, and also that large amounts had been forced back from these corporations by democratic policy. And besides he left the impression that these large tracts were all given away recently and were still unoccupied and in hands of foreigners and railroads. Such is not the case. Some, as we said, have been brought back by democratic votes in congress, and nearly all the rest has at different times been divided up and sold to actual settlers. Bliss, who was purposely made the star of the evening, said that issuing bonds was worse than selling or giving away the public land. He had a correct list of the various issues of bonds. But he also deceived his hearers and perhaps himself by carrying the idea that the sum total of all these various issues represented the actual total of bonded indebtedness. But it is like this: Several of these bond issues were to take the place of other bonds that were matured or were retired. If one gives a note at a bank, say $1,000 for three months, then at the end of that time takes it up by giving another, and so on for the four times in the year, that does not show that he owes or has owed $4,000. It is a new issue to pay off an old issue. But even had the speaker given a fair statement, the truth would again be, that the entire fault in this mismanagement lay with the republican party. All who attended this meeting could not but understand that it was all planned to get Windy Bliss before the public. And the only lesson taught by the meeting is this: That any democrat who thinks of joining the populists, should stick to his old party, the party that had not made these mistakes, but had fought against them. And that any republican who thinks of joining the populists ought to join the democrats instead, that being the only party that ever even tried to prevent these land steals or bad management of bonds, or that ever did or tried to do anything for the common people. At the conclusion the doors of the church were opened, so to speak, for any one to become a "jiner." But it was the wrong crowd and no dollars dropped into the coffers of the "Americanized Compact." People are getting too sharp to be gulled by these cheap John societies that grow up in a night and perish in a day, leaving nothing behind them but the remembrance of several hard-earned dollars now gone forever—dollars earned by the sweat and toil of the farmer and given without equivalent to be transmitted into the smoke of fragrant havanas in the office of the general managers of the Great American Compact.

—UNDER FARMERS BANK.

THE DEETERS MURDER TRIAL.

WEDNESDAY THURSDAY AND FRIDAY.

Old Mrs. Deeters was again put on the stand after the "experts" for the defense had been called. She still insisted that Sam was crazy. Admitted that neighbors talked with her the night of the murder. It was claimed that at that time she told them Sam was not crazy, but only had one of his mad spells. Now she denies having told them so. We copy a portion of her testimony as found in the Toledo Bee:

She stated that on August 31, the day of the shooting, her son came home from Auburn about noon where he had his money on deposit, and she asked when he entered the house what luck he had in getting his money; that defendant replied he didn't get a dollar; that she had dinner ready for him, and he sat down to the table, but only ate a "few bites;" that after dinner he said he would take his "beast" to his farm; he left and did not return until about 4 o'clock that day; when he came back he stepped in the house and said "I will get that money now;" that she had loaned him $75 before that and was to let him have $75 in addition; that she asked him if he had a note, and he replied "no, but I will get one;" that she then turned her head to look after her supper which she was preparing, and he struck her three times, the first blow striking the stove lid and breaking it in pieces; that she then screamed and sat down on the chair to recover a little, after which she took the basin and water out doors to wash the blood from her arm; that when she got out doors she saw Mrs. Lowe standing on the outside of the fence looking into the house; that before she left the house defendant had gone up stairs and got his revolver, and came out where she was, and without saying a word to Mrs. Lowe began shooting at her; witness stated that she then started and ran to Ames Bachtel's and remained there untill after they had taken her son to Butler. Witness was asked on cross-examination, several impeaching questions as to whether she had not told several of the neighbors the day of the tragedy that her son was not crazy, but was mad again. Witness answered all questions of this character in the negative, and was very earnest in her extended explanations to each reply.

Friday, immediately after the calling of court for the afternoon session, before the jury was brought to the jury box by the special bailiff, Judge McClellan arose and said:

Your honor, the state now desires to withdraw any and all objections made to the questions propounded to the medical experts concerning conversations had with the accused at the time of the examination made of defendant and waive all objections to the defense recalling these witnesses at any time during the progress of the trial.

Mr. Penfield in an instant entered an objection to this and stated to the court if such action was taken the defendant desired to ask for a continuance; that Dr. McCasky had left the state and was in New Orleans, and that Dr. Wyman was in the city of Detroit, and without the jurisdiction of this court; that they had no means by which these witnesses could be recalled.

Mr. Barr then requested of the court time to prepare and file a motion for continuance.

The afternoon was spent in getting their showing prepared and at 5 o'clock the same was filed.

Defendant's attorneys stated that they did not wish to argue the motion, and Judge Powers said that as it was the hour for adjournment he would rule on the matter in the morning.

The affidavit contained 10 pages of type-written matter, and was very adroitly drawn.

Among other things the affiant, Mrs. Emerick, stated that she had taken upon her the conducting of her brother's defense, and that she had brought medical experts here to examine defendant as to his condition of mind, at great expense; that they would swear defendant was insane when such examinations were made; that this could not be proven by any other witnesses, and she had exhausted all means possible to obtain further evidence, and it would be a hardship to compel defense to proceed with this evidence.

Saturday forenoon was consumed by both sides, after which the court ruled that the state might withdraw their objections to evidence and he would still exclude the testimony and overrule defendant's motion for continuance.

The state commenced their rebutting testimony this afternoon.

MONDAY AND TUESDAY.

Nelson Smurr for the state testified as to Deeters. Did not feel certain as to Deeters' soundness of mind, but had never known him to show any dangerous temper till the day of the murders.

Mrs. G. W. Hines was called by the state. She had testified as to Sam's coming to their house, and now added that though he might have been unsound then, she did not think he was at the time of the murder. Several other witnesses for the prosecution have been on the stand, and testify that they think Deeters was of sound mind when the crimes were committed. The trial will hardly be finished next week.

Another Fire.

But it was not as bad as it might have been. J. W. Baxter's dwelling caught fire last Friday night about half past ten, while most of the family were away, and came near proving a total loss. The smaller children were asleep, while Mrs. Baxter and her daughter Mary, were just on their way home from the school social at Mr. Rose's. Those who reached the fire first roused the little ones, who came out half dazed at being startled so suddenly from sleep. The fire had caught from a defective flue overhead in the kitchen, and as the attic there, and other attics connecting with it, were built close and strong, it may have smouldered for an hour or so. The house is large and the fire crept upward from one attic to another till smoke was pouring out of all the roofs, and it looked as if nothing could save the building. The furniture was rapidly carried out, and as usual in such cases, much of it was damaged by excited ones who threw the various articles about with great recklessness. The fire department was promptly on hand but the long reach of hose that was run from the big well at the north-west corner of the public square, had to to be laid in the deep thin mud around two sides of a square and then carried into the yard. This made it hard to handle, and hard to move the hose forward or to change it around, as was several times necessary. But when the water was fairly playing, the signs of flames soon died out and nothing but smoke and steam could be seen. But the roof was strong and tight and the fight of the firemen was long and hard. Finally a hose was carried inside and up into the small rooms of the third story, or attic by J. F. Aber and Alt. Moody, who managed to live in the smoke a short time. This gave the fire a backset. Holes were cut through the roof, and the nozzle also played from such points, sending the streams down between the roofs and the sheeting, till the fire was subdued. Of course much damage was done by water, more no doubt than by fire. But such is always the case, and without the water the entire building would have been destroyed. Early Saturday morning Mr. Eckhart got help, and the work of cleaning up and getting things in shape began. Mr. Baxter himself was absent at Hamilton, and did not return till Saturday afternoon. The house will need repairs in the roof, and some part of the plastering may have to be put on anew. But it is a great deal better than a pile of ashes yet. We believe there was no insurance.

NOTES.

The usual things happened while hurriedly taking out the furniture. One man opened an upper window and carefully put out a bedroom stand till it cleared the window, then threw it headlong to the ground, where it broke of course.

The man who knew better than the firemen how to handle the hose and manage the affair, was on hand in great force.

The joke is on Miles Baxter. He wanted to get open the door of the law office on the corner so as to put some of the things into that building for safe keeping. He proceeded to kick in the door, which resisted with great strength. But at last it gave way. Some one suggested that C. M. Brown, Mr. Baxter's law partner, who was on the ground, had a key to the office. As this was suggested Miles happened to think that he had a key himself in his pocket.

THAT BICYCLE STOOP.

At a recent cycle show in England an invention was exhibited which claimed to prevent the ugly and deforming "bicycle stoop," so called. It consisted chiefly of a rest and air cushion, against which the rider could lean the forward part of his body while he pedaled.

But really must it come to this? In order to ride a machine swiftly and surely, is it necessary for a young man to bend forward as though he had a very bad pain in his insides? No, emphatically declare the best authorities on the subject. At the last bicycle race in New York the riders sat upright, as we are told man was made in the first place.

The ugly bicycle stoop is a fad, nothing else, and it is to be hoped it has had its day. New riders used to think they could pedal better by stooping forward and getting the nose nearer the toes, but that is a fallacy. A man can sit straight up and pedal as forcefully as he can when stooping forward. The best and most graceful riders demonstrate this fully. And as to supports to keep the rider from stooping, the Almighty gave the cyclist the best sort of a one in the first place. That is his backbone. Let him use it.—Ex.

The Sheriff Slapped 'Em.

The gang of toughs that are being boarded at public expense at the jail should be taken out and ducked to cool off their brutal enthusiasm. Every day or two we have heard complaints of the coarse and often insulting remarks made to passers by, for when the prisoners are out in the corridors they can easily make themselves heard. Last Saturday they became unusually annoying and that day and Sunday afternoon got so boisterous that Mrs. Ralston asked them to stop. But it did no good. She then referred the matter to Mr. Ralston, the sheriff, who also talked to them, calling attention to the kindness with which he and his wife had always treated them. But they paid no attention to this. He then told them he would punish them if they did not behave and quiet down, but they only laughed at this. He at once went out on the square and meeting Will Miller and Jack Bland, asked them to go back with him and lock him into the jail with the prisoners They did this, and when locked inside Mr. Ralston began in dead earnest. He called out or dragged out one prisoner after another and cuffed or spanked him soundly, till he was glad to promise better behavior. One man showed fight, Wm. Morehouse, who is a large man, swore the sheriff shou'd not touch him. There was a short fight, when Morehouse found himself knocked into a heap and his nose considerably disfigured. The blood flowed for some time. This lesson was a rough one, but there was not a blow struck amiss, and these gentry have been a little more decent since. Sheriff Ralston deserves a chromo as big as Rhode Island.

'Squire Walborn's Court.

The 'Squire was inundated with business last Saturday. Mrs. Derthick had two Angola girls arrested for frequenting a house of ill fame and the 'Squire had to fine them, and not being forehanded financially and their well-to-do friends not being in sight, they went to jail. As usual, when any case of this sort comes up, a lot of idle men and boys about town gather in and listen to the stuff that is always dragged out on such occasions The room, however is quite small and the popularity of the court became a nuisance. So on this occasion P. D. West, the prosecutor, asked the 'Squire to have every one in the room sworn as they were probably all witnesses. The 'Squire said "Stand up and be sworn" The greater part stood up, but not all, and it took a second order from the justice to get all to stand up. But he succeeded and swore all of them as witnesses. Then he said "Only one witness will be allowed in the court room at a time The rest can retire." And the rest did retire for they saw they were caught. The room was once more comfortable and everybody had room to spare. But the "witnesses" felt sold. If they were not real witnesses they had been sworn as such, and if they were real witnesses it was because they knew something about the Derthick crowd and their hangers on. Neither view of it was very pleasant, and the chances are the 'Squire's court will not be so badly crowded in future when such cases come up. Let the good work of cleaning out some of these social blotches go on. And right here, we will add, that the work will be materially simplified if a few men who call themselves respectable, would withold their patronage from such disreputable places. They surely cannot suppose people are ignorant of what is going on when many have seen them going and coming there.

SPRING COMES AGAIN.

Life has its lights and shadows;—its days of sunshine and its days storms and clouds. The usual limit of three score years and ten, is made up of seasons of gladness and sorrow, sickness and health. life and death, and happiness and misery. Life would not be so sweet if we knew naught but joys. It is only by contrasting the extremes that we are enabled to enjoy a more exceeding weight of pleasure.

The stern realities of life bring us into touch with the brighest and happiest ideas of human existence. By learning to brave the storms, and becoming familiar with thunder-peals and lightning flashes, an individual is fitted stand the heat and sunshine when the storms are past. By mingling with sorrow, we learn to sympathize with those who mourn.

Just so it is with the seasons of the year, and our enjoyment of them. To have all spring, or all summer, would not be so pleasant, though many wish that they might know nothing but summer through the entire year. It does not require a prophetic vision to establish the fact, that, too much of a good thing gets to be monotonous. When biting frosts of winter change the rich scenes of summer to pictures of desolation, and an icy breath fans many fair cheeks to a crimson glow, the monotony of fans and parasols is broken, and a new season is born which is not altogether devoid of profitable pleasure.

Man in his gayest hours, is prone to grave reflection. He is ever keenly alert to the changes taking place about him, loses no chance to profit by the conduct of others in matters pertaining to material things.

In no direction has greater advancement been made than in the modern systems of architecture. The rude wigwam of an American savage, in early times, constitutes a fitting contrast to the palatial dwelling house of to-day. The genius of the nineteenth century has been active in the production of artistis designs, which are more than copies from Raphael, or Michael Angelo.

The long nights and short days in the winter season, serve to impress one with the profound necessities of real life. Blinding snows and howling winds have a tendency to bring on the keenest moods of reflection, and develope a sincere desire for sufficient protection against inclemencies of weather, and the cutting blasts.

During the relaxation from labor in winter, mechanics and builders are afforded the most desirable opportunities for studying out the best plans and developing the latest ideas in the erection of modern dwellings and buildings, generally, so that when the proper season comes for that kind of work they are amply equipped with designs and estimates for the most modern structures. The two years 1892 and 1893 were exceptionally good in the way of fancy buildings. Enormous shipments of lumber, lath, shingles, lime, nails, stone, iron, etc., were consumed in the erection of the world's fair buildings, besides what people used in general improvements all over the United States. This year the rate of consumption may be less, but prices will remain within the reach of all who want to build.

Spring will soon be here and those who contemplate building houses, barns, etc., will need to be hustling around for material. It should be carefully borne in mind that A. Lewis & Co. are still located in Auburn. Mr. Lewis has already stocked up his lumber yard with all the latest and best grades of lumber on the market. Parties who have bought lumber in the past realize that the value of a dollar is always given for a dollar at A. Lewis & Co's. lumber yard. If in need of anything in the building material line, do not fail to consult them and learn their prices.

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A Train Robber Loses His Nerve and Gives Away the Gang—Striking Weavers Cause a Riot—The Surrender of Admiral DeGama Confirmed—Head End Collision.

Train Robber Weakened.

Little Rock special: Passengers arriving on the "Cannon Ball" from Texarkana, said: The plan to rob the International and Great Northern north-bound express at McNeill switch near Round Rock, Texas, was frustrated by one of the gang losing his nerve. The railroad officials were given the tip, and the train was heavily guarded. At Austin, one of the gang boarded the train, intending to ask the conductor to stop at McNeill. As the train approached McNeill the conductor signalled to slacken speed, expecting to be flagged, but the robber aboard discovered the officers and failed to give the signal to attack the train. He confessed the plot and has agreed to help trap the gang.

Riotous Strikers.

Another riotous scene was witnessed on Temple Street hill, Patterson, N. J. Over 5,000 persons surrounded the Bamford Bros'. Silk Mill to intimidate the weavers and warpers who refused to join the strikers. Chief of Police Grant and Captain Bimson, with a squad of forty-two men, charged the crowd and dispersed them. Afterward a crowd of silk workers marched up Cliff street singing the Marseillaise, but were soon routed by another detachment of the police, and many of them were knocked down by the officers. Nearly all of the operatives were escorted to their homes by policemen, and Mayor Braun has issued a proclamation calling upon the strikers to preserve order.

Rebellions and Insurrections.

A special from Comitan, Chiapa, says: The greatest excitement prevails across the border in Guatamilia. Arms for the revolutionists have been received there from San Francisco. A gentleman just returning from an extended trip through Central America reports dissatisfaction in all its countries and revolution brewing everywhere.

The police claim to have discovered indications of a grave conspiracy to overthrow Barrios, having its headquarters in the northern part of the country with branches in all parts. The President is conferring frequently with his military chiefs. He has postponed his trip to Quezaltenango.

Assaulted and Robbed.

Christian Magerle, a wealthy farmer, who resides alone near the village of Carson, ten miles north of Bremen, Ind., was found in his house by neighbors lying in a pool of blood and in an unconscious condition. A ghastly wound was found in his head which had been made by some heavy instrument. An investigation brought to light that Magerle had been robbed of several hundred dollars in money and several hundred dollars worth of notes. It seems that he was sitting in his room reading when attacked. Magerle is a widower and resided alone. There is but little hope of his recovery. No clew has yet been had of the thieves.

The War Is Over.

Lisbon special: Official dispatches from Rio De Janeiro confirm the reports that the Insurgent Admiral, De Gama, has left his flag ship and taken refuge on the Portuguese Minde. The commander of the Portuguese war ship has cabled to Senor De Brissas De Neves Ferricira, Minister of Marine and Colonies, asking for instructions in regard to restoring the vessels comprising the Insurgent squadron, under command of Admiral De Gama, to the Brazilian Government, to whom they presumably belong.

Head End Collision.

The Montreal express, north bound, and the Quebec express met in a head-end collision at Capleton, near Sherbrooke, Quebec. The engineer of one of the trains and a train hand, who was in the cab with him, were killed. None of the passengers were seriously injured, and none of the cars left the track. One of the trains was to take a siding at Capleton to allow the other to pass. It was just moving onto the side track when the other crashed into it.

Robbed of $10,000.

A special from Woodward, Oklahoma, says: Station Agent Rusk was taken from his room at the hotel, the other night, by two robbers and made to go to the depot and open the safe and deliver the contents. There was a package of money from Leavenworth for Fort Supply paymasters, about $10,000; one package of money and checks for Wellington, and about $40 railroad money.

Senator Coke Weary of Public Life.

Waco (Texas) special: Walter S. Baker, Chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee, has received a letter from Richard Coke, United States Senator from this State, saying that under no conditions will he again be a candidate for office. His public life, he says, will end with his present term.

Damage by a Cyclone.

A cyclone in the Cherokee strip north of Stillwater, destroyed over a dozen houses and did much other damage. Several people were hurt, but none were killed.

Won't Pay the Nuns.

At a meeting of the Central Board of Education of Pittsburgh, Pa., a resolution was adopted by a vote of 29 to 2, refusing to pay any teacher appearing in a public school in the garb of any religious order.

Death of a Nonagenarian.

John T. Liston, one of the earliest physicians in Northern Indiana, a wealthy and prominent citizen, aged 90, died at Bunker Hill, Miami County.

The Lima Bribery Cases.

In the grand jury bribery affair at Lima, Ohio, the case of B. C. Faurot, ex-President of the Lima National Bank, prosecuting witness against ex-Cashier F. L. Langan, was before Judge Ritchie. The information against Faurot was that knowing W. W. Butler was on the jury list, he invited him into the office and offered him favors and promised him benefits in business if he would vote in favor of the conviction of Langan. Butler took the stand and swore to the same. Witnesses corroborated his evidence. Faurot did not take the stand in defense. Judge Ritchie postponed his finding for a week. H. E. Hall, who was charged with having approached Charley Franks, grand juror, has asked a continuance. Ex-Sheriff Hoagland is still in jail. A confession is looked for.

WAR AT RIO ENDED.

Admiral De Gama Surrenders to Peixoto.

Washington special: The State Department has received two important dispatches from Minister Thompson at Rio. The first one stated that Admiral Saldanha DeGama had offered through the Portuguese naval commander to surrender on condition that he and his followers should be guaranteed safety. This message was brought to President Peixoto by the Portuguese officer in person. Peixoto's reply is not given, but it is inferred from the second dispatch of Minister Thompson, received two hours later than the first, that the terms were favorably received. According to the second dispatch Admiral DaGama had left his ship and gone on board the Portuguese vessel as an asylum. Secretary Gresham understands from the dispatches that the war has virtually ended and is gratified that the result has been reached in time to avoid further bloodshed.

Minister Mendonca says that he has received information fully in accordance with those of the State Department but giving no further particulars.

The Portuguese are said to recognize a principle of international law, now obsolete, by which the right of asylum is granted temporarily by a neutral power to a defeated belligerent. This right has not been recognized of late years by most nations, except in the cases of half-civilized peoples, moreover the Brazilian insurgents have never been recognized by anybody as belligerents. There is therefore some speculation as to the exact meaning of the action of the Portuguese commander.

A DUSKY PLOTTER.

Queen Lil Believed to Be Raising an Army.

Advices from Honolulu to March 3, brought by the Australia, which has arrived at San Francisco, say that every steamer which has arrived at that port during the last three months has brought a number of steerage passengers, who seemed to have no visible means of support and no good reason for coming to the islands. This has occurred so often and Honolulu is becoming so overrun with these strangers that the idea has become prevalent that they have come in the interests of the ex-Queen. It has been reported to the Government, and on seemingly good authority, that agents of Liliuokalani have been recruiting men in both the United States and British Columbia—principally the latter. For some time the government refused to believe such rumors, but of late suspicion has been aroused, and active steps have been taken to nip in the bud any plot the royalists may have of restoring the Queen by force. It is claimed that a number of these men have enlisted in the army, are ready at the first sign of trouble to join the royalists in an attack upon the Government.

A Fiendish Plot.

A special from Wheeling says that the authorities of Portland, Ohio, in Jefferson County, discovered a fiendish but unsuccessful attempt to blow up the City Hall at that place. An infernal machine, composed of two four-pound sticks of dynamite, a nitro-glycerine cartridge, and a fuse, was found in the cellar of the building. The fuse had been ignited, but for some cause refused to burn and the deadly stuff did not explode. The authorities are investigating and think they can unearth a big plot to destroy the building and kill several hundred people. They think the explosives were placed there on Washington's birthday, during a patriotic celebration in the building. The dynamite was placed under the floor on which 500 people stood.

Military Changes.

In anticipation of Major-General O. O. Howard being relieved of the command of the Department of the East, and being granted a leave of absence until his retirement November 8, Major-General Nelson A. Miles has made formal application to be transferred from the Department of Missouri to the Department of the East. Gen. Miles will be next in rank to Gen. Schofield, when Gen. Howard retires, hence it is believed that his application will be granted in June. This done there will be a general distribution of commands, with the probability, it is believed by officers, that the requests of the southern representatives for the establishment of the Department of the South will be favorably acted upon.

Double Tragedy.

A double tragedy was revealed at Logansport, Ind., recently. The body of Philip Petrie was found on the Wabash Railroad near the city with the head missing. Petrie had committed suicide. The Coroner went to the Petrie home to summon Mrs. Petrie to testify at the inquest. The house seemed to be deserted and an entrance was forced as soon as the indications would justify. The dead body of Mrs. Petrie was found on the bed in a decomposed state. She had evidently been dead several days. On the bed was a note in which Petrie said his wife had been unfaithful and he had determined to put an end to their misery. After killing his wife Petrie went to the railroad and committed suicide.

Hole in Broadway.

New York special: The bottom fell out of Broadway, at the northeast corner of Tenth street, leaving a big hole fifteen by twenty feet, and about fifteen feet deep. The hole is cross-sectioned by a network of gas and water pipes, and extends far out under Broadway. The cave-in was caused by a defective sewer.

The gradual sucking away of the sand has been going on for some time, and it is a little short of a miracle that the thin shell of cement and granite blocks should have held the heavy trucks that daily pass over that spot.

It is a mystery where the sand has gone to. It is believed that it will block other sewers in the vicinity, and cause serious disturbance.

Fighting for Time.

Lansing, (Mich.,) special: The March term of the circuit court has begun. The attorney for Marcus Paterson, accused of conspiracy in connection with the State salary amendment frauds, announced that he would move a continuance. The attorney for Attorney General Ellis and Frank A. Potter announced that he would apply for a mandamus to compel the prosecuting attorney to furnish a copy of the testimony taken before the grand jury, and intimated that the disposition of this motion will be followed by another for a continuance. Similar intentions were announced by the attorneys for the members of the State Board of Canvassers.

COUGHLIN IS FREE.

DECLARED NOT GUILTY OF CRONIN'S MURDER.

Wild Scenes in Judge Tuthill's Court When the Announcement Is Made—The Prisoner Is Dazed by His Good Fortune—Jury Out but Six Hours.

Ends a Famous Case.

The second trial of Daniel Coughlin on the charge of complicity in the murder of Dr. Cronin came to a close Thursday in Chicago, by the unexpected return of a verdict of acquittal. Dan Coughlin, after nearly five years of imprisonment, was declared a free man. By a verdict of his peers he was declared innocent of conspiring to cause or participating in the murder of Dr. Cronin. Few expected that the verdict would be what it was, and no one anticipated that an agreement would be reached in so short a time. It was eight minutes to 11 o'clock in the forenoon when Judge Tuthill had concluded his charge, and at twenty-five minutes to 5 o'clock in the afternoon the jury filed into court and through Foreman Holsman handed its brief verdict to the Judge.

Thus it took them less than five hours to deside one of the most noted criminal cases in the history of the country—a case which took over four months for the recounting of its incidents and bloody details, and which took able and brilliant counsel seventeen days to analyze and explain the testimony. It was no wonder that those who listened were astonished.

JOHN F. KUNZE. MARTIN BOURK.

The cheers came naturally from the throats of friends of the accused.

When the verdict had been read, says a Chicago dispatch, there was a full minute of silence. Then a man, who stood near John Kunze near the west wall, shouted, "Three cheers for Daniel Coughlin." The yell which went up so excited Judge Tuthill that he leaped to his feet and commanded the bailiffs to lock the doors. But some one was too quick for the court. The words had hardly fallen from his honor's lips when a cheer rang through the building from the crowd in the corridor. Again and again did the walls echo the yells of the men both inside and outside the court-room. Coughlin seemed dazed until a well-known member of the society to which the prisoner used to belong grabbed his hand and muttered his congratulations. All this time "Big Dan" seemed to be in a trance. Suddenly he pulled himself together and turning to the jury which stood smiling upon him reached out his hand and with deep emotion expressed his thanks to the jurors.

The man who had just been given his life release had started with Officer Carolan for the jail to go through the formality of a legal release when some one shouted, "Dan, here is your wife." The big ex-detective turned hastily and saw coming through the crowd the pretty little woman who had stood by him as few women have stood by men. For the first time since the trial began he exhibited feeling. The tears came into his eyes and one of the most affecting scenes ever witnessed in a courtroom was then and there enacted. He took the weeping and half-fainting woman in his arms and embraced her with a show of affection which was pitiful to see. Then he rushed away crying, "I will be with my Maggie in an hour's time." Mrs. Coughlin could only say: "Oh, my husband; oh, my husband."

Up to this time none of the attorneys in the case had been seen. Mr. Donahue came in just as his client was leaving the room, and a shout went up for him. Mr. Donahoe almost shook Dan Coughlin's hand off as he congratulated him. He was more excited, evidently, than the man who had just been acquitted. Coughlin was then taken to jail, where he was formerly released, and one of the most sensational criminal trials in the annals of the country was at an end.

Trial Which Is Now Ended.

The conspiracy which culminated in the murder of Patrick Henry Cronin on the night of May 4, 1889, in Lake View was consummated at a time when De Caron was testifying in a British court, betraying the Irish cause. This fact added interest in the crime in England, and the London dailies devoted columns to the murder.

Dr. Cronin was a prominent physician of Chicago. For years he had practiced in the city. He was one of the leaders in Irish social circles, the aggressive head of a faction of the Clan-na-Gael bitterly opposed to the "triangle" in power. On the night of May 4, 1889, he was lured from his home in the Windsor Theater Block. May 22 his mutilated body was found in a catch-basin at the corner of North 59th street and Evanston avenue. Foul play was feared. T. T. Conklin, with whom the Doctor lived, was convinced that his friend had been murdered. Dr. Cronin's friends in the Clan-na-Gael were loud in declaring that he had been decoyed from his home and foully dealt with. The oath administered to the members of the society was such that they did not at first dare to venture explanations. Being pressed, they told the story of the conflicting factions of the Clan-na-Gael and the enmity to Dr. Cronin.

The only clew which the police had to start with in unraveling the mystery surrounding the disappearance of Dr. Cronin was a card left in his office by the man who enticed him to his death. This card bore the name and address of Patrick O'Sullivan, iceman in Lake View, also a member of Camp 20 of the Clan-na-Gael. The man who took the Doctor away on May 4 said that one of the employes of the iceman had been injured, and as O'Sullivan had made a contract with Dr. Cronin to attend any of his men who were ill or should meet with accident the Doctor readily assented to go to Lake View. O'Sullivan, the man said, was out of town. The Doctor got into a buggy drawn by a white horse which the man had in waiting, and the last man who saw the Doctor alive was Frank Scanlan, who talked with him while he was sitting in the buggy in front of his home at 468 North Clark street.

Sunday morning, May 5, three men on a hunting expedition found a trunk half filled with cotton saturated with fresh blood in a clump of bushes by the roadside in Evanston avenue, near Sulzer street. Frank Woodruff was arrested for horse-stealing on May 9. He told a story of having driven a wagon that hauled the trunk containing the body of Dr. Cronin.

A general order was issued from the police department to look for a white horse that was out on the night of May 4. It was discovered that Patrick Dinan, a livery-stable keeper in North Clark street, near the East Chicago avenue station, had sent such a horse out. The description of the man who called for the horse on the night in question was found to correspond with that given by Frank Scanlan and Mrs. Conklin of the man who took Dr. Cronin from his office. Further developments brought out the fact that Daniel Coughlin, a detective of the East Chicago avenue station, had hired the horse for the man.

The same day that Dr. Cronin's badly decomposed body was found in the catch basin, Capt. Schuettler heard of the Carlson cottage. By his command Detectives Hyatt and Lorch were put in charge of the place and presently there were reports that "Big Dan" had been seen there a short time before the murder in company with John P. Kunze, Patrick Cooney, alias "Cooney the Fox," and Iceman O'Sullivan. The following day, May 24, 1889, Coughlin was arrested. May 29 Patrick O'Sullivan was taken into custody and June 15 Martin Bourk was behind the bars. A mass of evidence was collected. The amount of testimony to be heard was so great that the coroner's inquest, which commenced June 4, did not finish its labors till June 11.

From their known associations with Coughlin, Beggs and Kunze were held for trial. Beggs was Senior Guardian of Camp 20 of the Clan-na-Gael, and presided when the vote was taken to expel Dr. Cronin from the order on the ground that he was a British spy. Little Kunze was held on the testimony of Saloon-keeper Nieman, who identified him as having been with Daniel Coughlin in his place at 11 o'clock the night of the murder. The State was inclined to believe that Nieman was mistaken. His description of the man answers in every detail to Andrew Foy, but at the time Kunze was arrested and out on trial Foy's connection with the case, as sworn to by his wife, was not known to the police.

The trial of Coughlin, Bourk, O'Sullivan, Beggs and Kunze was begun Aug. 30, 1889. It was finished Dec. 16 and the verdict sent Coughlin, Bourk and O'Sullivan to the penitentiary for life, put Kunze there for three years and turned Beggs free.

The finding against Kunze was never enforced, because Judge McConnell, who presided at the trial, entertained doubts that the man was guilty as charged. And it was with the greatest disapproval that the punishment of the convicted ones was received. Everywhere it was felt that the authors of such a dastardly crime should receive the full penalty of the law, and they doubtless would had it not been for Juror John Culver. He it was who day after day for almost a week, while the jury was deliberating, voted to save Coughlin and the other two, and he it was who finally did save them. In January, 1890, the convicted men were sentenced.

Attorney Daniel Donahoe on behalf of O'Sullivan made the first request for a new trial, but while the matter was pending O'Sullivan died. Then Coughlin's application was made, and before it was disposed of both Beggs and Bourk died. The new trial was granted "Big Dan" Jan. 20, 1893, and he was put on trial the second time Nov. 4 last.

SEVERAL weeks ago Charles Haselman of Tippecanoe County, was locked up for attempting to harm his parents, he being subject to spells of insanity. He was placed at the County Poor Farm, admittance to the State Asylum being refused. He died the other morning in horrible agony, having thrust an iron spoon down his throat in an effort to take his own life. All efforts to dislodge the spoon were unsuccessful. Hazelman was an only son, about twenty-two.

SAM ROACH, assistant engineer of the Anderson Paper Company, crawled into one of the big boilers to do some repairing and the steam was accidentally turned on him. The imprisoned man was powerless to shut it off and had to back out while the scalding steam enveloped him. His back, shoulders, arms, and legs were fearfully scalded before the mill men rescued him from the manhole. The steam was inhaled and rendered the man almost insensible. Dr. J. B. Fattig regards his case as practically hopeless.

THE second annual reunion of the One-hundred and-fifty-second Volunteer Infantry, held at Fort Wayne was one of the largest gatherings of the kind in that city. The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Marshall Makemson of Warsaw; Vice President, Lieut. Austin Funk of Warsaw; Treasurer, J. W. Brouse of Kendallville; Secretary, Alvin Robinson of Warsaw. The next meeting will be at Warsaw next March. After the election Maj. R. T. In the evening a campfire was held, at which Harry C. Hanna presided.

A FEW days ago a mound was discovered on the Kentucky River below Carrollton. A party of men excavated it, and on digging down for ten feet were surprised to find three human skeletons of gigantic size. They were between two layers of ashes, with their heads extended toward the setting sun. The bones were of monstrous size, and from the manner of burial they were beyond doubt a relic of the mound builders, that ancient race who occupied this continent thousands of years ago. The arms and legs were literally covered with curious shaped beads, several of which were exhibited by one of the party who discovered the cave. The beads seem to be constructed from the teeth of some animal, and are in perfect condition.

A VERY singular discovery was made in Dubois County, south of Washington, one day last week, and it is believed by the older citizens to clear up a very mysterious disappearance of nearly fifty years ago. An old farmer named Stockslager was cleaning a piece of land along the Patoka River and among the trees felled was a gigantic sycamore, in which was a hollow that reached from the ground upward about fifty feet. When the tree fell it split open and half way broke in two at the top of the hollow, and a number of bones of a human being were presented to view. The discovery astonished the men who were working in the timber, and when made known caused much discussion as to how they came there. It is believed by some that the bones are those of a man named Christy, who was wanted for murder over thirty years ago.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed, and Acted Upon.

Doings of Congress.

The pension appropriation bill, carrying $156,000,000, was passed Wednesday afternoon without division. Throughout the debate there had been no criticism of the amount carried by the bill. All the amendments to the bill save one, that of Mr. Pickler to make the reports of the examining surgeons open to the inspection of the applicant or his attorneys, were defeated. They all fell under points of order that they were not germane. The one which attracted most attention was that of Mr. Enloe, to repeal a portion of the provision included in the act of last December to prevent the suspension of any pension except on thirty days notice; also to permit the suspension in case of plain prima facie evidence that the pensioner had procured his pension by forgery, perjury or other palpable fraud. This amendment was offered at the suggestion of Commissioner Lochren himself, who under the opinion of the Attorney General declared that if the act of last December stood over $300,000 would have to be paid out to suspended pensioners who were proved beyond all question not to be longer entitled to the pensions they had been drawing. Mr. Outhwaite, the Chairman, of the committee of the whole, however, ruled the amendment out on Mr. Martin's point of order that it was not germane. The Senate struggled all day with the seigniorage coinage bill, and considerable progress was made. It will soon be out of the way. On motion of Mr. Gibson the Senate passed the House bill appropriating $45,000 for the rescue of the armament and wreck of the United States steamer Kearsarge.

The President transmitted some additional Hawaiian correspondence to the House Thursday morning. The Senate bill to amend the act to establish the Smithsonian Institution was passed. The conference report on the urgency deficiency bill was presented by Mr. Ayres and agreed to. Mr. Richardson, of Tennessee, from the joint commission on expenditures in the executive departments, called up the bill to reform the method of accounting and auditing in the customs department of the treasury. The bill abolishes the office of Commissioner and Assistant Commissioner of Customs. The discussion over the bill took a wide range and was participated in by Messrs. Baker, Henderson, Bepburn, Cannon and Dockery. The bill was passed. The House then went into committee of the whole for the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill and, after debate, adjourned. The Senate in executive session confirmed a lot of postmasters in Kansas, Illinois, Michigan and Iowa.

In the House Friday, after transacting some business of minor importance, the House went into Committee of the Whole for further consideration of the District of Columbia bill. In the course of debate Mr. Kilgore denounced the District press as subservient to all jobs in the District to plunder the Treasury. At 3 o'clock the debate closed and voting took place on various amendments. Without completing the consideration of the bill the House took a recess until 8 o'clock, the evening session to be devoted to private pension bills. The night session was devoted to the passage of individual pensions, and at 10:25 the House adjourned. In the Senate Mr. Peffer introduced a resolution for an investigation into the Senatorial sugar speculation. The House bill authorizing a bridge over the East River between New York and Long Island passed without objection. A bill was passed appropriating $200,000 to pay the damages resulting to persons who went upon the Crow Creek and Winnebago Indian Reservation in South Dakota between Feb. 17 and 27, 1885. Then came up the Bland seigniorage bill as unfinished business, which occupied the rest of the day.

The House completed the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill Saturday, and passed it after defeating the final effort of Mr. de Armond to reduce the share of expenses of the District to be borne by the general government. The debate was devoid of all general interest. After an unsuccessful effort on the part of Mr. Sayers, chairman of the appropriation committee, to reach an agreement as to the limit of the general debate on the sundry civil appropriation bill, the House adjourned.

Tuesday in the House was devoted entirely to the consideration of a bill relating to the extension of the time for allowing a street railroad company in Washington to change its system of motive power. The debate rapidly drifted into a discussion of the merits of the cable and the underground electric system, and it was boldly charged that the General Electric and Westinghouse Companies, which held stock in almost all the overhead trolley lines, had retained all the prominent electric engineers in the country and would not spare money to prevent a practical demonstration of the feasibility of the underground electric road now in operation at Buda Pesth and for a short distance on the outskirts of Washington. To prevent this Mr. Wall proposed to restrict the motive system to be used by the Metropolitan Road to underground electric. No conclusion was reached. In the Senate Senator Gallinger presented an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the tariff bill providing that the act shall become operative, so far as importations from Canada are concerned, only by proclamation of the President. The proclamation is to be issued upon conditions specified. Senator Peffer introduced an independent tariff bill in the Senate amending the McKinley law in various particulars. His resolution for an investigation as to whether Senators had been speculating in Wall street was defeated in the Senate.

Leprosy in the West Indies.

Lepers are very plentiful in Jamaica, and they mix with the people without let or hindrance, plying all manner of trades and vocations, even to selling fruit and cakes on the public street, and keeping butcher shops and bakeries. The Government has provided a leper hospital at Spanish Town, which ordinarily shelters a hundred or more lepers. But there is no restriction on their coming and going as they please. Leprosy is fearfully rife throughout the West Indies and in many parts of Central and South America, and the authorities in almost all the various countries are lax in the exercise of control over the sufferers from the disease, and it is allowed to be spread unhindered.

AT WAR WITH HERSELF.

The Story of a Woman's Atonement, by Charlotte M. Braeme.

She had not lain long before she heard the sound of footsteps; then the door of her room opened, and Ethel Dacre entered—Ethel, with a light on her noble face—the light of fixed, determined resolve. She set the lamp that she carried in her hand down on the table, and went up to Leonie. She knelt down by the bedside, and placed her hand on the hot brow.

"Leonie," she whispered, "Leonie, my darling, I could not help coming to you—I could not part from you in anger, as we parted to-night. We are, both of us, motherless—we have neither of us a sister—and we have been a great deal to each other. I could not retire in anger, Leonie, because I love you so dearly."

The noble face softened into unutterable tenderness as she bent over the angry girl.

"I know you are not pleased with me," she continued, in the same low voice. "If you were but an indifferent acquaintance, your right or wrong doing would not seem important to me; but you are my dearest friend, Leonie, and I cannot see you acting dishonorably without coming to plead with you."

"I hope you will spare me all preaching, Ethel. I had quite enough of that this morning."

"I want to plead with you, not to preach to you," said Ethel. "You shall not harden your heart against me, Leonie; you shall not turn coldly from me. I love you, and by right of my love you must hear me."

"I cannot really see what it matters to you," said Leonie. "How does it concern you? You can have no interest in the inheritance."

"Do not speak to me so, Leonie; my interest is in you, and in your soul; it is for your soul's sake that I come to plead with you now."

"I can take care of my soul myself," said Leonie, abruptly.

"You can; but will you do so? Let me speak to you as your own sister might speak; try to think that I am your sister, Leonie, and then you will have more patience with me. My darling, right and wrong are so clearly marked out for you—do not mistake them. Believe me, unless you give up this inheritance, which never was yours, you will be unhappy all your life; you will never know peace or rest again; you will even despise yourself. Honor and honesty both call upon you to give it up."

"Then they call in vain, Ethel, for I shall never do so."

"You will. I have more faith in you than you have in yourself; you will do right in the end. It is a terrible temptation—I admit that. Because you love luxury and magnificence so dearly—because you love all that wealth brings—it is a great temptation; but, Leonie, there is something far above all this."

"That is preaching, Ethel."

Miss Dacre bent over the fair face; she looked tenderly at the rare perfection of its loveliness.

"You are so beautiful, Leonie," she murmured; "your soul should match your face. See, my darling, there are two paths before you; have patience with me while I sketch them."

"I must listen, I suppose," said Leonie, resignedly.

"Yes, you must listen, Leonie. Suppose you do what is right—you give up to Paul Flemyng, before your marriage, what is justly his—the money, estates, land, and title the late Earl meant to leave him. Before God and man you will then have done a just and honorable deed; and what will you be the worse for it? Your husband—who will never know of this argument—will admire you as the most loyal of women, and people will have faith in you because you have proved yourself capable of being honest at any cost to yourself. I can see naught in which you can suffer, but in every respect you will gain. You will have a fair name before men, and a clear, bright, brave soul before heaven. Oh, Leonie, think what that means; think what it is to have the clear light of heaven on you—to live so that you may find a home in that better land. There is the other path. You may, with perhaps some show of legality on your side, keep this inheritance; you may humiliate the man you are going to marry by giving him everything, which in reality he ought to give to you; but I say to you that in doing so you imperil your own soul. Leonie, those are not light words. Suppose that half of England were yours, and that a wonderful extension of life were given to you—that you were allowed to live over a hundred years—you must die at last, what, then, would it matter to you whether you had been rich or poor? The great concern would be to have saved your soul. Leonie, can you say honestly that you are even trying to save your soul when it is weighed down by such a sin as this? Can you fancy what the hour of death must be for one who has lived a life of fraud? You know that, if you keep this which is not your own, you can never honestly raise your head among your fellow-creatures; you will be burdened with a sin of wrong-doing and misery that can never leave you."

"Ethel, you are wasting your time," said Leonie.

"No, I do not think so. You turn from me proudly now; you refuse to listen to me; you despise all that I am saying—but you will remember my words, for all that, Leonie. You will remember that I, who love you with a deep, true, disinterested love, have knelt here to pray you for your soul's sake to act rightly and honorably. Leonie, I have another idea about you; if I am wrong forgive me. I have fancied from your manner, from your feverish restlessness, from your craving for excitement—I have fancied, Leonie, that all this is not strange to you; that you had perhaps found the will, and had hidden it."

A low moan answered her. When she looked at the white face, she saw that Leonie lay in a dead swoon.

"Was I too hard upon her?" murmured Ethel. "Oh, no! Heaven knows that I have only told her the truth."

CHAPTER XLIII.

"You are not angry with me, Leonie?" said Ethel Dacre, when the violet eyes unclosed at last, and Leonie looked round with a half-bewildered air.

"No, I am not angry—leave me, Ethel. I cannot hear any more; you try me beyond my strength."

Nor would she listen to another word. In sheer despair Miss Dacre went away at last; there was nothing now to trust to save time and prayer. If prayer would save the unhappy girl, then Ethel Dacre would pray earnestly. Meanwhile Leonie—sick, shuddering, her heart full of dread and fear—lay watching for the dawn.

"She will betray me—she will tell every one what she suspects. Is it possible that I shall ever be found out?" The very thought made her whole soul grow sick with fear. "Found out"—she whispered the words to herself—"found out to be a thief?"

She would fain have annihilated time and space, so eager was her desire to take hold of the will and destroy it. Nothing could affect her if that were once destroyed; no human being could give evidence against her, and she should live and die Countess of Charnleigh. Ethel Dacre might betray her—she might tell the story of the letter—she might even whisper her suspicions about the will; what mattered it all when nothing—absolutely nothing—could be proved against her?

She laughed aloud—a harsh, discordant laugh—terrible to hear from the lips of one so young and fair.

"I have imperiled my soul," she said. "I have sacrificed my love, and have sent the man I love to exile and death; surely the small matter of losing the esteem of my fellow-creatures cannot hurt me after all that. It is the last sacrifice I have to make. Goodness, love, honor, honesty—all are gone; self-respect may follow them, the esteem and good opinion of my kind go with it, but I shall live and die Countess of Charnleigh."

Suddenly across the dull gray of the morning sky she saw a gleam of gold, and then she sprang up, knowing that the morning had dawned. She changed the white muslin wrapper that she still wore for a dark traveling dress, and as she did so Florette gently opened the door. She brought a cup of tea and a fresh roll to her lady. Leonie eagerly drank the tea, but did not touch the roll.

"Try to eat something, my lady," said the girl, "you will faint."

Then came to Leonie a dull wonder as to whether she should ever eat again; her heart was like lead within her, her face pale, her hands trembled so that she could not fasten her cloak.

"We will walk to the nearest cabstand," she said. "Open the door quietly, Florette; I do not want to disturb anyone."

So, in the early dawn of the summer morning, Leonie left a magnificent home, where she had lived so brilliantly, to commit one of the most treacherous of crimes.

Florette asked no question; yet she wondered what this sudden journey meant—she wondered why her lady's face was so sternly set and white—why the pale lips were so rigid and compressed.

Crown Leighton was reached at last. Great were the surprise and bewilderment of the whole household at seeing their lady. No one could understand it. Leonie asked at once for Mrs Fearon, and, more than half bewildered, the housekeeper entered her presence.

"You are surprised to see me here so early," she said. "We cannot spare many hours from London now, so I came by first train, and shall return perhaps this evening."

"I will do my best to carry out your wishes, my lady," said the woman; "and you will not find the house in bad order. Shall I prepare some breakfast for you?"

"No." Leonie could neither eat or drink again until that will was destroyed.

She went to the room, almost dreading to look in the hiding-place lest the will should be gone. She locked the door, and then went with trembling, faltering steps to the place where she had hidden the document.

It was safe; a little cry escaped her when she saw it again. She took the cause of all her misery in her hands.

"You have cost me my love, and you may cost me heaven," she said; "now I will destroy you. You shall cost me no more."

But how was she to destroy it? There was but one method, and that was to burn it.

"If I were to tie it up with a stone, and throw it into the sea," she said to herself, "it might rise again. I will burn it—I will watch the smoke from its ashes curl in the air—I will watch the ashes disperse in the wind; then, in my own right, I shall know that I am Countess Charnleigh of Crown Leighton.

How was she to burn it? If she carried it down into the servants' quarters, and was seen to put it into the fire, rumor might rise and tell against her. She must destroy it here in her own room, unseen, unknown by all.

"One more falsehood and I shall be free," she said to herself, as she rang the bell.

Mrs. Fearon answered it—the maid was resting after her journey—and looked somewhat aghast when her lady asked for a fire.

"A fire?" repeated the housekeeper, as she looked from the beautiful, restless, feverish face to the glowing sun outside. "If you do not think it too warm——"

"I have taken cold—I am cold," said Leonie; and the shudder with which she uttered these words gave them the semblance of truth.

"Early rising is not good for you, my lady," decided the woman; "I will light the fire for you myself."

A few more minutes and a bright fire was blazing in the grate, contrasting oddly with the glowing sun and sultry warmth of the June day.

"I will ring if I want you," said Leonie to the housekeeper, and then she locked the door and went to the hiding-place where lay the will. As she passed the great mirror she started back in sore affright. Surely that ghastly pallid face was not hers; those wild burning eyes so full of fear, those pale trembling lips—surely they did not belong to the beautiful, radiant girl whom people called Countess of Charnleigh.

"Wicked deeds do not suit me," she said to herself, with a laugh that sounded like the cry of a lost soul.

Then she stood before the fire with the will in her hands. "I am going to commit a crime," she reflected—"a crime for which in olden days men were hung."

Why did she pause? The red flame blazed merrily; the door was closed; no human eyes could see her. Why did she hesitate?

Good and bad angels had fought for her; good and evil spirits had waged fierce battle for her. Her own self had been at war with her own self. She had sent into sorrow and exile the man she loved; she had listened while honored lips told her she was imperiling her soul; she had given up her hope of heaven. Why did she pause over this crowning act of her sin.

She had said to herself that she would keep what she had at all risks. She knew that she would lose her fair name before men—that she would be forever estranged from those she loved best; yet she had weighed all that in her mind, and it seemed to her as nothing in comparison with what she gained by her sin. Why did she hesitate? The red blaze seemed to laugh as it roared away. She raised her hand to thrust the will far into the soft glow and then paused.

She could not do it—she had tried, and failed; she could not, she dared not do it. Perhaps the good angels had won the battle—perhaps the evil spirits had fled. She could not do it—that crowning act of her sin was beyond her. Slowly the arm that held the will dropped; and presently the roll fell from the nerveless hand to the floor and the girl dropped on her knees with a passionate cry and passionate tears.

"Merciful heaven," she called, "help me to do right!"

The trial and struggle were over—she was no longer at war with herself; the better nature conquered the lower one, loyalty had beaten down falsehood, honor had shamed dishonor. She who had boasted so proudly that she would risk all for Crown Leighton lay weeping a helpless, humble child.

The temptation had been a terrible one—it was trampled under foot now. Looking back, Leonie thought she must have gone mad. She had tried to be brave and hardy in her wrong-doing; but she had a nobler nature than she herself knew of. When it came to the last act in the drama, her noble heart, her natural goodness, and her early sense of right, were all stronger than temptation, and they beat it down.

The relief was as cooling dew-drops to thirsty flowers; what soft, sweet showers are to parched trees and arid grass, such to her soul were the tears that she shed—they seemed to bring grace and healing with them.

"How could I dream of this wicked deed?" she sobbed aloud. "Never again shall such an evil spirit hold me in chains. I will live and die loyal and true, even though I may not be Countess of Charnleigh."

She remembered the old saying, "The woman who hesitates is lost." "I will deliberate no longer," she said; "I will place myself beyond temptation; I will place this in Paul Flemyng's hand, and then I cannot go back. Left to myself, I might fall again; if I do there can be no retraction."

When the passion of her tears had been exhausted, she rose from the floor; then she stooped and carefully picked up the will.

"I will not stop to look around me," she thought; "I will not linger over the magnificence of Crown Leighten; I will go at once, before the temptation returns even stronger than before." And without one glance at the sumptuous chamber, without one look at the splendor she had loved so well, she put on her traveling cloak and went down stairs.

"Mrs. Fearon," she said, "will you order the carriage? I want to go at once to Weildon. I have not a moment to spare."

Wondering a little at what she thought her lady's caprices, the housekeeper hastened to comply with her request.

SCRUB LANDS OF AUSTRALIA.

Chinese as Self-Acting Machines for Opening the Country.

The "lawyer vine" is the worst obstacle to the clearing of lands in Australia. It is a kind of palm that grows in feathery tufts along a pliant stalk and festoons itself as a creeper upon trees. From beneath the tufts of leaves the vine throws down trailing suckers as thick as stout cords, armed with sets of sharp red barbs. These suckers sometimes throw themselves from tree to tree across a road that has not been lately used, and make it as impassable to horses as so many strands of barbed wire. When the vines escape from the undergrowth of wild ginger and tree-fern and stinging bush that fringes the scrub, and coil themselves in loose loops upon the ground, they become dangerous traps for man and horse. In the jungle, where they weave themselves in and out of the upright growths, they form a net that at times defies every means of destruction but fire. The work of clearing ground incumbered is not light. In some districts it is done by Chinamen. They are not allowed to own freehold land in the colony, but scrub land is often leased to them to clear and use for a certain number of years. The ground, when it is cleared, is extraordinarily rich, and they appear to recoup themselves for their labor with the first crops they grow upon their leaseholds. The owner afterward has it in his power to resume his land, and the Chinaman passes on to clear and use the scrub. In this way the Chinese are employed as a sort of self-acting machine for the opening of the country. They devote themselves principally to the cultivation of fruit. A walk around a Chinese garden is an instructive botanical excursion, so many and strange are the edible varieties of fruit to which one is introduced. Spices, too, and flowers flourish under the care of the Chinamen, and the fields of bananas and pineapples dotted with oranges and mango orchards, which stretch for miles beside the sugar plantations, are nearly all Chinese.

Sounding the Deep Sea.

A ship regularly engaged in deep sea sounding usually has the sounding machine mounted at the after end, and when about to sound is brought to a standstill with the stern to the sea. The stray line, with the sounding rod and sinker attached, is over the guide pulley and carefully lowered to the water's edge, the register is set to zero, and the deep sea thermometer is clamped to the sounding line; a seaman is stationed at the friction line which controls the velocity with which the wire is unreeled, another at the brake, and a third on the grating outside to handle the sinker and instruments and to guide the wire as it passes overboard; a machinist is at the hoisting engine, and the recorder takes a position for reading the register. When the sinker is let go, the vessel is maneuvered so as to keep the wire vertical, and the friction line is adjusted so as to allow it to descend from 70 to 100 fathoms per minute. The instant the sinker strikes bottom, which is unmistakably indicated by the sudden release of the wire from strain, the reel is stopped by the friction line and brake; the recorder notes the number of turns of the reel. In an hour this messenger of man's ingenuity makes its excursions through five miles of watery waste to the abyssmal regions of perfect repose.

Slapping the Wrong Man.

A funny incident, accompanied by a witty retort, was enjoyed the other day as the crowd was surging out of one of the theaters. In front of a party of gentlemen was a man with his collar turned up above his ears. "Why, there is B," said one of the party. "He doesn't seem to see us; I guess I'll wake him up." At the same time, and without stopping to think, he stepped forward and hit the bundled-up individual a terrific slap on the back. The man turned around as he received the blow and disclosed to the astonished eyes of the hilarious gentleman the face of a total stranger. He hesitated a moment before the calm and inquiring gaze of the man in front, and then, stepping forward, said: "I beg your pardon, sir; but, to tell the truth, I took you for another man."

"I am," was the quiet reply."—Indianapolis Sentinel.

This Is Practical Christianity.

Trinity Church in Boston has taken a new departure, which will supply a need often felt but rarely mentioned. It has established a "Christian pawnshop" where the rate will not exceed 4 per cent. and where the business will be conducted on humane principles. There are many men and women to whom the loan of a few dollars at a critical time, without usury and without publicity, would mean escape from starvation or worse.

WRINKLES IN WHEELS

MANY NEW NOVELTIES BEING INTRODUCED.

Bicycles Rigged for Sails by Which Great Speed Is Attained—Device of a Frenchman to Bring the Arms Into Play While Riding a Wheel.

For Those Who Ride.

The friends of cycling are legion and their number is augmented every day. As a sport it remains as popular as ever, and during the enforced dullness of the winter months the cyclist dreams but of the prospective enjoyment of another season. Long before the advent of the first robin and the timid crocus, the wheelman has burst in full bloom and can be seen gayly "pumping" through mud and slush having a glorious time in making himself and others believe that gentle spring has come.

It is no longer necessary for the cycle enthusiast to, during the winter months, consign his "trusty steed" to an obscure corner, there to gather but rust and dust. An enterprising genius in Erie, Pa., has come to the rescue and invented an ice and snow bicycle which is to fill the ever-present long-felt want. The inventor claims great things for this machine, and if it can perform half of what is promised, the ice cycle ought certainly to become popular. The new affair is provided with runners and has a skate-like equipment clamped to one of the wheels. The tire of the hind wheel is furnished with sharp prongs by the means of which a good grip is secured on a slippery surface. The speed attained by the ice cycle under favorable circumstances is said to be very great. Nevertheless it is doubtful if in its present development the machine can become popular. It would seem far more practicable to provide some adjustable contrivance by which any bicycle could be fitted out as a skating machine at a moment's notice. For the man who can evolve something of the nature there is fame and fortune in store. Though the ice bicycle has some elements of novelty the idea is not altogether original.

The decided novelty in the bicycle world, and one which will be sure to create a sensation, is a machine invented by M. Valere, a noted French engineer. It is on exhibition in Paris, where it has attracted considerable attention from all wheelmen attending the great bicyle exhibition now being held in that city. The most serious objection to the sport has been that while the legs and their muscles are getting more than enough of exercise, the arm and upper portion of the body receive relatively none, being, as a rule, held in a rigid position. It is with the aim to overcome this grave drawback that Valere has constructed his bicycle, which he has given the name of "running machine," on account of the motions made by the rider. The hand-bars of this machine are entirely dispensed with, and in their stead are two levers, which are worked almost horizontally. When in motion the rider looks like a person running and swinging his arms. That is to say, when the left leg, for instance, is advanced in pressing down the pedal the right arm performs the corresponding movement in putting one of the levers backward. There is a concerted action of both hands and feet, the repulsion of the one and the traction of the other. These two forces are concentrated to give the bicycle the highest momentum of speed. The inventor appeared before the Minister of Liberal Arts and by his many practical tests of the various advantages claimed for his machine was given a document in which M. Valere is declared to have "invented one of the best of bicycles." Great is his invention, indeed, if it can be practically demonstrated that a man in riding this contrivance can use his arms as effectually for a driving power as he can his legs. Aside from this advantage there will be an opportunity for the development of as formidable biceps as there is now of calves.

When it comes to speed this new machine is a marvel: there has been nothing in the way of bi, tri, or any kind of cycles that have approached it for swiftness. It is claimed that with a Valero handled by an experienced rider the average speed will be about thirty-seven miles an hour! If all or even half of the wonderful things promised for this new machine be true, we can look forward to a complete revolution of bicycling.

For a pacemaker the quadruplet seems to win more favor than any other machine of the same nature. It is not a feature that will become popular, and few clubs will indulge in the extravagance of one or more of these swift but cumbersome machines; their place is more among the freaks than among the regular "wheels." In this class may also be mentioned a new "trainer," consisting of a pair of wheels, the axle of which is provided with adjustable handles. You push these wheels before you and run or walk at any pace described. This mode of exercise is said to be extremely beneficial in strengthening the lungs and securing great development of the chest. For people to whom this would seem too violent exercise, the new room cycle offers every advantage. With this in your chamber you can enjoy all the excitement of a "run" or race without any of its attendant drawbacks. A gauge in front indicates at what a terrible rate of speed you are going while you are standing still. For persons of sedentary occupation and those who think their rotundity somewhat too pronounced these room cycles or home trainers offer splendid opportunities for improvement of both health and muscle.

Propelled on Land by Sails.

Sailing on dry land sounds a trifle incongruous, but it will be a popular sport next summer. The only reason that sailing on bicycles does not become a prominent feature is no doubt because it is a comparatively new thing. Some time last summer an enterprising Californian rigged his safety with sails and the experiment was a complete success. Abroad the idea has taken like wildfire, and judging from the reports it must be great fun. Mr. White of San Bernardino, is, perhaps, father of the scheme. He uses a ten-foot mast and an eight-foot boom and fastens the mast in a head block. This block must not be fastened to the handle bars, but must be bolted to the joint below the elbow, as this allows the free use of the handles to direct the wheel's course. The cost of the whole outfit, including a nice sail, ought not to exceed $10. It requires but very little practice to become an expert in handling the sail, and with favorable wind the speed ought to be about thirty miles an hour. As a matter of course, great care must be taken in sailing along the country roads. While scudding under a stiff breeze the rider might suddenly bring up against some startled nag or irate bull, which might have serious results. Many of the later improvements in cycle sailing tackle dispense with the boom entirely, and simply carry a triangular canoe sail of generous proportions rigged on an exceedingly light but tough bamboo frame. To prevent the possibility of a sudden capsize a steel outrigger having a little wheel on the end is always carried. When not in use it can be put up with the sail in a very small package. This little outrigger enables the land sailor to take solid comfort, as it sustains the balance on the lee side, no matter how stiff the breeze may be.

THE ICE BICYCLE.

The comforts of the riders and their protection against the inclemency of the weather have also been looked after more than ever. One manufacturer proposes to provide fans connected with the running gear, which will in no way impede the speed but cool the brow of the rider, wearily pumping away on a dusty road under a scorching sun. The same man has also in contemplation a contrivance somewhat in the shape of a buggy top, which will serve as a protection during thunder or other showers. Both these inventions will, when they materialize, be hailed with delight by all wheelmen, who now are at the mercy of all kinds of rough weather.

Taking everything into consideration the lovers of this delightful sport may look forward to a season which will be pregnant with a number of new-fangled ideas, both in the shape of novel attachments as well as entire machines. The great aim of makers of wheels is to combine comfort and durability in their productions.

At one time there was a rather pronounced prejudice against women using the bicycle, but that has long since given way to a most enthusiastic approval of its use among the fairer sex. Fashion, which decrees most everything in the feminine world, has no doubt had considerable to do with making the wheel popular with women. There is a constantly growing demand for "machines" among ladies and young girls and from men who take to the wheel merely for its healthful exercise.

Tricycles are at a decided disadvantage nowadays and are rated very much passe. Even the little folks look upon these antiquated affairs with contempt, and almost rather go without riding if they cannot have a safety. It is surprising to see the number of tots, particularly little girls, who are expert riders. They seem to be a great deal quicker in learning how to ride than the boys of the same age, and handle their diminutive machines with all the assurance of veterans.

Foretold His Own Death.

James Beckwourth, the famous scout, who became a war chief under the name of Medicine Calf among the Crows, has related to the North American Review, an extraordinary feat of levitation which a great war chief of the Crow Indians performed in his presence on the eve of leading his warriors to battle. The chief was an aged man and professed to have a premonition of death. For many moons he had led the Crows successfully against their hereditary foes, the Blackfeet. It was not his heart that failed him now, but his medicine had lost its protency.

In the dusk of the gray morning he led his braves out on an open prairie, and, setting his shield on edge some fifteen or twenty feet in front of him, pointed to it with his lance. As the eyes of the fighting men rested upon the embossed surface of the buckler it appeared to rise slowly from the ground until it reached a height corresponding to the head of the chief; it then, by the same invisible means, passed through the air until it obscured his face and hid it from his warriors.

A thrill of horror pervaded the assemblage, but no word was spoken. It was taken as an emblem of his approaching eclipse, his banishment from this world, his journey to the land of the Great Spirit, to which all Indians, good and bad alike, went with unhesitating faith. The great chief was killed that morning.

Windmill Power.

Inventors are hopefully seeking to compel the wind to perform a more important share of the world's work. To encourage their efforts, the Netherlands Society for the Promotion of Industry offers a gold medal and $150 for the best paper on the use of windmills and electric accumulators for supplying power to factories. Points especially to be considered are the average energy a common windmill can produce in conjunction with storage batteries, the installation most suitable, the cost per horse-power hour, and the economy of the system on a large scale.

NERVOUSNESS.

A Condition That Should Receive Prompt and Intelligent Treatment.

Nervousness is a condition not easy to define; but the common use of the term in every-day speech indicates the commonness of the thing itself. There are few persons, indeed, who have not at some time suffered from irritability of the nerves and its accompanying depression.

It is to be remembered that this state always indicates a falling away from the normal standard of health. It should be taken as a danger signal, a notice from the nerves that something is wrong. The cause of the trouble is sometimes easily found, as, for example, temporary or habitual loss of sleep; or the difficulty may be more deeply seated and more serious. Whatever its cause, nervousness indicates a lack of nervous force, a lowering of vital energy. Somewhere a tap is loose, and waste is proceeding more rapidly than repair. In such a state of things, the performance of every voluntary action and of every unconscious organic function is affected unfavorably.

Women suffer from nervousness more commonly than men. It is a mistake, however, to think that there is any material difference between the nerve structure of the two sexes. Unfavorable surroundings and occupations account for the greater frequency of nervous diseases among women. Farmers are rarely affected with nervousness. Farmers' wives are almost proverbially so affected.

Loss of sleep, indigestion, grief or worry, and many other functional causes may produce nervousness. Doubtless the most frequent cause is lack of sufficient out-of-door air and of moderate exercise.

It is too common for nervous people to think their complaint too trivial for a physician's notice. Strict inquiry as to the manner of life often reveals errors the correction of which relieves the conditions and averts serious disease.

"Overwork does not kill, but overworry does," some one has said, with a measure of exaggeration. Excessive work may no doubt shorten life, but constant worry over every-day cares is sure to do so.

Ceaseless cares exhaust the nervous energy. Change of occupation and of scene allows the nervous forces—the celebral gray matter—to become restocked. Nervous matter is actually consumed in performing the details of every-day existence, just as muscular tissue is expended in exercise.

A spring kept at a constant tension surely loses its elasticity, while one which is frequently unbent does not. The figure is a good one to apply to mental and nervous experience.—Youth's Companion.

Almost Dragged Under.

The author of "Eskimo Life" described a day's hunt, when the men of the village put out to sea, each in his cranky little kaiak, after seals, auks, fish, or whatever other game may present itself. Tobias began by chasing a seal which dived and did not come up again within sight, but the man is one of the best hunters of the village, as the reader may judge by what follows. He had sighted another seal, and was skimming over the sea toward it, when the huge head of a hooded seal popped up right in front of the kaiak, and was harpooned in an instant.

It makes a frightful wallowing and dives, the harpoon line whirls out, but suddenly gets fouled under the throwing-stick of the bird-dart. The bow of the kaiak is drawn under with an irresistible rush, and before Tobias knows where he is, the water is up to his armpits, and nothing can be see of him but his head and shoulders and the stern of the kaiak, which sticks right up into the air.

It looks as if it were all over with him. Those who were nearest paddle with all their might to his assistance, but with scant hope however to save him.

Tobias, however, is a first-rate kaiak man. In spite of his difficult position, he keeps upon even keel while he is dragged through the water by the seal, which does all he can to get him entirely under.

At last it comes up again, and in a moment he has seized his lance, and with deadly aim, had pierced the seal through the head. A feeble movement, and it is dead.

The other men come up in time to find Tobias busy making his booty fast, and to get the piece of blubber to which each is entitled. They cannot restrain their admiration for his coolness and skill, and speak of it long afterward.

Where They Could Not Hit It.

Marshal Blucher, the famous Prussian General, was always foremost in fight. His zeal in attack was such, indeed, that the Russians nicknamed him "Marshal Forwards."

After the battle of Waterloo, Louis XVIII., the King of France, desired to bestow upon him the Order of the Holy Ghost; but the soldier would not accept it. He hadn't forgotten how Napoleon had trodden on his country for years, and he hated France and everything French.

The Duke of Wellington endeavored to persuade him to receive this mark of royal respect.

"If I do," said Blucher, "I will hang the Order on my back."

"Well," replied the Duke, "if you do, you will only show how highly you value it, by hanging it where the enemy will never hit it."

This was a neatly turned compliment.

A General Sympathizer.

Alluding to a common foible of humanity, a clever woman recently said that if worse came to worse, and she had to find some way of earning her living, she believed she would become a "public sympathizer. Any one could send for me," she explained, "and pour out all their worries and troubles while I listened and sympathized for, say, 25 or 50 cents an hour. Everything should be strictly confidential, and I would never allow myself to have a greater worry or a worse pain or a deeper trouble than my client. What do you think of that scheme?"

SOMEONE asked Prince G.: "Which are the greatest powers of Europe?" He answered, straight off the reel: "England, Germany, France, Russia and woman."—Le Conteur de Vaudois.

THE AUBURN COURIER

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....MARCH 15, 1894.

TO THE DEMOCRATS OF DEKALB COUNTY.

Pursuant to the call of the State Central Committee, democrats and all others who wish to co operate with the democratic party, will on at 2 o'clock p. m., meet at the usual places of meeting in their respective precincts: First, for the election of precinct committeemen, who will become members of the county central committee.

The members of the county committee will meet in Auburn, March 24, at 2 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of organization, election of chairman, vice-chairman, secretary and treasurer and executive committee.

I earnestly request a full attendance at each of the above meetings.

BEEKS ERICK, Chairman.

N. J. SHOOK, Secretary.

Smithfield township meets at the Center. Report all to the COURIER.

THE Dispatch says we did not need a new bridge at Waterloo nor the one in Jackson township. We would like to hear from the Press on the subject.

THE HOUSE has passed a bill appropriating 151 millions for pensions. Will republicans who have been saying that democrats were opposed to pensions, please explain this?

DR. J. W. YOUNGE, of Ft. Wayne was assaulted and beaten by E. V. Emerick, an attorney, last Friday evening. All caused by a slanderous paper that the doctor is supposed to be the author of.

ONE MILLION dollars given to the U. B. college at North Manchester, March 2. It will be used to assist poor young men to gain an education, especially young ministers. Prof. C. E. Kriebel of the Butler schools, is to be president.

THE Press says the national revenues will run behind 72 millions this year, and asks "How can this be stopped?" Very easily. Pass a law that will raise more revenue. The McKinley bill passed by republicans, reduced the revenues about that much. The democrats are trying to make a better law but republicans refuse to help us.

DUN'S REVIEW say that iron industries are gaining ground and sales of wools show better than heretofore. Movements in gold show that two dollars have gone out of the country since New Years, where one dollar comes; but of silver $30 has gone out where one came in. This looks as if American silver is getting popular abroad. Amount of money in the country is put at 98 millions more than in March of last year, the per capita being now $24.60 against $24.07 last march. The money in circulation is 91 millions greater than a year ago.

THE recent election in Pennsylvanir, shows how a great majority is often given with a light vote. Galusha A. Grow, for congressman at large, received a plurality of 187,169. But he did not get as many votes as Harrison did in 1892, who received 515,011 votes, and Grow got 487,670, a republican loss of about 28,000. The loss of democratic votes at the same election was greater, showing 151,000. The populists lost over half the vote they had in '92. One cause for the light democratic vote was the fact that they had started out with one candidate and soon after put him off the ticket and took another. But the first candidate got several thousand votes, and caused much confusion.

THE senate has made several changes in the Wilson bill, and sugar, iron and coal will be taxed. The change most felt will be on sugar, but even there it is slight. We already pay under the McKinley law, 5-10 and 6-10 of a cent a pound on refined sugar, as "protection" to the sugar trust, besides bounties to home producers, enough to make about a fourth of a cent more. So we pay about 3-4 of a cent now, and the government don't get a cent of it. Under the change the senate makes, it will have a duty of about one cent a pound and all this will go into the treasury. Under the McKinley law about twenty millions a year went into the pockets of the sugar trust, and the government got nothing, or but little. The changes made by the senate are not as bad as many feared.

An Opinion.

A correspondent copies from the Lagrange Democrat the following on which some comments are offered:

"Some people are characterized by a painful lack of perspicuity. They fail phenomenally and always to take notice of things. They get in the day after the fair. There is one of them at Kendallville now who is actuated by a benevolent and public spirited ambition to defeat the Hon. W. F. McNagny for renomination."

We think when it comes to the renomination or re-election (for if renominated he would be turned down at the polls) of McNagny, the above Kendallville man, like scores of men from DeKalb, Allen, Steuben and even Lagrange counties will be on the "fair ground" the day of the races, and will receive the awards on their exhibits of good sense and sound judgment by turning down a nonentity and selecting some one who will represent, and not misrepresent our district in congress. The Lagrange Democrat refers to the Kendallville man as "benevolent and public spirited." We agree with the Democrat in this. We think that the greatest amount of benevolence and public spirited ambition due both to McNagny and his constituents, would be to turn aside our present congressional obscurity. If it is not according to former custom, it will establish a precedent, that there must be some merit in this high and honorable position. With McNagny at the head of our ticket next fall our whole ticket will be affected by these dissensions. Candidates for local offices begin to realize this and are cautiously feeling their way along in "de middle of de road." * * *

Got Her Insurance Money.

Mrs. Sarah Sheehan has received the money due her from the order of A. O. U. W. on the death of her husband, who was a member. We are pleased to note this, for it will be a benefit worthily bestowed on a worthy woman. The order should come in for a good place in public opinion for its prompt action. The "United Workmen" has proved itself equal to any of the benevolent associations in regard to keeping its contracts. The following letter speaks for itself:

TO THE OFFICERS AND MEMBERS OF AUBURN LODGE No. 12, A. O. U. W.:

I having been currently reported that I would get nothing from the A. O. U. W. on my husband's beneficiary certificate, I wish in this public manner to acknowledge the receipt of Warrant No. 210 drawn on the Grand Receiver for the sum of two thousand (2,000) dollars, in full on said certificate. I also wish to express my heartfelt thanks to the order for their kind and brotherly assistance during my husband's sickness, death and burial. MRS. SARAH C. SHEEHAN.

The above notice, being a matter of public interest, is offered you for publication. JOHN C. LOCHNER,

Obituary.

John D. Porter was born in Rigley, Huron county, O., Sept. 21, 1821, and died at the home of his son Frank in Franklin township, DeKalb county, Ind., March 6, 1894, aged 72 years, 5 months and 15 days. Mr. Porter was left an orphan at the tender age of 13, just when a boy most needs the care and counsel of loving parents. Being the eldest of a family of eight children, he early realized that "Life is real; life is earnest." Mr. Porter came to DeKalb county, Ind., in 1842. He led an active life for many years, chopping and clearing off more than 100 acres of woodland. Was married August 4, 1846, to Catherine McEnderfer. To this union were born three sons and a daughter. One brother, two sons and four grand children survive him.

After his marriage he lived on his farm in Smithfield township until the death of his wife, which occurred July 20 1892. Since that time, his sons, David and Frank, have cared for him in their homes. Mr. Porter was a kind and affectionate husband and father and was highly esteemed as a neighbor. Those who knew him best, loved him most.

The funeral was held at Hamilton March 8, conducted by Rev. S. O. Fink, of the U. B. church of Waterloo.

The able discourse was highly appreciated by all, the text being found in Job, 14th chapter and 10th verse: "But man dieth and wasteth away; Yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?" The music by the Hamilton choir, was well chosen and ably rendered. The floral offering was beautiful and appropriate.

Yes, Father Porter, we will all miss you.

And thou, who o'er thy father's bier,
Dost shed the bitter drops like rain,
Hope that a brighter, happier sphere,
Will give him to thy arms again.

STATEMENT.

Wheels are traceable in many ways, but most easily by the plate numbers. On two Cleveland bicycles recently shipped to Auburn they had to be hidden. Plaster, etc, was used to aid in this; but murder will out, and so did the source of these wheels (while yet the number was covered). Then it was innocently (?) and bravely (?) announced, "We are not ashamed to show the plate numbers on our wheels." H. A. Lozier & Co., of Cleveland, O., have stopped the source of these wheels and have instructed their factory at Toledo not to furnish or ship any parts into territory allotted to Ralph W. Cobb, unless ordered by him. They have also advised their jobbers not to ship any goods into DeKalb or Steuben counties, as they already have a representative. R. W. COBB.

CLEVELAND, O, Mch. 8, 1894.

We, H. A. Lozier & Co., Cleveland, O., have appointed Ralph W. Cobb, as our representative in Auburn, because his family relations were such as to bind him there. We would much preferred to have located him in a larger city. We have learned from our brief acquaintance with Mr. Cobb, that men like him with his experience and qualified as he is for the bicycle business, are hard to find and while he is able to look after a larger business, we congratulate ourselves in having in him a gentleman who will do the fair and honorable thing with all who may be permitted to do business with him in DeKalb and Steuben counties.

Court.

Work in court began last Thursday with Chas E. Emanuel chosen as special judge. He is pushing along all cases that come up, and much of the odds and ends of work will be done. Milo Husselman is court room bailiff and Frank Baker is bailiff of the grand jury. Both are young men and they are doing finely —are steady and dignified. Give our young men a chance. It pays. Quite a number of criminal cases are on the docket, but none have been tried. They include the larceny cases against Morehouse, Wm. Morse, Frank Derthick and Wesley Harris, and the grand jury is at work on some others. The trial jury is at work. Divorces were granted to Osia and Sarah Maxwell; Mary M. and John S. Baker and to J. M. Widney and Lulu M. Widney. Stettiner & Landman got judgment of $150 against Stiefel & Chambers. The Auburn F. & M. Works gets $198 against Joseph Fredericks and J. Davis. The case of Meeks vs Clark to recover a cow, was on trial yesterday forenoon. For this case Miss Minnie Swartz, daughter of the late G. W. Swartz, of Wilmington, is reporter.

Social Event.

Saturday, March 3, at the home of Wm. Myers in Jackson township, occurred one of the most pleasant events we have ever enjoyed. It being Mrs. Myers' 47th birthday, it was arranged to give her a surprise, which was accomplished very successfully. Among those present were Mrs. Silas Brandon, of Auburn, Mrs Wm. Ettinger, of Waterloo, Mr. and Mrs. Berry, Mr. and Mrs. John Feagler, Mr. and Mrs. John Shugers, Mrs. E. B. Reed, Mr. and Mrs. Clem Brandon and Master George, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Reed, Mrs. Tom Cool, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Furnish, Miss Emma Reed and Messrs. Charley Reed and Albert Muhn.

The day was spent in social enjoyment. A bountiful dinner was served, as those present had prepared themselves for the occasion with all the good things heart could wish for. Many presents were received. A GUEST.

A Remarkable Record.

A. Lewis has a cow upon which he dotes with the pride of a true American "Petsy," as she is called, has an enviable record. She will be seven years old in July, and averages sixty pounds of milk per day. This amount of milk is produced from dry feed. It is apparent that if she was on good pasture, seventy pouns per day would not be an exhorbitant estimate. From five calves of this stock, sold by Mr. Lewis, he has received the handsome price of fifty dollars. "Petsy" is of Holstein an Ayrshire breed. We would like to hear of a better one.

The Gospel services at the Lutheran church are still being continued with much interest and success. Thirty-six have stepped on the side of right, and thirteen united with the church last Sunday. The communion was the largest ever held in the Lutheran church.

We received a notice for publication recently, and at the conclusion the two young ladies who sent it added that they were "Democrats." That is sensible. The ladies have too much business sense to admire a tariff law that makes them pay twice as much for their wraps as their sisters in Canada have to pay.

In these cold and blustery days when work is slack and money tight, there is nothing that will give a greater return for the money expended than the Young America, made by Kessler Bros.

"The people of this vicinity insist on having Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and do not want any other," says John V. Bishop, of Portland Mills, Indiana. That is right. They know it to be superior to any other for colds, and as a preventive and cure for croup, and why should they not insist upon having it? 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

Mr. Wooton preached an able and interesting discourse at the M. E. church Sunday evening. We like the position he takes on several of the points in the temperance question. We especially commend the idea that the man who drinks should bear a big share of the blame. His punishment should be at least as severe as the punishment of the one who sells it to him.

E. R. Swetnam, of Fairfax Station, Virginia, says: "A party came forty miles to my store for Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and bought a dozen bottles. The remedy is a great favorite in this vicinity and has performed some wonderful cures here." It is intended especially for coughs, cold, croup and whooping cough and is a favorite wherever known. For sale by Robbin's & McCord.

Cleveland bicycles are popular, and unless the party in North Manchester comes and gets the two shipped to Auburn recently, they will be cut out of two splendid wheels, as they will be unable to get more from the factory. The vast amount of business carried on by the Lozier Mf. The sudden death of Mrs. Cyrus Brandaberry, as noted in our Waterloo items last week, was a very sad one. She was a most worthy lady, and was at one time a teacher in our county schools. Her maiden name was Dora Hall. Her friends abroad will hear with sadness of her early death. All sympathize with the husband and child she leaves behind.

H. Cornell, of Butler township, and the bride a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elias Schoff of Keyser. They have the COURIER's best wishes.

St. Joe News.—The death of E. J. Boyle recalls the shooting affray at this place in which he was the principal actor. It occurred on the night of August 11, 1886. Burglars had broken into Barney's store, and were discovered by Sol. Barney, who aroused Mr. Boyle and others, and in the attempt to capture the burglars, E. J. Boyle shot one of them just as he was crossing the railroad track near the residence of Geo. Bleeks. He lingered a couple of days and was finally taken to Auburn, and died in the county jail. He was a nervy fellow and never revealed who his partner was.

We have seen quite a number of watch chains about town ornamented with a neat, little charm in the shape of a watch case opener, which obviates the use of a knife or finger nail to open the watch. We have just received one, and won'd advise you to send for one, too. They are sent free on request by the Keystone Watch Case Company, of Philadelphia Pa., the largest watch case manufacturing concern in the world. They are the makers of the celebrated Jas. Boss case, the only filled cases which are fitted with the world-famed Non-pull-out bow (ring). The Company does not sell at retail, but its goods are sold by our local jewelers.

D. Y. Husselman, one of our most popular business men, has returned to his first profession, the practice of the law, and has located in the office over Brown, Culbertson and Boland's store, where his friends and patrons will always find him ready to assist them in any matters in the legal line. He practiced law for some years, until his election to the office of county clerk. During his four years in that office he was all the time acquiring valuable practical knowledge of the law in all its forms. His experience there will make his services especially valuable in the settlement of estates, etc. We are pleased to hear that he got a case the first half day he was in his office.

The boys about town are again at the cruel and dangerous sport of shooting birds, etc., with pieces of iron, such as little bolts cut off at the buggy factories. They are breaking windows every day or or two and are liable to have to pay damages for it. Then there is also a town ordinance which forbids the throwing of these dangerous missiles, and they can be fined for it. If they do not stop this dangerous practice, the marshal will be called on to see that they are punished.

A WOMAN never has a valise so large that it can be closed without squeezing.

HUMAN life is very expensive in Brazil. It takes about 50,000 pounds of gunpowder to kill one man.

THERE is a man in De Kalb County, Mo., who can eat dinner with a quid of tobacco in his mouth. They raise all kinds of wonderful beings in Missouri.

A CHICAGO preacher tells us that Moses was the father of socialism. Clearly a mistake. Moses was the father of Gershom. Exodus, ii, 22. And of Eliezer. Exodus, xviii, 4.

NO OLD custom can be overturned and no new one adopted in a day. Public opinion must grow, and growth is never a sudden process. He who realizes this will also realize the benefits of intelligent, not cowardly compromise—one that shall not delay his own steps, but shall lead others gently to follow them.

THERE is often a strong reason why a person prefers his own plan or line of conduct, for it may be one which he is not willing to proclaim. Twenty good arguments adduced for an opposite course may be outweighed by the one which is paramount in his own mind; yet, if he do not wish for any reason to make it public, he is open to the charge of being unreasonable. No one has a right to put another in so awkward a dilemma.

IT is certainly a great feather in the cap of American railway managers to be able to say that notwithstanding the greatly increased travel during the Columbian year 1893 the number of deaths from accidents was ninety-nine less than in 1891, and 115 less than in 1890. Considering the number of extra trains and the great speed of through trains the record is remarkable, and wholly creditable to the management of the railroads.

THAT parent loves well but not wisely and is doing wrong who gives unearned rewards to the idle and selfish boy or the fretting girl. If the boy fails to prove half spoiled on becoming a man, it is in spite of his early training. The chances are that he will be wilful, besides idle and selfish. But an early environment of industry, obedience, thought, and faithful religious training can train the will in such a way as to modify natural bad qualities and reinforce natural good qualities, and lead to the acquiring of new good ones.

AS MIGHT have been expected, there is trouble in the Chaska family. Three years ago Miss Fellows, a teacher in the Indian schools, married a young Santee buck—ignorant, greasy, and depraved. She was going to civilize him and make a man of him. After a stormy married life the buck, Chaska, has deserted his wife and eloped with a squaw. No other result could have been expected of such a match. The Indian, like the average fortune-hunting nobleman, wants a wife for revenue only. She is to him a beast of burden, a hewer of wood and a drawer of water. Mrs. Chaska rebelled against this idea and her liege lord has taken a woman of his own people who will be satisfied to drudge while he snores the happy hours away in his tepee.

ANOTHER French anarchist has adopted the bomb method of social reform. He hurled the missile into a crowded restaurant and more than a score of persons were injured. Unlike his predecessor, Vaillant, he selected as victims who were not responsible for and who were powerless to change existing social and economic conditions. The restaurant in which the bomb exploded was the resort for men and women who probably found the struggle for life as hard as he did. Why they should be made even more incapable of fighting it nobody but the hare-brain bomb-thrower can tell. And if justice is given him he will not be long in a position to give the information. This would-be murderer and enemy of law and order should be supplied with the same environment and accorded the same opportunity to shout "vive l'anarchie" that was given to Vaillant.

A HOST of more or less worthy imitators of Joseph Keppler, the man who made Puck, survive him, but his death leaves a vacant place in modern caricature that cannot soon be filled. Of the young cartoonists of the eastern weeklies few, if any, have the characteristics, the accuracy in drawing, combined with keen humor, that made the dead artist an example for all others of his class. Keppler was a man of strong convictions amounting at times almost to prejudice; his friendships were of a strength that time did not change; his efforts were always in the direction of his understanding of the right. Personally he was so charming a character that even his bitterest political enemies were glad to be in his company. While his home and fortune were in New York Keppler was above the pettiness and jealousy that characterize some newspaper men of that city. He had a sincere admiration for Chicago, where, during his stay last summer, he added scores to his already long list of friends. He supported Chicago in the pages of Puck, helping to fight the battles for a successful fair with all the ardor of his warm, impulsive nature.

MRS. MYRA BRADWELL of Chicago, is dead at the age of 63, the last three years of her life having been passed in suffering to which she slowly succumbed in spite of the best medical and surgical skill in this country and Europe. She had been a prominent character ever since the outbreak of the war of the rebellion, during which and for several years after her husband was Judge of the County Court of Cook County. She took a leading part in the work of providing for the needs of the soldier in the field and hospital. She was a member of the associations of ladies who conducted the Soldiers' Home and the two Sanitary Fairs in that city. On the return of peace she devoted herself assiduously to the study of law, and soon began the publication of the Legal News, which she had edited ever since with marked ability. She will be long remembered for the ability and zeal with which she conducted her fight to obtain recognition of her claimed right to become a member of the bar and practice in the courts. She led the way in which others have since traveled, and her victory was all the more notable as she did not care for the practice of the law after her right to practice was conceded, but employed her energies and talents in work for the paper, which stands in the front rank of law publications. She was content and pleased that other women reaped the fruits of her struggle to establish the equality of the sexes in the legal profession. She was a most genial lady, to know whom was a privilege, and few names of women will survive longer in the memories of the people than that of Myra Bradwell, while none will be more highly esteemed.

BY the death of Hans Guido von Bulow one of the greatest of modern German musicians has passed away. He has been an invalid for some time and his nervous system was so shattered that he had long been on the verge of insanity. He has held an important position in the musical world through his intimate association with Liszt and Wagner, both of whom at one time were his teachers, as well as by his own accomplishments. He was an ardent advocate of Wagner's music-drama and so honest in his advocacy that even when Wagner so poorly requited it as to take his wife (Liszt's daughter) away from him he remained true to the music of the future. Von Bulow has held many high and honorable positions in the Berlin Conservatory, as the King of Bavaria's Capellmeister, and in the same situation at the Hanoverian and Saxe-Meiningen courts. As a composer he has not held first rank, but as a conductor, and particularly as a concert pianist, he has made a world-wide reputation. As a pianist he was a classical purist in the highest degree, and made the world acquainted with the works of Beethoven and others as they were written and as the composers intended them to be interpreted. His genius as a pianist was recognized everywhere, and his remarkable performances in this country will be well-remembered. One of his most valuable legacies is his editions of the works of the classical composers for piano students. In this direction his labors in music, and he was a prodigious worker, have been of the highest value.

To be Rich and to be Married.

Is is often said that girls wish to be married, as if it were an accusation against them.

But why should not the girls wish to be married?

Is there anything wrong?

Is there anything censurable?

Is there anything to be condemned in either of these wishes?

The world is full of good and pleasant things.

Have not girls as well as men a right to desire to possess and enjoy them?

Must blood flow slowly and sluggishly because it is in woman's veins?

Shall her pulses never leap with the thrills of an ambition which is esteemed honorable in man?

And why should girls not desire to be married?

Marriage is an institution possessing both human and Divine sanction, which it would be quite impossible to uphold without the co-operation of young women.

Then have they no right to take an interest in it, and in fact to look upon it as opening to them, as it does, their most important sphere of action?

There is a difference of opinion as to whether women should be sailors or doctors or lawyers or even voters; but no doubt was ever entertained about their qualifications to become wives.

It is ridiculous to speak, as if it were to their disparagement, of the high appreciation which they instinctively place upon the most important relation which Nature has ordained for them.

The poet tells us that:

> "Marriage, if rightly understood,
> Is, to the virtuous and the good,
> A paradise below."

Of course, wealth and marriage, both honorable in themselves, are to be sought only by honorable means.

Honesty, industry, and economy produce wealth.

A woman, who understands thoroughly and in detail all her household affairs judiciously, contributes greatly to her husband's prosperity and her own.

So the possession of all the virtues and all the accomplishments is the first and surest step toward acquiring the possession of a good husband.

ONE WITH THE OTHER

PROTECTION AND OPPRESSION GO HAND IN HAND.

It's Unsafe for Workingmen in Protected Industries to Express Their Convictions by Means of Petitions — McKinley's Blunders—Cruelly Oppressive Taxes.

Labor Is Coerced.

Thousands of petitions have been sent to Congress in favor of the Wilson bill and tens of thousands against it. After the elections of 1890 and 1892, this fact might seem strange to some. If so, it is because they do not understand the present economic situation. They do not realize to what extreme political manufacturers will go to prevent the loss of the pap that has nourished, or rather stimulated them. It takes unusual courage to enable factory employes to sign petitions which are not sanctioned by the bosses. Those who have gone among the "protected" workingmen and have met them in their homes and lodges, say that there are very few tariff reform backsliders, even during these hard times—falsely credited to the shadow of the Wilson bill. The workingmen, however, think it bad policy for them to sign tariff reform or free trade petitions, when such action will imperil their positions and bring hardship upon themselves and their families. Besides, they think it unnecessary. They voted twice for radical tariff reform and they now expect Congress to do what it was elected to do. If it does not, they are likely to cast about next fall for a new party that will keep its promises.

Mr. B. F. Longstreet tells us, in the Courier of St. Louis, how protectionist oppression is applied in Worcester, Mass. On Jan. 3, Mr. Thomas F. Kennedy succeeded in having resolutions indorsing the Wilson bill adopted by the Central Labor Union of Worcester. These were the resolutions which Congressman J. H. Walker, of Worcester, refused to present to Congress and which were finally presented by Jerry Simpson of Kansas—a man not under the thumb of protected manufacturers, because Medicine Lodge, his home, is not a manufacturing center. Mr. Kennedy, who is a laster in one of the leading shoe houses of Worcester, and who is a sober, steady, intelligent and worthy workingman, expected to lose his position. His employers "laid for him," but they waited until February, when matters had cooled down, before discharging him. An old man, a war veteran, who was in the thickest of the anti-slavery fight in Kansas, feeling confident that he could secure hundreds of petitions in his shop in favor of the Wilson bill, as being "in the right direction," he drew up a petition, but upon going to his work that morning he was surprised by the labored efforts of the men to keep out of his reach. Newspaper reports of his intention had anticipated his arrival at the shop that day, and late in the afternoon he found the explanation to be that the "boss" had passed the word among the men in this threatening injunction: "You had better keep away from that man with his devilish heresies." He is in daily expectation of his discharge.

Mr. Longstreet, who has been active for radical tariff reform, says that he has been made to feel the pressure of protection to such an extent that he has sold out his business, and will leave Worcester to locate in a less protected and, therefore, more liberal city. It is really a serious matter for workingmen in protected industries to express their honest convictions; without the secret ballot, in most States in 1890 and 1892, it is not improbable that we would not know that their honest convictions were for tariff reduction.

McKinley Stumbles Over Himself.

Sixty-five of Major McKinley's speeches and addresses have just been printed in one large volume, intended as bait to induce the next Republican nomination for the Presidency to come his way. Here are a few of the contradictions on the subject of "who pays tariff taxes" as they occur in McKinley's new book:

What, then, is the tariff? The tariff . . . is a tax put upon goods made outside of the United States and brought into the United States for sale and consumption. . . . If a man comes to our cities and wants to sell goods to our people on the street . . . we say to him, "Sir, you must pay so much into the city treasury for the privilege of selling goods to our people here." Now, why do we do that? We do it to protect our own merchants. Just so our government says to the countries of the old world . . . "If you want to come in and sell to our people, and make money from our people, you must pay something for the privilege of doing it." . . . Now, that is the tariff (pp. 185, 186; Oct. 29, 1885).

We tell every man in America who wants Scotland's pig iron, if he thinks it is any better and does not want the American pig iron—we tell him, if he must have the Scotch, "You must pay for the privilege." And in that way we maintain that great industry (p. 188; Oct. 29, 1885).

Under this law (the McKinley bill) the (United States) Government cannot go abroad and buy what it can get at home without paying a duty. The result will be that the Government hereafter will buy more at home and less abroad—and it ought to. (Applause.) (P. 511; April 10, 1891.)

They say "the tariff is a tax." That is a captivating cry. So it is a tax; but whether it is burdensome upon the American people depends upon who pays it. If we pay it, why should the foreigners object? Why all these objections in England, France, Germany, Canada and Australia against the tariff law of 1890, if the American consumer bears the burdens, and if the tariff is only added to the foreign cost which the American consumer pays? If they pay it, then we do not pay it (p. 579; May 17, 1892).

Last year we paid $55,000,000 out of our own pockets to protect whom? To protect the men in the United States who are producing just one-eighth of the amount of our consumption of sugar. Now we wipe that out, and it will cost us to pay the bounty just $7,000,000 every twelve months, which furnishes the same protection at very much less cost to the consumer. So we save $48,000,000 every year and leave that vast sum in the pockets of our own people. (Applause on the Republican side.) (P. 452; May 29, 1890.)

Cruelly Oppressive Taxes.

A tax on coal is clearly unnecesary and unjust. There was imported into the United States, in the fiscal year 1893, bituminous coal to the amount of 1,090,374 tons, on which a duty of 75 cents was paid, yielding $817,780. Of these imports, 999,677 tons were brought to the Pacific coast, and the tax of three-quarters of a million of dollars ($794,658) was an unnecessary and grossly unfair burden on the industries of that part of the country. The coal could not have been obtained from the fields of the United States. The sole effect of the tax was to prevent a certain amount of importation in the East, where the tax is prohibitory. The case of the tax on iron ore is very similar. The imports of iron in 1893 were 677,302 tons, the tax was 75 cents per ton, equivalent to 42.7 per cent. Of this total, 651,660 tons were imported at Philadelphia and Baltimore alone. The ore could not have been supplied from west of the Alleghanies, for reasons which we have frequently stated, nor from the mines of the South. The tax on it was an unnecessary and unjust burden on industry. But, as in the case of coal, the tax is prohibitory to extensive industries which would be profitable with untaxed material and are impossible with this tax. Clearly, there is no real protection and there is a great deal of most cruel oppression in any such duties.—N. Y. Times.

Canadian Coal and Annexation.

Senator Teller, who is a mild kind of a Protectionist, is in favor of the annexation of Canada to this country with as little delay as possible. But if Canada should be annexed, how could duties be levied upon Canadian lumber, coal, barley, hay, butter, and eggs? How could the farmers of New York, Ohio, and other States on the northern border be protected against a tremendous inundation of these products should trade be made free by political union? We earnestly beg Senator Teller to give consideration to this question. Trade takes no heed of political arrangements. Should Canada be annexed politically its products would compete just as keenly with the products of this country as if reciprocal free trade only should be established with the Dominion. We have no doubt that Senator Teller will assent to this proposition: and in such case he, as an annexationist, cannot regard free trade with Canada as a dangerous or even an undesirable thing. On the other hand, free trade with Canada would tend powerfully to the political end which he seeks. He begins at the wrong end of the business. Free trade with Canada first, and annexation afterward.—Philadelphia Record.

What's the Matter with McKinley?

Said Mr. McKinley to the Chicago Lincoln Club, referring to the present session of Congress: "It is a condition where the people's representatives are legislating against the interests and opinions of the people. * * * But what else could you expect? They are pledged to reduce the tariff."

Is the joke on Mr. McKinley or the people? It is certainly not on the Democratic party. We are inclined to the belief that Mr. McKinley has made himself the victim of his own satire. The fact that the Democrats are "pledged to reduce the tariff" carries with it the conclusion that they have become the "people's representatives" because of that pledge. How then can they be legislating "against the interests and opinions of the people"? Either the people do not know what they want or Mr. McKinley does not know what he is talking about?

We never look for logic in a Republican speech under any circumstances, but such palpable inconsistencies at a Chicago club banquet place the orator under suspicion of something besides insincerity.—St. Louis Republic.

An Infamous Tax.

The Indianapolis News (Ind.) says, referring to the report that the Democratic Senators want to amend the Wilson bill by putting a tax on coal: "We hope not. Those who believe the way to reform the tariff is to reform it cannot do better than to make a stand right on this coal tax. It is an infamous tax. It has no relation to wages. The man who claims it is in the interest of the miner is a hypocrite of the worst kind." The Chicago Herald (Dem.) also says: "If the Finance Committee wish to make a proper response to this attempt to McKinleyize the Wilson bill they will leave coal where the House left it, on the free list."

Protection Does Lower Some Prices.

The low prices of wool, wheat and cotton are largely the result of increased production in Australia, Argentina, India and Egypt. By its policy of discouraging reciprocal trade with the countries which are the great purchasers of wool, wheat and cotton the Government of the United States has done what it could to raise up competitors in the production of these great staples. The farmers who are now putting 30-cent wheat into elevators in the Western States, and accepting way-down prices for their wool and cotton, are enjoying the fruits of thirty years of the protective policy.—Philadelphia Record.

Much to Gain.

We have had no Wilson bill yet. The country is still staggering under a higher tariff than that imposed during the war. A few months of actual experience under the Wilson bill will certainly satisfy the people that it is worth a much longer trial, and the longer trial will satisfy them that they have nothing to lose but very much to gain by a still larger installment of commercial and industrial liberty.—Cayuga Chief.

Must Be Moss-Covered.

This is the way the Courier-Journal puts it: "Conservatives" is the new name for protectionists who have obtained seats in the United States Senate on the false pretense of being Democrats and who want to amend the Wilson bill to conform to their ideas. A man whose ideas are more conservative than the Wilson bill's provisions must be covered with moss.

A Pennsylvania Affair.

The State of Pennsylvania voted against a reduction of the tariff in 1892. Its opinion on that particular point is not the least bit strengthened by emphasis. The present tariff law is peculiarly a Pennsylvania affair.

Tells It Tersely.

The Herald of Albany, N. Y., expresses the desire of the bulk of the Democratic party when it says: "Give us a tariff bill sweetened with free sugar, warmed with the heat of free coal, and welded with free iron."

Push the Wilson Bill.

BUSINESS still awaits action on the tariff, gentlemen of the Senate.—Boston Herald.

A LITTLE Senatorial celerity would be a boon indeed to the people just now.—Boston Globe.

IT is the plain duty of the Senate to get right down to business and pass the Wilson bill.—Detroit Free Press.

THE people are watching the Senate, and they want tariff reform, too, as quick as they can get it.—Memphis Appeal-Avalanche.

THE popularity of United States Senators will be in exact inverse ratio to the length of their speeches on the tariff.—Chicago Tribune.

THE Senate wants to hustle up that Wilson bill, and it does not want to inject any protectionism into it. The people have been waiting too long for Democratic reform to be balked at this late day.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

THE longer the Democrats of the Finance Committee labor over the Wilson bill the more clear does it become that the best thing they can do is to report it to the Senate promptly and substantially as it came from the House.—Chicago Herald.

THE country wants the tariff settled right away, and to delay the passage of the House bill through the Senate one hour longer than is necessary for decent deliberation will be a crime against the American people worse than that damaging delay that did so much to discredit the Senate at the extra session.—Philadelphia Times.

TARIFF BILL IS OUT.

IS GIVEN TO THE SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE.

Many Changes Made in the Wilson Measure—Maximum Duty of One and Four-tenths Cents on Sugar—Free Iron Ore Killed—Eight Years for Whisky.

Sugar Is Taxed.

The Wilson tariff bill, which passed the House of Representatives Feb. 1, was laid before the full membership of the Senate Committee on Finance Thursday morning, in the amended form upon which the Democratic majority of that committee finally agreed after one month's consideration. The chief features are the provisions in regard to sugar, iron ore, lead, wool and its manufactures, cotton manufactures, whisky and tobacco. The sugar provision is as follows:

All sugars, tank bottoms, syrups of cane-juice or of beet-juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses testing by the polariscope not above 80 degrees, shall pay a duty of 1 per cent per pound, and for every additional degree or fraction of a degree 80 and not above 90 degrees shown by the polariscope test, shall pay .01 of a cent per pound additional, and above 90 and not above 96 degrees, for every additional degree or fraction of a degree shown by the polariscope test shall pay a duty of .02 of a cent per pound additional, and above 96 degrees by polariscope test shall pay a duty of 1.4 cents per pound; molasses testing not above 56 degrees by the polariscope shall pay a duty of ½ cents per gallon; molasses testing above 56 degrees shall pay a duty of 4 cents per gallon.

Tax on Iron, Coal, and Lead.

Iron ore, including manganiferous iron ore, also dross or residuum from burned pyrites, is taxed 40 cents per ton. Coal is taken from the free list and made dutiable also at 40 cents a ton, and coke at 15 cents. Lead ore, which in the Wilson bill was 15 per cent ad valorem, lead ore, and lead dross are taxed three-fourths of a cent per pound, provided that silver ore and all other ores containing lead shall pay a duty of three-fourths of a cent per pound on the lead contained therein, according to sample and assay at the port of entry.

Raw wool is left on the free list exactly as in the Wilson bill, the provision to go into effect Aug. 2, 1894. In manufactures of wool the valuations as given in the Wilson bill are stricken out, and the schedules now read as follows:

Wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals in the form of slubbing, waste, roving waste, ring waste, mungo, shoddies, garnetted, or carded waste, carbonized nolls, or other waste product, any of which is composed wholly or in part of wool; the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, which has been improved or advanced beyond its original condition as waste by the use of machinery or the application of labor, or both, and carbonized wool, shall be subject to a duty of 15 per centum ad valorem. On wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other like animals in the form of roving, roping, or tops, 25 per centum ad valorem; on woolen and worsted yarns, 30 per centum ad valorem; on woolen or worsted cloths, shawls, knit fabrics, manufactures of every description made wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other animals and any of the above having India rubber as a component material, not specially provided for in this act, 35 per centum ad valorem, instead of 40, as in the Wilson bill.

On blankets, hats of wool, and flannels, 25 per centum ad valorem, and if valued at more than 30 cents per pound 30 per centum ad valorem; on women's and children's dress goods, composed wholly or in part of wool, not specially provided for in this act, 35 per centum ad valorem, instead of 40; on clothing, ready-made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, and imitations of fur, composed wholly or in part of wool, etc., 40 per centum ad valorem, instead of 45; on webbings, gorings, suspenders, braces, beltings, bindings, braids, etc., 35 per centum ad valorem, instead of 40.

Carpets remain unchanged. The reduction in the duties for manufactures of wool shall take effect Dec. 2, 1894.

Off and on the Free List.

Articles stricken from the free list are as follows:

Apples, green, ripe, and dried, etc.; beef, mutton and pork; bone char; bituminous and shale, and coal slack or culm; coke, cocoa fiber, floor matting, manufactured from round or split straw, including Chinese matting; dates, cocoanuts, Brazil nuts, cream nuts; gambier; guts, salted; horn strips and tips; iron ore; olives, green or prepared; orchids, lily of the valley, azaleas, palms, and other plants used for forcing under glass for cut flowers or decorative purposes; sausage skins; sugar; stained or painted window glass or painted glass; paintings and statuary.

The additions to the free list are as follows:

Any cattle, horses, sheep or other domestic animals which have strayed across the border to any foreign country, or where such domestic animals have been or may be driven across such boundary by the owner for pasturage purposes; diamonds and other precious stones, rough or uncut, including miners' diamonds; cod liver oil, not specifically provided for in the act; straw, etc., for hats; spermaceti, whale and other fish oils of American fisheries and all fish and other products of such fisheries.

A GREAT TRIUMPH OF MEDICAL SCIENCE.

What a Great and Living Physician Has Accomplished by Devoting a Life to the Study and Relief of Disease.

If a great General is born to the world like Grant, or a noted statesman like Bismarck, or a brilliant lawyer like Evarts, or an eloquent clergyman like Beecher, newspapers are full of their praise and everyone knows of their remarkable achievements, biographers spring up to flatter and extol them in volume after volume; but the one who is greatest and noblest of them all—who is the leading benefactor of mankind—the great physician, labors on modestly in his grand work of saving life and relieving pain and distress, and is content to do without biographers, and leaves his praise to be sung by the grateful patients he has cured. What grander, nobler, or holier career can there be than that of ministering to the sick and suffering.

To say that Dr. Kilmer is the leading physician to-day, among the many skillful men in the medical profession, is true if a man's success and achievements are counted in the scale. For over forty years he has devoted his life and talents—of which nature has most richly endowed him—to the study of disease and its successful treatment. During that time he has personally examined, prescribed for and successfully treated nearly a half million patients, in addition to those who are now under his professional care at his magnificent Sanitarium which he has recently established for the benefit of such cases as require his personal supervision.

In the early days of his practice and later on Dr. Kilmer found the same old difficulty confronting him that had baffled every physician from the days of Galen to the present time—there was no known specific for kidney disease, which is so prevalent, and in many cases so fatal. He determined, therefore, to devote his talents to the study and discovery of the means not only to relieve, cure and restore these all important organs to health when they were diseased, but to strengthen and stimulate them so that they should properly perform their necessary functions. The result of his exhaustive investigation and experiments tested in every-day practice, resulted in the discovery of the compound now known as Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. The phenomenal success of this great remedy has demonstrated the fact beyond a doubt that it is is now the true specific, not only for Kidney and Bladder difficulties, but seldom fails to cure that much dreaded Bright's Disease which after all is nothing but advanced kidney disease.

We say now, if Dr. Kilmer has done nothing else to make his name immortal the discovery of this one great remedy alone has given him a reputation that will continue as long as the world stands. Dr. Edward Jenner died in 1823, but his discovery of vaccination still exists throughout the civilized universe; Dr. William Thomas Green Morton has long been dead, and yet he lives to-day through his wonderful discovery of anæsthetics, and long after our distinguished Dr. Killmer has passed from earth his name will be familiar as the discoverer of Swamp-Root, the greatest remedy of this nineteenth century.

It has become an axiom that a man is a benefactor who succeeds in making two blades of grass grow where only one has grown before; then what shall we say of the man who is able to increase the average duration of human life? This, we freely concede, has been accomplished by S. Andral Kilmer, M. D., through the discovery of his famous remedy Swamp Root, and we say it without fear of successful contradiction. Its wonderful cures, and its power over the kidneys have done and are doing more to increase the average duration of human life than all physicians and medicines known.

THE DEEPEST MINE.

America Now Has Penetrated the World's Crust the Furthest.

The United States has now, we believe, the deepest metal mine in the world. For some time that claim has been made for the Maria shaft at the mines of Prizibram in Austria, which was 3,675 feet below the surface at the time of the great fire in 1892; and nothing, we believe, has been done upon it since that time. It has now been surpassed in depth by the No. 3 shaft of the Tamarack Copper Mining Company, in Michigan, which, on December 1, was 3,640 feet deep, and is now more than 3,700 feet, the average rate of sinking being about 75 feet a month. This makes it beyond question the deepest metal mine in existence, and only one other shaft has reached a greater depth, that of a coal mine in Belgium, for which 3,900 feet are claimed.

For the attainment of this distinction we have to congratulate Capt. John Daniels, the general manager of the company, for the skill and success with which the work has been carried on. In Germany the completion of the Adalbert shaft to a depth of 1,000 meters (3,281 feet) was thought worthy to be the occasion of a public festival; and though the Tamarack shaft has been carried down to the present great depth entirely as a matter of business, and no especial formalities have marked its progress, the remarkable achievement certainly deserves recognition. for not only has it been sunk to a greater depth than any before it, but it has been sunk with much greater rapidity and at less cost than probably any European shaft of any kind like its depth or in ground as hard.—Engineering and Mining Journal.

Comfort and Luxury.

No one can say where comfort slides into luxury. What seems like elysium to one is commonplace to another, what one esteems a daily necessity another regards as a luxury not to be thought of. There is no precise standard to which we are bound to conform, no exact limit which we can censure our neighbor for overstepping. But, though no iron rule can be laid down in this matter, each one for himself or herself can and ought to decide how far to yield to the desire for comfort, and where to resist it. Of course the first and most obvious tests is how far we are able rightly to afford it. To gratify it at the expense of honesty, to spend money for it when we do not pay our debts, to minister to our own comfort when those dependent upon us are pinched or suffering—these are of all things the most despicable. Yet how much of this is done, and how eager is the attempt at justification!

A Charitable Girl.

Whether by bribe, by flattery, or by both, history does not say, but by some means a mother and daughter managed to gain access to Paderewski's sanctum. The mother was proud of her daughter, as mothers will be; and as for the daughter, she has aspirations. She had been taught to play, she thought she played well, and to make a long story short she ardently desired Paderewski's opinion of her prowess.

She came then, saw the piano, and attempted its conquest. Paderewski listened, or appeared to, while the mother beat time approvingly. At last, with a final crash, the girl rose from the stool, and the mother flushed with pleasure.

"Tell me," she whispered to the artist; "tell me in confidence. What do you think of her?".

Amiably the artist rubbed his hands together.

"I think she must be very charitable."

"Charitable! Charitable!"

"Yes," Paderewski sweetly repeated. "Charitable. Surely she letteth not her left hand know what her right hand doeth."

How Canada Got Its Name.

The origin of the word "Canada" is curious enough. The Spaniards visited that country previous to the French, and made particular search for gold and silver, and finding none, they often said among themselves, "Aca Nada," (there is nothing here.) The Indians—who watched closely—learned this sentence and its meaning.

The French arrived, and the Indians, who wanted none of their company, and supposed they also were Spaniards come on the same errand, were anxious to inform them in the Spanish sentence "Aca Nada."

The French, who knew as little of Spanish as the Indians, supposed this incessantly recurring sound was the name of the country, and gave it the name Canada, which it has borne ever since.

Ubiquity of Micro-Organisms.

Micro-organisms are present in the air, the water, and the earth. They are not only on the earth, but the upper layers of terrestrial crust are teeming with them. They are carried by the atmosphere as dust and deposited upon the surface of all objects. They exist in vast numbers upon and in the human body. They are present with the body in life and do not leave it in death until it is resolved into the elements. Hence there can be no doubt but they are an important factor in nature.—Ohio Dental Journal.

ALL ALONE,

A long procession of diseases start from a torpid liver and impure blood. Take it, as you ought, when you feel the first symptoms (languor, loss of appetite, dullness, depression). James Payn tells an amusing story concerning a well-known club in Pall Mall. A member lost his umbrella there, and caused the following notice to be put up in the entrance hall: "The nobleman who took away an umbrella not his own on such a date is requested to return it." The house committee look umbrage at this statement and summoned the member who had composed it before them. "Why, sir," they said, "should you have supposed that a nobleman had taken your umbrella?" "Well," he replied, "the first article in the club rules says that 'This club is composed of noblemen and gentlemen,' and since the person who stole my umbrella could not have been a gentleman, he must have been a nobleman."

Protection from Lightning.

It seems strange that notwithstanding the great advance which has been made in electricity during the last twenty-five years so little progress should have been made in developing a method for protecting buildings from the destructive effects of lightning. The annual loss of property in the United States from lightning alone reaches hundreds of thousands of dollars, to say nothing of the hundreds of lives which are destroyed by the same agency. The lightning rod remains in almost exactly the same primitive state in which it was left by Franklin. There is certainly a promising field here for ambitious electricians.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

A COLUMN OF PARTICULAR INTEREST TO THEM.

Something that Will Interest the Juvenile Members of Every Household—Quaint Actions and Bright Sayings of Many Cute and Cunning Children.

A Baby and a Well.

Come, Tommy and Bess, clamber up on my knee,
I'll tell you a story as true as can be;
A true little story to you I will tell
Of a darling live baby way down in a well!

While mamma was writing and nurse off her guard,
Child Harold his travels began in the yard;
Straight down through the orchard and on to the wood
His little feet scampered as fast as they could.

He came pretty soon to a hole, round and deep,
Where a spring had danced up and then fallen asleep!
So quiet it lay that the birds came to drink
And the sun played bo-peep with the ferns 'round the brink.

He had heard there are tiny elf-creatures that dwell
In the clear, glassy depths of a wood-enshrined well;
He had looked for as long as a half of a year
For that home of the fairies, and, lo! it was here.

"Hurrah! there is one! and a baby, like me;"
He laughs and he nods and he trembles with glee.
"It is true—it is true!" and he flies home to tell
Of the real baby-fay living down in the well.

There are mystical spirits all 'round us I'm sure;
They smile and they sigh, they forbid and they lure;
Some good and some naughty, some sad and some gay;
Some watch us by night, some are with us at play.

And when little Harold bent over the rim
Of the slippery stones that were mossy and dim,
Some angel, I ween, saw that no harm befell;
But his own baby-face looked up from the well!

—Florence Kendrick Cooper, in Independent.

A COASTING TRAGEDY.

In Which Words Are Superfluous.

She Was the Important Party.

Little Dorothy of Somerville, Mass., is six years old and, like all other children, is a born egotist. She went out for a horsecar ride with her aunt. She had her own purse with her and was very desirous to pay her own fare, but her aunt said no.

"You are my guest," she explained to Dorothy, "and so I must pay your fare; but you may take the 10 cents and hand it to the conductor, if you like."

So Dorothy took the dime, and when the conductor came along she handed it to him in the most dignified manner. He gave her a quick look, and estimating that she was under the five-year limit, he rang in only one fare, and handed back a 5-cent piece, which Dorothy took without a word.

"Wasn't it strange?" she asked after she got home. "The conductor took my fare, but he didn't charge Aunt Alice any fare at all."

Pierre's Present.

Pierre Rosny was the son of a French pastry cook, who kept a small shop in Detroit. It was very near Christmas, and all the children were telling each other what they wanted Santa Claus to bring them.

"A drum for me," said Willy Cross. And he began to practice "Rat-tat, rub-a-dub" on the bottom of a chair.

"I want a little brother," said rosy Dorothy.

"Pshaw!" laughed Katie Brown, who had four brothers. "That wouldn't be a present at all; brothers just bother."

"I want one only," insisted Dorothy, "One wouldn't bother, 'cause we'd play together."

Pierre heard it all. He looked at Dorothy, and thought how nice it would be to have such a sister, for his mamma, too, had only one child—Pierre, with his cunning French ways. For a week Pierre thought of Christmas, as he smelled the spices stirred into fruit cake and rich plum pudding for his father's customers. One day he laid his curly black head against his father's white apron.

"Papa," he asked, "may I give a Christmas present?"

"How much will it cost me?" said Papa Rosny, smiling.

"Nothing, papa, if I may give just what I please."

"What, not even a penny?" asked papa.

"No," said Pierre; "it is not to buy that I wish."

"Very well, my little man, do as you like," and Pierre was sent away with his chubby face shining.

"What do you say, mamma," he asked next day, "when you give a present?"

"I write on a card so," said Mrs. Rosny, "'With my love,' and pin it on the gift."

Christmas morning the bell rang at Dorothy's house, and there stood a pretty boy with a pink necktie, who said to the maid: "I have a present for Dorothy. Can I see her?"

Just then Dorothy herself ran in, with her yellow hair flying out behind, to see if anything had come from Santa Claus.

"Here is a young gentleman with a present," said the maid.

"Oh!" cried Dorothy, "you dear Pierre; what is it?"

"Me," said Pierre, who had got out of his coat and muffler. On his breast was pinned a card which read, "Wif my luv."

"Why," said Dorothy, "where is the present?"

"I'm it," cried Pierre, a little disappointed. "You wanted a little brother, and papa said I might give anything I liked to you, so I give myself to be your little brother."

The maid laughed, but Dorothy just put her hand in Pierre's and said, "How nice," and they went to playing together.—Little Men and Women.

How Janie Settled It.

"Here comes mamma," said Janie. "Oh, mamma, must I save some of my candy for Grace?"

"I think a good little sister would."

"But Grace didn't give me any of hers yesterday."

"Didn't she? How did you like that?"

"I didn't like it at all. And I want to make her not like it, too, because I think she was real mean."

"Dear, dear! And is mamma to have two mean little girls, then?"

Janie looked at her mother and was quiet a minute. Then she ran and threw her arms around her neck and said: "No, no, mamma dear; you shall not have any mean little girls at all. I guess Grace forgot, and I'll go and give her some of my candy now, so she won't ever forget again."

Her mother smiled. "I think that is the way to make her remember," she said. "And I am so glad I am to have two kind little girls."

A Mark of Esteem.

"Do you and your teacher get along well together, Wallie?"

"Splendid," said Wallie. "She likes me so much she won't let me sit at my desk, but keeps me on a little stool beside her all the time."

Jimmie's Ambition.

"Well, Jimmie," said the visitor to the small son of the entomologist, "are you going to be a lawyer when you grow up, or what?"

"I'm going to be a bugwump like papa," said Jimmie.

Had Tested Them.

"We got hardwood stairs in our house," bragged Jimmie.

"So've we," retorted Mollie. "I fell down 'em last Tuesday, an they was awful hard."

LITTLE NELLIE climbed into Uncle Ned's lap, and began to search his pockets for a penny. Finding a silver quarter, she called out, "Oh, mamma, Uncle Ned has got a penny with a hen on it!"

LITTLE DOT—Where you been? Little Dick—I went down town with papa to call on the Street Cleaning Department. Little Dot—What's that? It's a place where they tell people why the streets are not cleaned.

AT the dinner table the other day, Mrs. C. remarked that the washerwoman (it being washday) had such a severe headache she could hardly hold up her head. Little Woodford, the bright little grandson of two and a half years, looked up and said, "Grandma, put on the check rein."

WALCOTT, a dear little three-year-old, who when he is good is very good, and when he is bad is horrid, is usually overwhelmed with remorse after his various misdemeanors. One evening, when his papa came home from the office, the little man, with a burden on his conscience, walked up to him and said, "Papa, I have been a naughty boy to-day. I was not good to my mamma. Please spank me."

Not Quite Appropriate.

A young fellow, says the New York Times, was looking over the various purchases of his stepmother, intended for a long and varied list. "Did you say this was for the new clergyman?" he inquired, holding up one card. "Yes, that with the dove flying against the blue sky. Pretty, isn't it?" He gave a low whistle. "You didn't happen to read the legend, I suppose?" She shook her head. "I never thought of it. Why?" He tossed it into her lap and she saw: "I would take thee to my bosom, but thou wilt not come." The new clergyman did not get his Christmas card.

Modest.

Writers of comic plays are said to have, as a rule, a very good conceit of themselves. But one of them objected, nevertheless, when an ardent admirer compared him with Shakspeare.

"You mustn't do that!" said the dramatist.

"Why not?"

"Well, Shakspeare had his way of writing, you know, and I have mine!"

Dogs on the Race Track.

Horse-racing has long been an established and popular pastime and now dog-racing is coming to attract some attention. A lad named Willie Ketchum of Ontario was the pioneer in this line of sport, says the Utica Press. In 1887 he showed his trotting-dog broken to harness. It was an Irish setter, who never left a trot and made half-mile heats against ponies. He was able to outspeed almost every pony that was entered against him. His challenge was against any pony twelve hands or under, or to give any horse twenty seconds, the horse to go a mile and the dog half a mile, the horse to draw a quarter of his own weight.

The lad made about $10,000 with his dog in this way. Another boy, named Charley Kinsler, whose home is in Ohio, trained a bulldog to make splendid time on the course. He was not a success, however, because on the occasion of his first race on a fair ground the word go had just been given when he espied an unfriendly dog some distance away and he bolted the track and overhauled the object of his chase and could not be persuaded to return till he had whipped him on the spot. Young Kinsler gave up teaching bulldogs and his next venture was with a cross between a Newfoundland and blood hound, which developed very good speed.

Young Kinsler, however, had the best success with setters, and those that he broke to harness were able to go at quite a fast clip. He made a tour of the country fairs and was everywhere a popular attraction. The business netted him handsome profits and he is spending the present winter in training other dogs to draw in harness, single, in pairs, and a four-in-hand. Of course, dog-trotting can be at best but a novelty and a side attraction. The two lads who have gone into it have done immensely well with the enterprise, but it is a field that can be very easily crowded, and too much competition will extinguish the business.

Their Own Property.

Henry Wolff, in "The Country of the Vosges," says that the people of the little village of Rufach have a very commonsense notion of keeping their own good things entirely to themselves—even such as elsewhere one would prefer to see used by one's neighbors. For instance, when they had set up a brand new gallows on one of the finest hilltops in the neighborhood, as is the custom in Germany, and an adjoining parish begged to be allowed to hang one of its malefactors on it, it is on record that the Rufachers indignantly denied them, protesting that "This gallows is for ourselves, only, and for our children."

Haunted!

A haunted house in these practical and unromantic days is something of a rarity, but an individual haunted with the idea that his ailment is incurable is a personage frequently met with. Disbelief in the ability of medicine to cure is only a mild form of monomania, although in some cases repeated failures to obtain relief from many different sources would almost seem to justify the doubt. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has demonstrated its ability to overcome dyspepsia, constipation, liver and kidney trouble, malarial complaints and nervousness, and its recorded achievements in the curative line ought at least to warrant its trial by any one troubled with either of the above ailments, even although his previous efforts to obtain remedial aid have been fruitless. Used with perseverence, the Bitters will conquer the most obstinate cases.

Cure for a "Black Eye."

There is nothing, says the New York Medical Times, to compare with the tincture of a strong infusion of capsicum annum mixed with an equal bulk of mucilage of gum arabic and with the addition of a few drops of glycerine. This should be painted all over the bruised surface with a camel's-hair pencil and allowed to dry on, a second or third coating being applied as soon as the first is dry. If done as soon as the injury is inflicted, this treatment will invariably prevent the blackening of the bruised tissue. The same remedy has no equal in rheumatic, sore, or stiff neck.

HOUSEHOLD TREASURE.

Growing Popularity of the Oxford Sewing Machines.

There is nothing more truly a household treasure than a good sewing machine. To be without it is to be willfully deprived of the immense advantage of one of the greatest of all inventions. A machine once bought is a perpetual treasure. It demands no wages, occasions no expense or trouble and is always ready without a moment's notice to render the work of the laborious housewife tenfold more efficient and expeditious. Some machines combine the best ideas and suggestions which have been so abundantly introduced in this remarkable mechanism.

A machine which exhibits in liberal combination all the best features introduced is the Oxford Improved Sewing Machine, made by the Oxford Manufacturing Company, Chicago, description and cut of which can be seen in the advertising columns of this paper. They make high and low arm machines, with lock-stitch shuttle, running light and quiet. These machines have the following important features: Cheapness (ranging from $10.50 upward); perfect, almost self-adjusting and graduated tension; are under control of the operator, and are always positive in their working. They are entirely self-threading in all points, including the shuttle. The needle is self-setting, and the attachments are quickly and easily placed and fastened. The shuttle has an easy oscillating motion, causing it to keep its proper place against the race. Their Oxford, Home and Columbia Machines, with attachments, were awarded the medal premium at the World's Columbian Exposition, Chicago.

An Effective Threat.

The Queen of Italy is an excellent musician, whereas King Humbert displays but little artistic taste and has certainly no ear for music. Of late the Queen has been compelled to use spectacles when reading. The first time her husband, who detests them, saw her wearing a pair, he exclaimed:

"Margherita, take those glasses off!"

But, as the Queen was in no hurry to obey, the King, having exhausted his powers of persuasion, at last said:

"Margherita, if you don't put away those glasses I shall start singing."

The effect of this simple threat was magical. Rather than submit to the martyrdom of listening to the false notes of her imperious spouse, the Queen gave way and instantly removed her spectacles.

Gold Fish.

The gold fish, which is distributed over nearly all parts of the world, is one of the most interesting members of the finny tribe. It apparently is susceptible to atmospheric changes, and any one who takes the trouble to note its actions in an aquarium will be astonished to find that the healthful little fish is a true prophet in matters relating to changes in the weather. When an area of lower temperature with rain or snow is approaching the gold fish remains near the surface of the water, while if clear, sunshiny weather is expected they will almost always be found near the center of the reservoir.

Charity.

Mrs. Cheapside—Henrietta, they tell me that there is a poor family in Poverty Lane which is actually suffering for the necessities of life. Really, it seems as Christian people we should do something for them.

The Old and the New.

Powerful and large as are the greatest of modern United States warships, they are all of low stature compared with the towering structures of sixty or seventy years ago. The United States steamship Pennsylvania, built about 1838, and supposed at the time to be one of the largest warships ever launched, was 220 feet long and 58 broad. She carried 220 guns, and towered aloft with five decks. Her complement of men was 1,400.

THERE is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from ten drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address, F. J. CLIP SAVE AND SEND TO US

In the first year in which the Aermotor Co. did galvanizing it expended $54,000 in this work, and did not furnish galvanized goods for the entire year either. No extra charge was made for the goods into which this enormous sum was put. Are you curious to know why this lavish expenditure was made? Are you curious to know how the Aermotor Co. came to make bed-rock, hard-times prices long before hard times set in? The explanation is this: The Aermotor Co. foresaw that something better than painting was required and foresaw that hard times were coming.

THE AERMOTOR CO. FORESEES, IT LOOKS AHEAD, IT ANTICIPATES, IT KNOWS WHAT IS COMING, IT KNOWS WHAT SHOULD BE COMING, IT KNOWS IN ADVANCE WHAT IT SHOULD DO.

Because of this it has an enormous factory, and turns out an enormous quantity of goods, and good goods. The other fellow is a used-to-be, has been, or might have been, had he known, but he didn't know. It is all in the past. His business is in the gone by. Ours is in the present, the future. His consolation is found in the darkey's statement, "It's better to be a has-been than a nebber was." After we have done and are doing a thing and it is known to be the only thing to do, certain little piping voices are heard saying: "We can do it if you will pay us enough money to do it."

We made the Steel Windmill business, made the model to which the best of our imitators can only hope to remotely approach and in their endeavor to approach it have still weakly experimenting at the expense of the user. But to return to our enormous outlay for galvanizing. Why did we do it? The reason is this. WE BUILD THE BEST WE KNOW, REGARDLESS OF COST, and we believe we know better than anybody. We know that this metal, exposed to the air, will not last unless galvanized, but if properly galvanized, will last scores of years. Barbed wire galvanized will last 20 years, and be practically as good as new. How long does it last painted? But the barbed wire is an eighth of an inch thick, while some of the steel used in the vanes of windmills is from a thirty-second to a sixty-fourth of an inch thick, and therefore would last only from a fourth to an eighth as long as the barbed wire, other things being equal, but they are not equal; the sheet metal has holes punched through it and is riveted to thicker and more rigid pieces.

The vibration of the thin parts at once cracks the paint around the rivets, and water at once gets in and rust quickly eats away the thin parts. Some have used galvanized metal and put in black rivets. This of course is not so good as painting albeit the cut edge of the galvanized metal is exposed and is in no way protected. WE BUILD FOR THE AGES. We wouldn't sell you a poor painted wheel, nor one made of metal galvanized before being put together at double price for it. We know, and knowledge is power. If you would pay us double price for a galvanized wheel that such knowledge is worthless, we would fully have nothing to do with it.

When the motion of an Aermotor Wheel is all riveted up, completed and cleaned of rust and deposition, it is then immersed in melted zinc and aluminum and left there until it becomes as hot as the metal is and until every crack, crevice, pore and opening of every part is filled, closed up and intervened with the molten metal, and the whole 32 pieces composing the motion become soldered and welded together as one piece, thus you have something that is strong, enduring and reliable. It is expensive to do, and small doers cannot afford to do it. We keep 40 tons of zinc and aluminum melted from one year's end to another, but we have business enough so that we can afford to do it.

One word about the nature of galvanizing. The silvery white coating which fills every pore and covers every portion of the Aermotor Wheel, Vane and Tower is zinc and aluminum when it is first put on, but which, after standing for a time forms, with the steel, a chemical combination or alloy which cannot be melted and is practically indestructible.

The 5th advertisement in this series will show a 4-Wheel Steel Truck, weighing 175 lbs., which will carry 2 tons, and of which we use 500 in the Aermotor Factory. It will be found almost indispensable on any farm or in any warehouse. For 2 copies of this advertisement, which is No. 4 in the series, and $8.50 each, sent immediately after the appearance of adv. No. 6, we will deliver f. o. b. Chicago, one of these Trucks or forward from branch house, freight from Chicago added.

Where we can, we shall make liberal offers to secure copies of these advertisements in part payment for Windmills. If you have any thought of using a windmill this year now or at some, stating what you will need, whether Pumping or Geared, and if possible we will make you a liberal offer.

The Aermotor Co. proposes to distribute $100. CASH, IN PRIZES for the best essays written by the wife, son or daughter of a farmer or user of a windmill, answering the question, "WHY SHOULD I USE AN AERMOTOR?" For conditions of competition and amounts and numbers of prizes send for particulars to the Aermotor Co., Chicago, or to its branches, at San Francisco, Kansas City, Lincoln, Neb., Sioux City, Iowa, Minneapolis, Buffalo, or 43 Park Place, New York City. Mrs. George Sinclair, of Toledo, is at home with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Sam. Beck.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Star, of Indianapolis, are the guests of Grandpa Chamberlain.

Miss Lottie Zwilling came down from Corunna Saturday and spent the day with her friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee Stamets entertained a few friends to warm maple wax one evening last week.

Mrs. Dr Wood, of Chicago, is spending a few weeks with her sisters, Mrs. Henry Willis and Mrs. J. C. Boyer.

Gen. L. J. Blair received word Sunday of the death of his brother, H. H. Blair, who lived in Cleveland, Ohio.

Mrs. Martha Thomas, who has been for years a great sufferer from a tumor, died on Monday, March 12, 1894.

We are having genuine March weather, whose sharp, penetrating winds are more to be dreaded than the intense, steady, still cold weather of winter.

The three daughters of Samuel Beck, who have been visiting them for some days, returned to their homes in different directions, leaving here Monday.

Mrs. Libbie Brown, wife of George Brown, was taken ill last Thursday and died Friday evening, March 7, at eight o'clock She leaves a husband and two children, bright little girls, to miss her cheering presence and loving thought and care and to mourn her loss. It is not alone a terrible shock to these of her own household, but also to her husband's parents and sister, all of whom had learned to love her tenderly, and all seem equally prostrated by the blow. The deep sympathy felt by every one may be soothing later, but now the poor afflicted husband feels his life is by one fell stroke completely broken up, and there is no one on earth to turn, to but Him who wounds can heal. Mrs Brown twice said she was willing and ready to go Why should those who love her wish her back? The funeral services were held in the M. E. church Saturday afternoon at three o'clock, Rev. U S. A. Bridge, her pastor, conducting them. The house was completely filled. Mrs Brown had made many dear friends who appreciated and loved her for her kindness, her earnestness in fulfilling every duty and her many endearing qualities.

Mrs. Carrie Francis perpetrated a pleasant surprise last Thursday evening upon the members of the L M. C., who were to hold their regular session at her home at that time She especially notified each member to be present, and the exercises proceeded as usual until nearing the close, when some half dozen gentlemen presented themselves, inquiring if their wives were ready to go home? The hostess met them, replying in the negative, but inviting them in and seating them. At intervals others came, by ones and twos, until the husbands of most of the ladies present were there Of course, it dawned upon the members that Mrs. Francis had invited the husbands to come and not to say anything to their "better halves" in regard to it. They really kept the secret, although the gentlemen frankly admitted it was not easy. The president, Mrs. Waterman, the only one in the plot, soon adjourned the club meeting, and Mrs. Francis took charge, and speedily the busy hum of conversation and the bursts and ripples of laughter gave sufficient evidence of enjoyment. Puzzles, to test quick thought and memory, were produced; then charades. There was one very good one. Five or six gentlemen standing in a line were a he-row—hero. Another, a snow shovel was "The Pathfinder." Later, chocolate was served and a choice and appetizing repast was in accompaniment, to which the immediate and close attention given showed how thoroughly it was enjoyed. Mrs. North and Mr. Francis assisted Mrs Francis in this part of her duties. It was altogether an exceedingly pleasant evening and one to be remembered.

ST JOE.

J. E. Rose, of Auburn, was in town Saturday, attending J. P. court.

The west end of our burg is all excitement in regard to some stories that have been circulated to the detriment of some of our best citizens.

George Metcalf and wife, of Garrett, are here at the home of his mother, who has had a paralytic stroke and is in a dangerous condition.

Henry Maxwell is the custodian of a three-year-old horse that seems to be without an owner. Hank don't like the idea of keeping horses for 10 cents per day.

Quite a number of people in town are sick, among them, Grandma Simmons, Mrs. Metcalf, M. F. Body and James Bleeks. Among those who look sick are, Rich Culbertson, Sol. Barney, James Abels, Doc Bowman, M. E. Olds, Mahlon Baker, W. C. Patterson and O. H. Widney. We have not been able to find out the nature of their illness, except that of our old friends Jim and Doc., and they are sick to think that Galusha Grow of Pennsylvania, did not carry the election in Brazil and thus become president instead of a representative in congress.

The Concord township institute held in the high school room at St. Joe Saturday, was a grand success. Superintendent C. M Merica was in attendance, and of course where he is everything goes. There was a full attendance of teachers and the program was carried out to perfection. In the afternoon Prof. Sniff, of the Angola schools, gave one of his masterly talks to the patrons and teachers of St. Joe. In the evening the Professor lectured in the G. A. R. Hall to a crowded house. The lecture was well interspersed with spicy anecdotes, with which the Professor is well stocked, and the audience, composed of fun lovers, was full of applause, which at times was quite noisy.

Farley, of Iowa, who was not able to come. His son, Sherman Grambling, of Penn., and Wilson Gramling, of Chicago, came last Friday evening. The funeral was held at Barker's church Saturday, March 3, at 10 a. m., Rev. U. S. A. Bridge officiating.

CONCORD.

(LAST WEEK.)

Mrs. Lewis Howey has the grip.

Ida Gill is quite low with lung fever.

A son of John Fetters, aged 9, is a sufferer from heart trouble.

Grandma Moody is very sick. As she is past 88 years of age, her recovery is doubtful.

The meeting held by Rev Lineberry were closed Sunday evening on account of bad roads. They have been quite successful.

Miss Lida Wyatt visited her aunt, Mrs. Maurer, at Hopewell last Tuesdy, and reports her recent severe illness, but as gradually recovering.

Last Friday morning, while Solomon Shilling and his son John were chopping down a tree for picket bolts, a limb broke and fell, striking Sol on the head and arm and inflicting several ugly wounds.

Last Tuesday morning a block somehow caught on the saw at the hub mill and was thrown off with considerable violence, striking Frank Smith a terrible blow on the right temple. He was unconscious for several minutes.

DeKALB NOT BEHIND.

State Superintendent Vories is addressing the County Superintendents of the state as follows:

"No association or institute is thought to be complete, nor is it complete, without the popular lecture. Teachers need to draw culture and inspiration from every available source, and it is conceded that there is nothing more inspiring than the high grade lecture. My experience in the institute work leads me to urge superintendents * * to engage a popular lecture for the association and institute."

The above shows that again DeKalb has taken the lead in an important feat of our school work, as we have been having popular lecturers for the last ten years, having had among the number such talent as Dr. D. M. Fisk, Col. L. F. Copeland, W. M. R. French the crayon artist, Hon. Geo. R. Wendling, Frank Beard the noted wit and caricaturist, Dr. James Hedley, Col. Geo. W. Bain, John DeWitt Miller, Rev. A. A. Willits and the renowned orator, Rev. Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus.

In fact, the annual "Institute Lecture Lecture Course." in connection with the county teachers' institute, is an event in this county looked forward to by all lovers of education as one of the most pleasurable and intellectual events of the year Besides these lectures, we have the "Annual Institute Sermon" by some noted divine, elocutional and musical entertainments, educational and temperance lectures, etc., by first class talent.

An Easter Romance.

BY PAUL FLEMING.

CLAUDE REMINGTON sat in his comfortable studio and watched the sputtering embers in the open fireplace. His giant figure looked as if it had been thrown into the luxurious arm chair, so utterly regardless of grace was his attitude. His chin rested heavily on the closed knuckles of his left hand. His huge legs were crossed in an unceremonious fashion. His brow was clouded with heavy wrinkles that bespoke thoughts of an unquiet nature.

Claude was an artist, in fair, almost affluent, circumstances. He may be said to have been born with the proverbial silver spoon in his mouth, for his parents were wealthy and he was an only son, but, though the scion of a rich family, the young man had an inherent spirit of independence which urged him, after leaving college, to adopt some profession as a means of earning his own living. His natural talents leaned towards art, and after taking some preliminary lessons in drawing and painting, from a local teacher, he betook himself abroad and studied for several years in Paris, Vienna and Florence.

He was an apt scholar and soon made a name for himself in European art circles as an adept with the pencil and brush. Magazine publishers sought his work eagerly, and his paintings had a great demand and at high prices. So when Claude returned home to America in the summer of '92 his fame had already preceded him, and society in New York prepared to lionize, in becoming style, the young artist of whom the European critics had spoken so highly.

Mr. Remington would have been a very popular young man had he allowed himself to become so, but flattery and fawning were distasteful to him, and when he found that the fashionable sets in town were bent on making a social lion of him he immediately sought retirement, and could rarely be induced to leave his own sumptuous apartments up town. Even the most influential members of society failed to draw him from his seclusion. Politely, but firmly, he declined all invitations to dinners, receptions and garden parties, until the higher circles of society began to think themselves snubbed and concluded that the famous Mr. Remington must be something of a crank.

There were a chosen few of his intimate friends, however, who knew the cause of Claude's dislike for gaiety. Rumors had been wafted over the Atlantic which brought a whisper of romance in them—the romance of an artist's love for a beautiful American girl whom he had met in one of his Alpine tours. The story took a vague shape, in fact several shapes: one had it that Claude was already married to the fair unknown but for certain family reasons they would not live together for a year or so. Another reason was that the girl's parents were opposed to her alliance with Claude, but on what account was not stated. One thing, however, seemed certain, and that was the young artist was deeply in love, and his romantic disposition was such that he silently fretted over the absence of the object of his affections.

"I said Constance was in Nice. I was mistaken, she is here!

He certainly did not look a very gay young man as he half sat, half lounged there in the somber glow of the fire, moodily gazing into the dull fiery glare of the coals as if he were studying some abstract problem in which the fire grate was concerned.

Presently he arose and shook himself like a huge retriever after a plunge in the water. His tall, massively built figure was the very picture of an athlete, and denoted great physical strength, but a close study of his face discovered almost a feminine beauty in the sweet sadness of its expression and contour. The eyes and the lines of the mouth had a look of fixed resignation to the inevitable.

It was with a deep drawn sigh that he took from the mantel a long German pipe—his companion in many a sketching ramble in the south of Europe. He filled the meerschaum bowl mechanically with some choice Turkish tobacco and leisurely applied a match to the weed. Almost with affection he handled that pipe, and a more satisfied look crept into his eyes as he watched the blue smoke curl in circles from the bowl and ascend to the ceiling like the azure clouds that float over the far away Mediterannean.

For fully ten minutes Claude smoked on in silence, then he laid aside his pipe and turned to his easel, on which rested the half finished portrait of a young girl. It was the picture of a maiden of eighteen or twenty, dressed in white and with just a single rosebud at her throat. On her head was a simple straw hat, and in her uplifted right hand a bunch of wild grapes which she had evidently just plucked from a vine that drooped above her. Her dark eyes sparkled with fun and her lips were parted in a merry smile that seemed contagious as one looked upon it. The background was unfinished, as were also some details of the drapery, but even a novice in art matters would have pronounced the picture the work of a master hand.

While Claude toyed with his brush, looking lovingly on the canvas face to which his art was giving life and reality, there came a gentle knock at the studio door, and in response to the word "come," a little colored "boy-in-livery" entered noislessly, and handed the artist a card. Mr. Remington took the piece of pasteboard quietly, glanced at the name and said, "Show the gentleman in."

As the boy left the room the artist took a brown silk curtain from a side shelf and carefully drew it over the easel so as to effectually conceal the portrait. There was a slight tremor in his hand as he did so, and his face seemed to have flushed considerably. His brows, too, were deeper wrinkled, as if in anger.

One minute elapsed before the boy returned, ushering in a gentleman of middle age, whose dress and manner showed at once the unmistakable ease and grace of a traveled man of the world. He walked directly up to Claude and grasped his hand, though it seemed as if the artist were far from cordial in reciprocating the salutation. But the visitor did not notice, or did not seem to notice, any lack of hospitality on the part of the artist, and immediately commenced the conversation.

"Delighted to see you, my dear boy. Just came direct from the Riviera and have good news for you."

"Good news for me," repeated Claude in measured tones, "I wonder what good news anyone can bring me from the Riviera. Nevertheless, Col. Bland, I am pleased to see one who takes my thoughts back to the days when all news was good to me. When were you in Mentone?"

"Not for months, but I was in Nice just two weeks ago and saw somebody there who begged me to see you without delay, so I flew to London as fast as the express would carry me, caught the Paris at Southampton and here I am!"

Claude was evidently struggling with a powerful emotion, striving to conceal the effect of his visitor's words. One word of interrogation alone left his lips.

"Constance?"

"No, not Constance herself, but her mother."

"Her mother! why she sent me away!"

"Yes my boy, I know that, and I believe she meant to keep you away. She is a proud, haughty woman. All the Foster-Parkers were, and she is no exception. Everybody, even in the Paris colony, which is certainly the most exclusive set of Americans abroad, considered you a perfect match for Constance Blythe, but her mother had set her heart on that wealthy English baronet and so opposed your suit strenuously."

"Well, why did she wish you to see me?"

"I bear her personal assurance that her opposition to your marriage with Constance is withdrawn."

The greatest transformation ever seen in a human countenance was possibly right there in that Fifth avenue studio as the afternoon March sunlight streamed in upon those two figures. Claude's joy was inexpressible in words, he merely wrung Colonel Bland's hand in silence.

"Constance has not been well, you know," continued the Colonel, in a voice that tried to be cheery, but seemed to lack the power. "To speak plainly the separation from you preyed on her nervous system to such an extent that her strength gave way. At first Mrs. Blythe called it sentimentalism and tried to wean Constance from thoughts of her disappointment by providing extra gaieties, receptions, concerts and so forth, but it was to no purpose. At Christmas the poor girl had to take to her bed. Doctors prescribed for her in vain, until Sir William Jowitt, the fashionable English physician, learned the true particulars of her case, and frankly told Mrs. Blythe that the only sure way to save her daughter's life was to permit her to conduct her own matrimonial affairs. Constance is now at the Royale, and is somewhat better because I believe she knows the nature of my mission to New York."

Claude had listened with rapt attention, the working of the muscles in his face, and its constant changing color alone denoting the conflicting emotions struggling within him. Hope, joy, sorrow, fear, despair came and went in kaleidoscopic expression on his features. As the Colonel finished the artist asked, hurriedly—

"When does the next steamer sail?"

"The 'Paris,' on Saturday, is the first fast boat. Will you go back with me on that day?"

"Yes, I will go direct to Constance. You say she is in Nice?"

"They will stay there all summer I believe," replied the Colonel, "but now that you have decided about going tell me about yourself! Rumor said that when you left our party so abruptly in Mentone, you practically went to the devil, that is, to the gambling rooms of Monaco, which amounts to the same thing."

"Rumor was truthful," remarked Claude, nodding his head.

"And it also said that you lost heavily," resumed Col. Bland, fixing his keen eyes upon the young artist.

"I lost all I had," replied Claude, carelessly. "I could not lose any more, except by borrowing, and I would not do that for gambling purposes."

"Still," continued the Colonel, glancing approvingly around the palatial apartment, "you do not appear to be suffering from extreme poverty."

Claude laughed outright, for the first time during the interview.

"No," he said, in a voice full of confident satisfaction. "Fortunately my profession enables me to live well and also to keep a good account at my bank."

"You take many private commissions, I suppose—you were always clever at portraits," said Colonel Bland in an interested tone.

"Yes," replied Claude. lightly. "I have more requests for sittings than I can well attend to and the offers sometimes range as high as $3,000, but—"

"Have you some work there—may I see it?" interrupted the Colonel, indicating the covered easel by an inclination of his head.

Claude arose from his chair and walked over to the easel. Then he paused and faced the Colonel with a peculiar look in his face.

"This is not painted from life but from memory, Colonel," he said, sadly. "It is a picture which you and I once saw together, two years ago next Easter day."

With a deft move of his hand Claude Remington pulled aside the brown silk curtain and Colonel Bland stood spellbound before the portrait. The artist watched him while his eyes drank in every detail from the canvas. No word was spoken save a suppressed whisper of astonishment from the Colonel. That whisper was the name "Constance." His gaze was riveted upon the picture, and while he gazed he felt himself transported from the busy metropolis of the new world to a small French village in the old. Not simply his mind but his whole being, his entire senses seemed to be taken back to that Easter morning when, in the very shadow of the Pyrenees, he and Claude had sauntered out from the old farmhouse where they boarded, for a stroll before breakfast. The Blythes and several other New York families were staying at the Chateau Russe in the neighborhood, and in their morning walk the two friends had encountered Constance in just such an attitude as the artist had painted her. The Colonel almost fancied that he could hear the church bells of Ste Marie de la Croix in the distance, and smell the perfume of the wild flowers that grew in the beautiful meadows of the Landes.

For fully five minutes he stood with his eyes chained to the canvas, Claude meanwhile watching him with the keen delight of an artist who knows that his work has enraptured a critic.

Then the Colonel spoke deliberately.

"I said Constance was in Nice. I was mistaken—she is here!" and he pointed to the easel.

"Thank you, Colonel, for your graceful compliment," replied Claude.

"The heart has a better memory than the eye," continued the visitor, without noticing the artist's remark, "and for that reason I think that no one but yourself could possibly have painted that picture. There is not only consummate art but every evidence of heart in the work. Can you finish it in time to take it with us?"

"I will try. I have only worked on it occasionally, more for pastime than for any other purpose. It is nearly six months since I commenced it. You see, Colonel, when I got that cutting note of curt dismissal from Mrs. Blythe, shattering my hopes of ever making Constance my wife, I felt, as you said awhile ago, like going to the devil. I plunged wildly into dissipation, just like the headstrong fool I was, but a few months of that kind of thing convinced me that if I wished to save my health and reputation it would be wiser for me to drive away care and sorrow by hard work than by indulgence in gambling and other delusive excitements. So I went to London and started in doing a little work for the illustrated papers. The few portraits I painted there got me favorable notice, in fact the press was too flattering altogether. I would have stayed in London but for the fact that Constance was within two days' reach and I could not trust myself to obey Mrs. Blythe's injunction not to see her daughter again. So I came back home to find myself famous, and never was fame more distasteful to a mortal. Clubs and coteries wanted to dine and wine me. The fashionable set sent special invitations to receptions and dinners, society leaders almost pleadingly requested my presence at some of their functions. I tried it for a little while, but the calls upon my time became so persistent that I had to cut society, and, thank heaven! society has since cut me and left me alone to myself. To be perfectly candid with you, Colonel, I was almost denying myself to you, for I felt as if your conversation would naturally lead back to a subject which I had been striving to banish from my mind."

"That was why you had the picture covered?"

"Precisely. I was afraid the sight of it might remind you of her and make you speak of her."

"Well, my dear Claude, you see I came he e with that view, picture or no picture. I am stopping at the Savoy. Will you come up to dinner this evening and let us have an old time chat? We ought to have a deal of news to exchange after twelve months."

"I shall be pleased to join you, Colonel. At what hour do you dine?" asked Claude.

"Seven-thirty. Now I must hurry down town to Wall street to transact some business. Good day, Claude, I shall expect you this evening."

Remington saw his friend to the outer room and then returned to the easel, before which he stood for several minutes in deep silence. But there was an added brightness in his eye, and a warmer glow upon his cheek, and when, a little later, he commenced humming an old Italian ballad it was evident that the heart of the artist was more at ease than it was prior to the Colonel's visit.

Colonel Bland was a Baltimorean who resided three parts of the year in Europe. He was very wealthy and a widower without children. When Claude went abroad to study, the Colonel was one of the first Americans whom he met in Paris. Their acquaintance ripened into a warm friendship and the elder gentleman took a lively interest in young Remington's successes. A lover of art, though not himself an artist, he became an enthusiast in Claude's work, and accompanied him on many a rambling tour in search of the beautiful and picturesque bits of scenery that abound in France, Italy and Switzerland. For a year and a half they were constantly together and when Claude met his fate in Constance Blythe the Colonel was his young friend's confidant and did his best to bring about a match. But the pride of Mrs. Blythe, who came from an old Bostonian family, proved an unsurmountable barrier to a union, and the Colonel was bitterly disappointed himself at the failure of his friend. He counseled Claude to stay, in fact, and disregard Mrs. Blythe's orders, inasmuch as Constance was nearly of age, but in this case the younger man had the most sensible

And now his friend had followe him across the Atlantic for the e press purpose of taking him back his lady-love and never was a messe ger more happy in the fulfilment his mission. But still the thought Constance's poor condition of heal worried the Colonel considerabl though he strove to conceal his fea from Claude.

On Good Friday evening the Ame can liner "Paris" glided slowly in her dock at Southampton and two the first passengers to walk down t gang plank were Colonel Bland a Claude Remington. They took t night express for London at once a the next morning started for Paris Dover.

Scarcely resting in the French ca tal long enough to take a meal; th took train for the southeast a towards noon on Easter Sunday we near their journey's end. Loveli Claude's spirits rose as he gradua approached the place where Constan was. Everything was familiar to h in Nice. The very hackmen rec nized him and touched their hats spectfully. Many a pour boire had th received from the young artist duri his long sojourn in the fashionable sort.

On arrival at the Hotel Royale Colonel and his companion w straight to their rooms, which h been engaged by telegraph. Colo Bland then sent a messenger to M Blythe with a note to the effect t Remington was with him and awai the pleasure of an interview. A re was not long in coming and the bea of it was Sir William Jowitt the p sician in attendance on Constance.

The young lady, he said, was s ously ill, so much so that he wo have to deny Claude an interview til she had been prepared to unde the ordeal. They had extreme dou of her recovery—her nervous sys was completely shattered. Mrs. Bly was at her daughter's bedside, scarc ever left her, in fact, except while sick girl slept. As soon as Consta fell asleep she would be pleased to Claude and the Colonel in the rec tion room.

The physician was calm and po but his soft gray eyes were bent, w he was talking, upon the young art face. He had heard much of him seen nothing, and he had been so what curious to see the young gen man whose presence, his professi instincts told him, would be m more potent than all the medicine could prescribe for Constance. then he had to fear the effect of shock, even though of a joyous na tal as sudden sorrow in cases w the nerves are in a weak state. had not known whether the Co would find Claude or not, and did not like to even hint at his coming until they were sure he was there.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

In an elegantly furnished bedroom in another part of the hotel sat Mrs. Blythe by the bedside of her daughter. She was waiting for the girl to wake up from the few hours' slumber she had taken that afternoon. The mother was a strikingly handsome woman of about 45, tall and graceful in figure, and with an air of refinement in her features which was somewhat heightened by the hauteur of her expression. So habitual was this proud look on her face that even now, while bending over the sleeping form of her own child, the strongly marked characteristic was distinctly observable. The girl was unquestionably beautiful, but the ravages of a long sickness were plainly visible in her white and drawn face as she slept.

Mrs. Blythe had seen the Colonel and Claude, and a consultation, with the physician as adviser, had resulted in the determination to prepare Constance for the surprise of seeing her lover back at her side.

The picture which had been a work of loyal love on Claude's part, was moved into the invalid's room in a conspicuous position, with a curtain thrown loosely over it.

The society woman's feelings had fought between pride of caste on one side and love for her child on the other, and the latter had won the battle. Her firm resolve now was to endeavor to undo, as far as she could, the evil she had done. She never seemed to realize the enormity of her action until she was shown the portrait of Constance as she used to be. The contrast between the merry, pink-cheeked maiden of a year ago and the pale-faced invalid lying before her now was so great that it made her tremble for fear her ridiculous pride had killed her only child. A reaction set in and now, much as she had formerly opposed the union, she determined that it should take place, even if it were a death-bed wedding. Her daughter should have the wish of her heart before she died at least.

When the sick girl at last moved restlessly, and then opened her eyes with that tired and weary look peculiar to confirmed invalids, her mother stooped and kissed the pale forehead affectionately.

"You have had a nice, long sleep, dear," she said gently, "nearly four hours, and I think you look better for it. Had you pleasant dreams?"

"Dreaming of Claude, as usual, mother," replied the girl in a low voice. "You must not be angry with me, I cannot forget him either waking or sleeping. As for my looks, I have almost forgotten how I ever looked."

"If you will promise me to be calm and not get in the least excited, I will show you how you looked not long ago," said Mrs. Blythe in an affectionate tone.

Constance gazed on her wonderingly. Mrs. Blythe met the questioning look with a maternal smile.

"You must promise me," she said, as she pressed a fervent kiss upon Constance's lips, "otherwise I won't show you."

"All right, I promise willingly," replied the girl, with a puzzled expression.

Mrs. Blythe moved the ornamental easel close to the bedside and drew the curtain away.

An involuntary start, an exclamation of glad surprise, a slight flush of color in the cheek and then the invalid's face became riveted upon the picture. There was a few minutes of complete silence, which Constance broke by saying:

"Mamma, Claude painted that."

"How do you know, dear?"

"I know he did—he must have done; nobody else in the wide world could have done! Did he send it to you, mamma, tell me, did he?"

"Remember your promise, dear child, or I shall give you no information at all," answered the mother with a playful laugh. "Now, just keep perfectly quiet, and I'll tell you a little secret. I have sent for Mr. Remington to come back."

"Sent for him, mamma? How could you be guilty of such an indiscretion?"

"No indiscretion about it, my dear child. I sent him away from you and it was my place to recall him." Mrs. Blythe put her arm around her daughter's neck and kissed her. As she did so Constance felt the warm tears drop on her cheek and saw that her mother was crying.

"Oh you dear, sweet, kind mamma, how good of you to do that when you don't like Claude."

"I do like Claude, and I admit that I have made a foolish error. I thought pride was stronger than love, but I find that I am mistaken."

"When did you send for him? It is a long way to New York." Constance spoke eagerly,—questioningly.

"He is on his way here now, darling, and I want you to try and get strong again before he comes, won't you?"

"I am strong, mamma, quite strong, and your blessed words give me extra strength. I already feel much better."

"Would you feel well enough to see Claude if he should arrive tonight, dear?—remember, the doctor cautions you against the least excitement, and he would not let you see him unless you promised to be calm."

"But I am calm, mamma. It would not injure me. I feel it would give me strength if I could see Claude again."

"Then, Constance, prepare to have your wish gratified at once," said Mrs. Blythe softly, as her finger pressed the electric bell.

There came an old time sparkle in the eyes of the sick girl as she heard her mother's words, the cheeks flushed again, her bosom heaved perceptibly. Mrs. Blythe whispered a few words to the servant who answered the bell. Then she returned to her daughter's bedside and took the invalid's hand.

"Constance," she said, in a somewhat broken voice, "I must ask your forgiveness for the shortsighted cruelty I was guilty of when I sent your lover away. I have done what I could to repair the foolish act and have brought Claude back again to your side. May God grant that he is not too late."

A slight tap at the door and Sir William Jowitt entered quietly. A shade of disappointment passed over the face of Constance.

The physician walked forward and felt the pulse of the invalid.

"Your mother has told you who is here, I presume," he said seriously. "Now tell me, Miss Blythe, do you think you are able to bear an interview?"

"Oh, yes. Don't you see how calm I am, doctor? Why, I feel quite strong again, and could almost cry for joy."

"Yes, but you must not cry," said the doctor warningly. Then, as he took his leave, he said to himself, chuckling, "Just as I thought! medicines in her case would not be worth a—a—continental, as the Americans say."

As Claude entered the room and almost rushed to the bedside, Mrs. Blythe crossed to the window and looked out. The tears were falling from her face, but they were tears of joy, not sorrow. When she walked back to the lovers she took a hand of each and joined them, saying to Constance, "Today is the anniversary of our Saviour's resurrection. Let us hope that it may also be the day of your rising from sickness. It certainly is a fitting occasion, for to-day my own love has risen far beyond my former pride."

An Involuntary Thief.

A public park, a garden seat, an actor sat thereon,
His gay attire part product of the season lately gone.
For fifteen minutes there he rests, then rises to his feet,
And with a calm and studious face he seeks the crowded street.

But after him a horde of boys precipitately ran,
And shouted out "Stop thief! stop thief! there goes the guilty man!"
The actor wonderingly turned, as up the police came,
And without hesitation gave his right address and name.

Among the boys a tall, slim youth appeared to be the chief,
And he reiterated loud, "This fellow is a thief!"
"'Tis false!" the actor hotly cried. "This charge is base indeed.
In all my life I never yet committed thievish deed!

"I saw him steal," the urchin said, in making the complaint.
"Way over in the hollow there I watched him take some paint."
"You lie!" the actor wildly hissed, beside himself with rage.
"This is the greatest insult ever offered to the stage!"

"Here is the proof," the boy remarked, "before we let him budge,
You've heard the charge I made, and now let each one be the judge.
You can detect his guilt at once—he gives us all the chance.
Observe the paint that's sticking there on the seat of his light pants!"

GEORGE EDGAR.

Laura's Little Brother.

I have a young lady cousin whose company is much sought after by members of my own sex. I was a man after her own heart once, but I didn't get it. She discouraged me so much that I couldn't take heart at all. Several of my club acquaintances have been paying court to her since, but no one has yet succeeded in carrying off the prize.

From certain rumors that I hear I believe her little brother Eddie is one of the main causes of her failure to catch a suitable husband. It is sufficient to say that Eddie is a small boy and has a tongue. Also a facility for putting peculiar and unfortunate constructions on whatever he may hear or see.

When Mr. Golightly called the other evening and was shown into the parlor, Eddie sauntered shyly in before the visitor had time to seat himself in an imposing attitude. He looked wistfully at the caller for some moments and then said gravely, "Aint you goin to make it talk?" "Make what talk, my little man?" asked Mr. Golightly in friendly tones.

"Your suit, aint it going to shout?"

"I don't understand you, my dear," replied Mr. Golightly.

"Well now," said Eddie, scratching his head, and looking the unfortunate young man all over, "when the servant told Laura that you had called she said, "Oh he needn't call, his spring suit is loud enough to be heard all over the block!"

Mr. Bondstock, the bank cashier, does not call on Miss Laura since his last painful interview with Eddie in the presence of the latter's father.

"Say, mister," asked the boy playfully. "Isn't our Laura stuck on you?"

"I'm sure I—I d-don't know," stammered the embarrassed gentleman.

"Oh rats!" replied Eddie, disrespectfully, "why, I saw her stuck on you last night—she was on your knee for over five minutes!"

Worse, if anything, was the experience of Mr. Smartwit, whose second and last visit to Eddie's home was made memorable by that mischievous youngster. He broke in upon Laura and her companion—just as Mr. Smartwit was about to propose—with this probably true, but certainly malapropos sentence—

"Say, sis, ma wants to know how long that booby is going to keep you from supper!" JILKS.

The Intelligent Compositor.

I remember, I remember
Not so many years ago,
When I wrote in late December
A short poem on "The Snow."
"Fairy Flakes" I neatly termed it,
But I wished that I was dead,
When the printer smart affirmed it
"Funny fakes," to be, instead.

I remember, I remember,
When I wrote of "love serene"
In that very same December
In a sonnet to "My Queen,"
I remember I could splinter
One poor human form divine
If I only caught that printer—
For he set it up "live swine."

I remember when, as critic,
I, one most auspicious night,
Wrote some matter analytic
On the work of actor bright.
"Mastered Art" is how 'twas written Plainly in my copy, but
The compositor was smitten,
For he read it "mustard cut."

Once when writing advertising
I referred to "needed space,"
Never dreaming the surprising
Antics of the 'lower case,'
Fancy, though, my consternation
And the shock it caused to me,
When the words, in bold location,
Blossomed forth a "needed spree."

BRIGHT SAYINGS of Little Children.

"I don't like to go shopping in dry goods stores with my mamma," said a five-year-old boy. "Why not?" he was asked. "Oh, because she asks the salesmen to show her so many things she doesn't want," he promptly replied.

Said Johnnie Kingston's mother, "I want to buy one of those new kitchen ranges. They tell me they save half the coal." And her young hopeful, after considering a minute, asked, "Why don't you buy two of 'em, ma, and save it all?"

"Now Bobby," said the school teacher one day, "if it took ten men fifteen hours to hoe a large cornfield, how long would it take two men, say your father and uncle, to do the same work?"

"They'd never do it," replied Bobby promptly, "they'd be swapping fish stories all the time!"

That was a bright child who, on being asked what ice was, quickly replied, "Water, gone to sleep." And the grocer's little girl's definition of sand, "something papa mixes with sugar," was as ingenuous as it was unexpected.

"Shall I have to get married when I grow up?" asked little Flossie of her mother one day.

"Just as you please, my dear," answered her mother. "Most women do marry, however."

"Yes, I suppose so," continued the little girl musingly, "and I guess I'd better start right in and hustle for a husband now. They tell me Aunt Jane has been at it for 20 years and hasn't found one yet!" H. O'D.

A Queer Couple.

BY RICHARD BURKETT.

Nobody could ever understand what Johnnie Grout and Sallie Smithers saw in each other to make them so mutually infatuated. Both were the reverse of handsome in face and figure, and the only construction that could be put upon their attachment was that the ugliness of each acted as a bond of sympathy between them. True, every eye has a beauty of its own, but the optic that could detect anything lovely in Sallie's cross-eyed, pug-nosed, freckle-faced, carroty-headed, lop-sided person was not the kind of vision to be either envied or commended. Nor were Johnnie's beetling brows, receding forehead and sloping chin the class of features that usually enamor a female. His short, chunky, fore-shortened body would not have attracted one woman in a few millions, but Sallie, strange to say, happened to be eccentric enough in her tastes to imagine that Johnnie was a perfect Adonis.

And, to her lover's thinking, there wasn't a girl in all Lockton half so pretty and graceful as Sallie. They had, of course, a supreme monopoly of their opinions about each other's beauty, and neither of them had the slightest cause for jealous anxiety.

Neither of them were rich in this world's goods, but both were comfortably situated for people in their station of life. Their parents were dead and each was left alone in the world with a small farm and a little money. Johnnie was about twenty-five and Sallie just of age, so they had no one to please but themselves and were not long in making a match of it.

But the week before the appointed wedding day Sallie fell ill with the smallpox, and the doctors came and ordered her to the hospital at once. She was taken away in the town ambulance and Johnnie followed, weeping bitterly and begging to be allowed to accompany and nurse her. His request was finally granted so far as to permit him to occupy an adjoining room to the ward in which she lay, and in the presence of the female nurse Johnnie's uncouth figure would often be seen bending over the unconscious form of the delirious Sallie. She never spoke of anybody but her lover in her rambling, incoherent speech, and yet she never recognized him from the first day he was allowed to see her. Those were hard times for Johnnie, but he was told to hope for the best, and after a period of two weeks the doctors gave him encouragement by telling him that Sallie was out of danger and would not be marked at all by the ravages of the disease.

Bnt just as Sallie improved Johnnie began to grow ill, and it was soon evident that he had taken the disease from her. He was put to bed in a secluded ward and great care taken not to excite him in the least. When his delirium set in, his calls for Sallie were incessant, but owing to her weak condition she was not allowed to see him. She was sent home to convalesce and prayed night and day that her lover might be spared to her.

But though her prayer was granted, Johnnie left the hospital marked for life. His had been a more dangerous case, and he only came out of it with great ugly pits all over his head and face. Still, that did not make any serious difference to Sallie. She had not loved him for his good looks in the first place, so the loss of a little more physical beauty was not a crying matter. She was not really well herself. The malady had left her in a very weak condition, but she was strong enough to take Johnnie by the arm and escort him around the little town whenever the wants of either necessitated any shopping. The marriage was postponed for several weeks and now they contemplated an Easter wedding. About the queerest looking pair of lovers in the whole state of Pennsylvania was Johnnie Grout and Sallie Smithers.

But Johnnie seemed to feel, away down in his sensitive heart, that the accident which had marred his features was naturally one that would, or should, disqualify him in the sight of his beloved. He never thought of how cruel Nature had originally been to him, he never considered that it was through his devotion to Sallie he had caught the disease now disfiguring him. He brooded over the thought that he was no longer presentable to her view, and all the loving care she could lavish upon him failed to have the effect of convincing him that she still loved him as formerly. He attributed her present actions to resignation rather than desire, and a morbid feeling of sullen disappointment crept into his nature and made him irritable and peevish.

Sallie could not understand the change in his disposition. Had she known that he regarded her in the light of a martyr, willing to sacrifice her happiness for his sake, she could easily have undeceived him. But Johnnie was morose and silent. He could not bear her to talk to him even. He resented her expressions of affection, because, without any reason beyond his own supersensitiveness, he imagined them to be simulated.

She did not like his little petulant ways, which were entirely different from his former manner, and gradually there grew a coldness and reserve between them which finally resulted in a severance of the engagement. She told him flatly that she could never live with him on account of his temper.

There was a considerable sensation in the little town when it became known that the marriage was off. So many people had commented upon the engagement and also upon the devotion shown by the odd couple in their sickness that such a thing as the breaking of the engagement was considered well-nigh impossible. But the news spread the day after the quarrel between the lovers, and many were the questions passed around as to the origin of the trouble. Neither of them could be seen, however. Both remained in doors, apparently with the object of avoiding the gossips.

Three days passed and nobody saw anything of Johnnie. Even his own farm hands who lived on the premises did not notice him around the house. On the fourth day one of them went up to his master's room to consult him about some important matter and found Johnnie seated in his arm chair quite dead and cold. Beside him on the floor was a 32 calibre revolver, the weapon with which he had killed himself.

The police were communicated with and the news of the tragedy spread like wildfire. A mutual friend hesitatingly went to Sallie's farm with the bad tidings. Her knock on the door received no response, so she tried the door, which was unlocked, and walked through the hall to Sallie's back parlor. Miss Smithers was laid full length on the floor, quite dead. A vial of poison was in her left hand.

So ended the romance of a "Queer Couple."

A Most Unusual Occurrence.

She was an amateurish wife
With duties great before her,
And just three months of married life
Had happily passed o'er her.
In all important household arts
And small domestic duties,
She strove to shine in many parts
Like all young married beauties.

She knew the lot of most young wives—
No matter how good-looking,
And how their husbands marred their lives
By sneers about their cooking.
She'd heard and read of many men—
The heads of modern houses,
Who gave their "mothers" now and then
As "cooking guides" for spouses.

Perhaps she had expected this
In her ambitious buddings,
And guessed he'd think her quite amiss
In making pies and puddings.
No doubt she thought the bread she'd bake
Would surely be berated,
And that he'd never eat her cake
She quite anticipated.

So when to keeping house they came
In some suburb or other,
She feared her cooking would proclaim
The knowledge of his mother
Contrasted with her ignorance,—
His sneer she greatly dreaded,
And almost wished that, by some chance,
To him she was not wedded.

Her trial came; she made a lot
Of pastry for the dinner,
Her husband praised it on the spot—
Ate like a greedy sinner,
And said, "My dear, your pastry far
Excels that made by mother,
Indeed your pies and puddings are Not equalled by another!"

Here I suppose the reader will Expect the young wife kissed him,
And to her proof of pastry skill
Once more wished to assist him,
But truth requires that no such scene
Should here be gilbly painted,
The fact is that she gave a scream
And straightaway she fainted! G. S. J.

The Collector.

The subject of this sketch is not the man who comes around on or about the first of every month wearing a check suit and a bright smile that seems to fade perceptibly when you tell him to "call again in a week," or "let it lay over till next month." It is not the rent or tax collector I have in view, but that worst of all cranks, a collector of old stamps, coins, bric-a-brac and other relics of antiquity.

Perhaps you know one or more of them; perhaps you have met the man to whom a battered old copper penny of George the First's reign is a mine of wealth compared to a brand new ten dollar bill; maybe you know the fellow who cherishes a cancelled postage stamp from the Phillipine Islands like an old maid does her yellow pug dog, or a young mother her first infant. And possibly you are also acquainted with the long haired and mildewed enthusiast who visits auction sales of second-hand rubbish and bids fabulous prices for featureless and limbless statuary; who fondles with affectionate reverence a wig that was supposed to belong to Cromwell's first cousin, or worships the alleged toenail of some departed saint who died of La Grippe in the tail end of the third century.

These men are frequently walking museums. They carry pocket books containing several hundred obsolete stamps from all parts of the world, for which no sane man would knowingly give up a nickel. They would sooner lose an entire year's cash receipts than part with their collection. They have also some antiquated coin or other which cost them $50, but which would not be accepted anywhere as collateral for a hair cut or a bowl of pea soup. Then, if the crank is of a pious turn of mind, or rather, of a superstitious nature, he is pretty sure to have surrounded himself with "relics," such as gruesome looking bones, pieces of skin or fragments of "the true cross." There wasn't wood enough grown in the entire Holy Land to supply the pieces of the true cross that have found their way, in recent years, all over the world, and if the alleged toenails of saints are all authentic those sanctified people must have been veritable centipedes. It is said that a Minneapolis gentleman started in the lumber business solely for the purpose of supplying splinters from the true cross and he is reported to be worth a fortune at the present day.

Collecting coins is a very sensible and laudable occupation, provided current specie is adhered to, and I respectfully submit that there is more solid satisfaction to be gleaned from the possession of a double eagle than from owning a pot-full of mouldy European coppers that wouldn't buy a mint julep or a pack of cigarettes in any city in the United States. At the same time it is just as well that cranks who are fond of the antiquated money exist, as it gives us poor mortals a chance to enjoy the current coin of the realm without exciting the envy of these collectors.

The love of antiquity observable in these collectors seems to come to a sudden stop when they select a wife or sweetheart. A statue a thousand years old they would venerate, but a woman over thirty-five they would hardly respect for sweethearting purposes.

The age of an engraving or oil painting, if measured by centuries, would throw one of these cranks into rapture, but he has a strange prejudice in favor of youth when it comes to selecting a life partner.

Well, we don't blame him, as we happen to be similarly afflicted ourselves, but we cannot help thinking that much of his affection for ancient coins, obsolete stamps and prehistoric relics is sadly misplaced. We cannot see how the hoarding of these reminiscences of by-gone ages, at great cost of money and time, can afford one-tenth of the pleasure that is to be found in the jingle of a few U. S. gold pieces or the rustle of some crisp American currency. J. S. G.

Hints for the Home.

Keep flowers fresh by putting a pinch of soda in the water.

Boil the clothes-line and it will not "kink," as a new rope is apt to do.

Keep a small box filled with lime in your pantry and cellar; it will keep the air dry and pure.

Soda is the best thing for cleaning tinware; apply with a damp cloth and rub well, then wipe dry.

Prick potatoes when baking so that the air can escape. This will prevent their bursting in the oven.

For sore throat, beat the white of an egg stiff with all the sugar it will hold and the juice of one lemon.

When baking cakes set a dish of water in the oven with them and they will not be in any danger from scorching.

Grease spots that have burnt and become hard on the stove may be removed by a few drops of kerosene oil on the cloth before rubbing them.

To clean a stove, zinc or zinc-lined bathtub, mix ammonia and whiting to a smooth paste; apply it to the zinc and let it dry; then rub off until no dust remains.

A teaspoonful of alum will make clear four gallons of muddy water. Boiling the water is necessary to remove disease germs when a farm pump or a town reservoir has a bad name.

Vinegar bottles may be cleaned with crushed egg shells in a little water.

Crude oil, according to a painter, is excellent to wipe wood-work and furniture with. Wipe off with a clean cloth.

When your face and ears burn so terribly bathe them in very hot water, as hot as you can bear. This will be more apt to cool them than any cold application.

For an aching tooth, saturate a piece of cotton with ammonia and lay it on the tooth; or try oil of sassafras, applying it frequently.

To freshen black kid gloves, mix a teaspoonful of salad oil with a few drops of black ink; apply with a feather and dry in the sun.

FOR THE HAIR.—To prevent the hair from falling out or turning gray, take a teacupful of dried sage and boil it in a quart of soft water for twenty minutes; strain it off and add a piece of borax the size of an English walnut; pulverize the borax. Put the sage tea, when cool, into a quart bottle; add the borax; shake well together and keep in a cool place. Brush the hair thoroughly and rub the wash well on the head with the hand. Then, after a good hard rubbing, brush the hair well before the fire so it will become dry.

HOW WE THINK AND ACT.

It is a common thing to hear people talk about what they think, of the subjects they understand, and how they reasoned this way and that way, in certain matters. But it is a question if one in a thousand people has ever stopped to consider how they think, and by what occult processes in the brain the reasoning faculty, or intelligence, performs its duties? Nevertheless it is probably the most interesting study of any that pertains to human anatomy. The material motions of the body are understood, to a limited extent, but the actions of the mind are rarely, if ever, thought of, even by professional phrenologists.

It might therefore be considered of interest to the general reader to take up this subject and explain, as lucidly as our present facilities will permit, the formation of the brain and the performance of its various functions. It is really as necessary that a person should know how his head is constructed, as that he should understand the formation and mission of any other part of the body—more so, in fact, because in the head are situated not only the seat of life, but also the governing or controlling powers which influence every nerve, muscle and fibre of the human frame.

Of all the machines the world has ever seen, the most elaborate, complicated and intricate could not compare with the machinery of the human system.

It is not given to man to devise any structure more complex, more minute in its particles, more varied in its accomplishments than his own mortal body. The tiniest and most delicate watch that the skilled watchmaker can turn out is rough and uncouth work compared with the wonderful mechanism of the human brain, for instance.

It will well repay the reader to study in connection with this article the accompanying semi-phrenological chart, in which he will notice that the human head is carefully mapped out, with the various senses and organs properly indicated in their respective locations. It will be seen at a glance that every part of the body is directly controlled by the brain. The limbs and various organs are governed by it. Every motion of every muscle emanates from headquarters in the brain. The seat of intellect, that is, the understanding or thinking and reasoning part of man, is located across the front part of the brain. The other senses, such as sight, hearing, taste, touch and smell, occupy positions in the rear of the intellect, as do also the mainsprings of motion. All these are in direct communication and sympathy with each other. They are in harmonious accord and assist one another in the performance of their respective functions.

For instance, when in conversation with a person, it is not merely the tongue or organ of speech that is employed. The intellect or understanding is engaged, the sense of hearing is concentrated upon what your companion may be saying, the eyes are usually fixed upon him, and his on you, you move your arms, hands or facial muscles by way of gesture or expression, and all these acts are done at one and the same time, though prompted by different senses under one government.

First of all, external impressions are telegraphed, as it were, through the mediums of the ear or eye to the seat of intellect, and orders are immediately dispatched from there, by means of the nerve centres, to every organ whose co-operation is required.

For example, as you read these lines, just move the toes of your right or left foot. The movement you find will be simultaneous with your thinking about it. No sooner does the brain express its wish to have that motion made than the desire is telegraphed to the particular organ and the motion is apparently spontaneous with the command. It is the same with any other organ or muscle. The will power in the brain no sooner makes its request for motion than the behest is obeyed.

Rapid as lightning is, quick as are the flashes of electricity, neither can treat the nerves in the prompt transmission of thought or feeling.

In the brain is the seat of life, in the brain is the mainspring of all the nerve forces. It has been well described as a storage battery or power house, which supplies every nerve and fibre of the body with vitality or electricity to perform their functions. The brain is the governor or general of the whole body, and it has supreme authority over every part of it. It directly controls the heart, although the reverse has long been believed to be the case. It governs every bone and muscle in the system, not one of which could move without its sanction, and every part of the body is subject to its will.

This being the case, it cannot fail to be interesting to know something of the construction and mission of this remarkable controller of so many marvelous organs. By the aid of accompanying diagrams we are able to show how the brain directs and supervises the rest of the human body.

The actual seat of life, the point from which the vitality of our whole system emanates, is situated in the upper part of the spinal cord, at the base of the brain. (See Fig.) It will be seen also that from that point begins the spinal cord, which runs downward through the body and is properly speaking, the main or "grand trunk" line of the whole nervous system. From it diverge the different nerves that supply the heart, stomach, liver, kidneys, bowels, etc., with their vital forces. These nerves are in the form of delicate white strings or filaments, and are to the organs of the body exactly what telegraph lines are between different cities—a means of prompt communication.

No matter what muscle or organ of the body becomes in any way affected the news is promptly transmitted to the brain and other organs are liable to be affected through sympathy.

This is well exemplified and perhaps more lucidly explained in the cut showing the relation of the eye to the sense of hearing and the organ of speech on another part of this page. It must be generally conceded that the clearer one understands his mechanism the better will he or she be able to know what is the matter with them when they are sick. As it is, people often have symptoms of serious diseases, which they treat lightly, if at all, because they do not comprehend fully the importance of these disease indications, and, as they do not realize the danger, they neglect the trouble until it is often too late. With a better knowledge of their own construction and susceptibility to diseases they would take far more precautions in the early stage of their trouble and thus prevent its dangerous increase.

Thus, an irritation of the optic nerve or organ of sight may influence the rest of the nerves in a greater or lesser degree, but unless this truth is well understood, ordinary doctors would be more likely to treat the visible effect rather than the unseen cause, and might endeavor to cure a result instead of searching out the origin of the trouble and remedying that.

These remarks may convey a popular idea of how extremely difficult it is to successfully treat nervous diseases unless one is thoroughly well grounded in the construction of the nervous system, and has had a practical experience in the causes of disease and also their cure. On this subject "a little knowledge is truly a dangerous thing," particularly for the patient, and failure to cure is a confession of ignorance on the part of the physician having the case in charge.

But if the masses of the people can only be induced to know more about themselves; if they can be persuaded to desire a little learning on the subject of the brain and its vast importance, not only as the region of thought and understanding, but as the direct controller of every muscle and function of the body, a great step would be taken towards rendering harmless many diseases that are now a constant menace to the general health, but whose origin is too little understood.

THE DEETERS MURDER TRIAL.

Thursday of last week the hearing of witnesses for the state went on. They generally believed Deeters to be sane. Some of the testimony we clip in full from the Toledo Bee, to give an idea of how things are running:

Arthur Leiter was examined by Mr. Baxter. Witness stated that he resided in Butler, Indiana. Witness was asked if he had not heard it rumored that Deeters was not in his right mind, and stated that he had heard it said that defendant was a little "off."

John Fridenberg was the next witness called. He stated that he had known defendant for three years. Witness was asked whether he considered defendant of sound mind, upon the facts as he had related them to the jury, and he said he did.

Adam Richie was examined, and stated that he was intimately acquainted with the defendant about 14 years ago; that some time during the month of September, 1893, he was in the city of Auburn, and while there called at the jail to see defendant; that when he approached Deeters he (defendant) did not recognize him; that he made himself known, and expressed himself as being sorry to find defendant there under such circumstances; that the defendant replied that he was also sorry, but that his temper "got the best" of him, and he killed those people.

Daniel D. Diehl was examined as to some business transactions he had with the defendant during the summer of 1893. During the examination of Mr. Diehl, who was deputy assessor of Wilmington township, many questions were asked touching their acquaintanee and business relations.

Finally witness testified that on the night of the tragedy, while defendant was having his preliminary examination in the justice's office he (witness) had talked with the defendant about the tragedy, and that defendant had told him that he had shot to kill, and was only sorry that he had not shot several others.

At this point defendant began muttering and whispered to Deputy Sheriff Carson that all Diehl was testifying to was a d—n lie, and there was not a word of truth in it.

The sheriff instructed him to keep quiet, and finally succeeded in getting him silenced.

But as the witness proceeded with the statement the prisoner could no longer repress his hitherto smothered feelings, and broke out with the exclamation: "You are lying about that and you know it; if you have anything against me, tell the truth."

"I never turned those batteries on your daughter. Blame the man who done it—not me. You are lying about me and Andy Baxter is at the bottom of it. If you want to hang me, hang me, but tell the truth about it. I have just as good a right to tell the truth as you have to tell lies."

Repeated efforts were made to silence the prisoner, but he continued in a strange husky voice until it became necessary for Judge Powers to adjourn court, it being near the dinner hour, and even when the jury had departed and the sheriff started with the prisoner to jail he muttered words of disapproval of witness' conduct.

Justice McNabb, before whom Deeters was first taken on the evening of the shooting, had testified that he did not say to anyone that "Deeters is as sane as any of us," but later on several witnesses swore that he did say that.

Adam Fridenberg testified he had known Sam 15 years. I have been township assessor and taught school in his district. Saw him on the day of the tragedy. He was standing in the road and I was about 15 rods east of his mother's house. He was talking to Mr. Haines. We went up to Bachtel's and Sam went to his mother's house and sat down in the front door. After a few minutes Haines and I went from Bachtel's over to Mrs. Deeter's house, and Haines asked him about the burning of the barn. He said he had stuck some matches into it; that they didn't want him to get any property, and he didn't propose to let them have any. Haines asked him why he shot Mr. Bachtel and the others, and he said that Laura and Bachtel had been poking their noses into his business, that Yates had been trying to get his money, and that he shot to kill them. Haines and Sam did the talking, and I listened to what was said. After a few minutes Sam consented to go to Butler with us; he put on a coat and accompanied us in a buggy. On the way we met Mr. Smurr who looked quite sharp at Sam, and Sam said, "Look, you old fool, if that will do you any good." On the way to Butler Mr. Haines suggested to Sam that he would need a lawyer, and Sam said he supposed it would do no good—that they would do what they pleased with him anyway. The different attorneys in Butler were named and suggested to him, but none of them were employed by or for him. At the examination before 'Squire McNabb, he was charged with assault upon Wm. Yates, with intent to kill. * * * From all I have seen during my acquaintance with him, I think he was perfectly sane on the 31st of August last, and all the time before that, so far as I know.

G. H. McNabb sworn. Is a constable. He gave about the same as others. Spoke of starting to Auburn with Sam in charge. The commitment was placed in my hands, and I put handcuffs on him. He said it was not necessary but I wanted to be on the safe side, so I put them on. We started for Waterloo in a two-seated buggy, Sam and I being in the rear seat. As we passed his new house, I remarked that he probably wouldn't have any use for it right away, and he said, "No, I suppose it has gone to h—l along with everything else." At Waterloo we met the sheriff, and I turned Sam over to him. From all I have seen and known of Deeters, including what I saw and heard on the 31st of August last, I think he was of sound mind at that time.

Adam Richie testified: On the 7th of Sept. last, when I was on my way back from the Soldiers' Encampment at Indianapolis, I stopped in Auburn and visited Sam at the jail. I asked him if remembered me, and after looking at me a moment he said, "You are Andrew Haines." I told him "no, I am the man who used to live across the road from your mother's," and he said, "Oh! yes, your name is Richie." Pretty soon I remarked that I never expected to see him in such a fix, and that I was sorry to see him there, and he replied, "I'm sorry to be here, too, but a man's temper will get away with him sometimes, and he will do things he hadn't ought to."

Daniel B. Diehl. He lived in and near Butler 50 years. Have been deputy assessor in Wilmington township five years. Know Sam Deeters. Saw him last May at his new house. He was mixing mortar, tending masons who were building wall. I told him I was there to take his assessment, and we sat down on a stone pile and proceeded to business. He stated the amount of money he had in Davis' bank—the exact amount I can't remember. After stating it he said, "Hold on, a part of that money is for wool that I have been assessed for when it was on the sheep," so we deducted a part for wool. His sheep he said were good ones—no scalawags—and they were assessed at the price of first-class sheep. As I was about leaving he asked further about assessment on wool and money. I showed him the schedule and explained it, and he said he fully understood it. Have seen him frequently during several years past, and think I've assessed him two or three times. Saw him on the 31st of August last, in Butler. A balloon ascension had drawn quite a crowd there that day. Saw him in a buggy with Haines and Freidenberg, and later in McNabb's office. I talked with him about his crops, and others engaged in conversation about the shooting. Sam said he intended to do just what he had done, but that he didn't get all of them. He didn't say who they were that he didn't get.

C. J. Coats, deputy-prosecutor, sworn. Assisted at Sam's trial before Justice McNabb, Aug. 31. Deeters was under arrest for shooting Yates with intent to kill. Witness had examined defendant that evening, but not under oath. John Freidenberg was also examined. Witness read the affidavit and asked Deeters to spell his name, which he did. He asked defendant to make a statement with reference to the tragedy, and told him he need not do so unless he was willing to volunteer such statement, as what he said might be used against him. Witness had asked defendant if he had shot Wm. Yates as charged, and he said he did; said he had shot to kill; that Yates had tried to rob him; asked about the shooting of Mrs. Lowe and Mr. Bachtel, defendant said they had meddled in his business. I said, "They say, Sam, that you beat your mother, and tried to burn her in the barn." He said he didn't hurt her much, she wasn't burned and didn't get more than she deserved.

Coats also stated that just after the examination of Deeters, he talked with Justice McNabb, who said, in the presence of myself, Henry Crooks and Daniel B. Diel, "Deeters is no more crazy than I am."

This will likely end all the testimony we shall give, as the selections we have made cover about every point of interest. The trial will probably conclude this week, and we hope next week to give the result. It has been a hard fought battle. The attorneys on both sides are able men, and have worked night and day for success. No one can foresee the the exact outcome, but our own opinion is that Deeters will get a long term in prison. We do not believe he will hang.

Obituary.

Ephraim Berry, son of David and Catherine Berry, was born in Champaign county, Ohio, March 19, 1823.

His early life was spent in his native county, where he wooed and won his bride, Miss Mary J. Jenkins, to whom he was united im marriage Jan. 1, 1845, and with whom he has traveled the paths of a quiet. happy life, till separated by the hand of death, after a brief illness, March 14, 1894.

Mr. Berry was one of the pioneers of Auburn, coming to this county in October, 1848, and working for two years at his trade of mill building in Butler township. The secceeding two years he worked in different parts of the state. In the spring of 1852 he permanently located in Auburn, building on the property now owned and occupied by R. W. Cobb. For some five years he worked at mill building and carpenter work.

Mr. Berry was a natural mechanic of the practical kind. In 1857 he built an engine and lathe, and for several years was engaged in repairing machinery, turning, etc. After this he built another engine and a machine for making mouldings, to which he soon added a planing mill, carrying on the business successfully till 1875 when he sold out and retired from active business.

Many pieces of fine work done by Mr. Berry remain as evidences of his skill and inventive genius. Among them a small engine and several automatic mucical instruments..

For several years he was a faithful member of DeKalb Lodge No. 214, F. & A. M., whose lodge room has several memorials of his skill as an "operative craftsman." Some years since, on account of his age and infirmities he asked for and received a Dimit, thus severing his relations with the fraternity.

Some years since he disposed of his town residence, removing to the outskirts of Auburn, where, in the care of a few acres of ground, the many fine pieces of work done in his shop and the companionship of his wife and friends, he passed the closing years of his life

Strictly honest and upright, he passed away respected and honored by all who knew him—at the age of 70 years, 11 months and 25 days.

The funeral services were held at his late home on Friday, March 16, at 2 p. m., conducted by J. N. Wilson. His remains were laid to rest in Woodlawn cemetery.

HISTORY OF A WEEK.

PEOPLE, PLACES, AND THINGS OF THE WORLD.

A Counterfeiter's Mint Which Has Coined Half a Million Silver Dollars—Bank President Houghey May Plead Guilty—American War Ships No Longer Needed at Rio.

Floods in the South.

A special from Memphis, Tenn., says: The heaviest fall of rain on record in this section occurred during the past thirty-six hours, the local office of the weather bureau recording nearly seven inches. The whole country for miles around is flooded, the rivers are on the rampage, and enormous damage is reported in every direction. The rains and floods have weakened the levees, and grave apprehensions are felt for the safety of the planters in the valley. The Mississippi River has not passed the danger line at Memphis, but it is feared the levees cannot be repaired and strengthened in time to resist the flood coming down from the upper rivers.

At Forest City, Ark., the sewers burst and flooded the town during the storm, doing great damage.

At Madison, Ark., the White River has reached the flood stage and is still rising at the rate of one foot an hour.

A Dollar Foundry.

Omaha special: Secret service agents of the Treasury Department have unearthed a private mint near here, which has turned out $500,000 of good money in silver dollars. It is impossible to detect the counterfeit, because the same amount of silver and alloy have been put into it. The profit to the gang has been 51 cents on every dollar coined. The business houses and banks of this city, South Omaha, Council Bluffs, and other cities have a big stock of these privately minted dollars in their possession. None of the gang have been caught yet, but the government officers are on the track of them. The clew was first discovered when the Secret Service officers were running down the gang which turned out spurious half dollars in this city.

Trouble Not Ended at Cripple Creek.

Cripple Creek (Col.) special: Gen. Brooks and staff have left for Altman to personally visit the disaffected district. The feeling at Altman is decidedly antagonistic and all mines are under guard and it is said that the Victor mine will never be allowed to start up without trouble. There is a general feeling in Cripple Creek that the trouble is not ended. A special committee is now en route to Denver to protest to Governor Waite against the removal of the troops. This was the result of the meeting of business men held at the Palace Hotel. The report that the Governor has ordered the removal of the troops has caused great indignation.

Ordered from Rio.

Secretary of the Navy Herbert has ordered all the American warships away from Rio. The New York will go to St. Lucia, West Indias, there to await further instructions by cable from the Navy Department. The Charleston will go to Montevideo to join the Newark. It does not appear that there remains any further necessity for keeping an American man of war there, as the insurrection has been put down and a longer stay of the vessels would be injudicious.

Killed by the Cars.

Mr. A. J. Pennington of Broughton, Ohio, was killed between Scott, Ohio, and Dague, Ohio, by a Cincinnati, Jackson and Mackinaw train. He went there to make the last payment on his property and the supposition is he had a little whisky and it made him sleepy and he sat down on the end of the ties and fell over, so the train hit him in the head. He was an old soldier and esteemed as a citizen.

Discovered a Bomb.

A dispatch from Lucca, Italy, says that while a gentleman was leaving the Panters Theater he noticed a box with a lighted fuse attached to it in a recess of the corridor. The gentleman promptly extinguished the fuse. Six persons have been arrested on suspicion of having been concerned in the alleged attempt to cause an explosion.

Killed by Lightning.

While the family of John Johnson, about four miles from Lawrenceville, Ga., were gathered together at supper, a storm came up and the lightning struck the house and instantly killed Mr. Johnson's wife and his 6-year-old son, also knocking Mr. Johnson senseless for more than an hour.

May Plead Guilty.

The attorneys of Theodore P. Houghey, President of the defunct Indianapolis National Bank, are considering the advisability of his pleading guilty. If it can be so arranged that he shall receive judicial leniency, this will probably be done.

Big Knitting Mills Resume.

After a shut-down of several months the Pioneer Knitting Mill and the Lee Manufacturing Company's Knitting Mill, at Amsterdam, N. Y., have resumed.

New Pension Agent Goes In.

The Indiana Pension Agency has changed hands, Col. Nicholas Ensley giving place to Martin Van Buren Spencer of Fort Wayne.

Child Burned to Death.

Pearl, the 6-year-old daughter of George Oller of Delaware, Ohio, visiting the country home of Mrs. Michael Steitz; a wealthy widow, was burned to death in a field where Charles Steitz, an uncle, was burning hay.

Big Fire at Brooklyn.

At Brooklyn, N. Y., the tinware manufactory of Ilsley & Co., has been destroyed by fire, causing a loss of $200,000.

Saved by Rain.

At 8 o'clock Saturday night fire broke out in Lienkauf & Strass' wholesale dry goods building, No's. 13 and 15 Water street, Mobile, Ala., and spread rapidly to S. Lahn & Co., cigar manufacturers, next door north, and then burned through to St. Francis street and destroyed the building and contents of the Mobile Organ Company and the S. D. Ridgood books and stationery house. The wind blew a gale from the southeast, and at one time the fire spread so fast that fear was entertained that a general conflagration was pending. The Battle House is just west of the locality of the fire, and in the same square and every body packed up and moved out. The gale was followed by an immense fall of rain, which greatly aided the firemen in overcoming the flames. The loss is put at $200,000, perhaps insurance nearly that amount.

MAY END IN A FIGHT.

Troops Called to Cripple Creek.

A special from Cripple Creek, Col., says: Sheriff Bowers has called on Gov. Waite for troops to assist his deputies in maintaining peace at Altman, where the miners are striking for an eight-hour day and the same wages as were formerly paid for nine hours. The miners are defiant and threaten to resist the troops on their arrival. A pitched battle is possible when the opposing sides meet.

When the six deputies who had been disarmed and driven away from the Victor mine at Altman reached here, they reported that at least 300 armed men would resist any attempt to arrest the men who had captured them. Sheriff Bowers, after consultation with an attorney immediately called out troops of Colorado Springs under authority given him by law. He also sent an order to Governor Waite to have the entire State militia called out. He said it was useless to try and cope with such a large force without military aid. In respone to this urgent demand the first regiment of Denver, with the signal corps and the Chaffe Light Infantry, and Company C, Second Regiment of Pueblo, were ordered to proceed to Cripple Creek under command of Adjutant-General Tarsney. The present terminus of the railroad is at Midland, and from there to Cripple Creek, nine miles, it will be necessary for the troops to march.

The Sheriff also telegraphed to Under Sheriff Brisbin at Colorado Springs to secure all the deputies possible there and send them to camp, all heavily armed with repeating rifles. In addition to this force at least 150 had been sworn in previously by the Sheriff in the different portions of the camp. The Sheriff is arming and equipping men to supplement the troops. Every gun, pistol, and weapon available in the town is ready for use if necessary.

SHOT AT A SHIP.

A Portuguese Vessel Fired Upon at Rio.

Rio de Janeiro special: Admiral Da Gama and his eight officers are still on the Portuguese corvette Mindello, to which they were transferred from the French cruiser Magon. The government applied to the Portuguese minister for the surrender of the insurgent admiral and his staff. The minister declined to give Da Gama up, and the cabinet then sent a dispatch to Lisbon, repeating the application which the Minister had rejected. Admiral Da Gama was described in this dispatch as a military criminal and defaulter, having nothing in common with the ordinary political refugee. The Lisbon Governor has not yet returned an answer.

The Portuguese merchant steamer Cidade Do Porto was fired on by the forts as she was leaving the harbor the other night. She was compelled eventually to stop, and she was searched by government officials, who marched ashore ninety-one insurgents who were found among the crew and passengers.

The total number of prisoners taken by the Government is more than one hundred. Among them are the sick and wounded and many who were forced against their wills into the insurgent service. The fighting men who have been captured, number 475 or 500.

Little trustworthy news has been received from the South. It is not certain where the insurgent cruiser Aquidiban is, or what Admiral Mello is doing. The movements of the land troops are only surmised. The insurgents profess not to know what General Gomereindo Saraiva's plans are, or where he and his men have been during the last ten days.

BURST ITS BOUNDS.

A Reservoir in Idaho Breaks and Much Property Destroyed.

Boise (Idaho) special: News has been received in this city that the Indian Creek Reservoir has broken its barriers and is sweeping down upon the ranches and villages carrying destruction and ruin in its path. The reservoir is constructed of solid masonry at the head of Indian Creek. The reservoir covered 500 acres and cost $50,000. The country between Bysuka and Caldwell is all under water. Every railroad bridge between Nampa and Bysuka is washed out and many miles of railroad track submerged. The dam broke about noon and messengers were sent at breakneck speed on horseback to warn the settlers and urge the families to hasten to places of safety. A mighty wall of water came sweeping down Indian Creek bearing houses, sheep, calves, barns, farming utensils, and submerged whole farms. The citizens of Nampa, a little town on the short line, saw the approach of the devastating waters and fled to high ground. All the lower part of town is under water from five to twenty feet deep. Fifty houses were ruined and many families are without shelter and bedding.

The cause of the disaster was the warm weather coupled with heavy rains which caused the rapid melting of the snow in the mountains.

A Kentucky Tragedy.

A wedding occurred in Lee County, Kentucky, that ended with a double tragedy. Miss Rhoda May, a popular young woman, was the bride. Grant Cecil, the groom, became insanely jealous because Joseph Donerel, a former suitor of the girl's, was among the guests. After the ceremony he met Donerel, who was accompanied by John Burns, a youth of 19, and began firing. Both were killed, but it is claimed the shooting of Burns was accidental. A bystander was also slightly wounded. Cecil fled, leaving his bride, and has not been arrested. The young wife is prostrated by the excitement caused by the tragedy.

Bomb Outrage.

A dynamite bomb outrage, involving the death of the alleged Anarchist who threw the explosive missile was committed inside the entrance of the famous church of La Madeliene, Paris. In addition to killing the bomb thrower, a number of people who were in his vicinity at the time of the explosion were more or less severely injured. Full particulars are not attainable, as a strong force of police are in charge of the church and definite information is withheld until the authorities have completed their investigation of this latest outrage.

Coxey's Crew.

Canton (Ohio) special: The approach of the day when the army of peace of J. S. Coxey of Massillion, will begin its march overland to Washington, is causing great uneasiness in Stark County, especially among the farming community. The county is being overrun with tramps, who have been committing depredations of all kinds. They claim to be unemployed, arriving with the honorable intention of joining Coxey's great army of unemployed. Day by day the number has increased. It is the general impression unless the municipal or county authorities interfere with the mobilization that serious if not disastrous results will follow. There is a movement on foot here to have Mayor Cassidy prevent the proposed march through Canton.

Insulted by Japs.

Sidney (N. S. W.) special: Passengers of the steamer Arawa, which has just arrived here, tell an interesting story of recent events at Honolulu. They assert that a subject of Japan was recently arrested in that city for a trivial offense and placed in jail. He escaped from jail and swam out to a Japanese warship. The authorities appealed to the American Admiral, asking that he demand the surrender of the Japanese. The commander of the Japanese warship refused to give the man up and threatened that if the American Admiral boarded his ship he would give him half an hour to leave, or if he refused the American flagship would be blown out of the water. According to the story of the passengers, the escaped prisoner was unmolested.

Farmers in a Fight to the Death.

Tacoma (Wash.) special: A feud of nine years' standing exists between farmers of the Lake Tapps country. Recently more feeling was engendered over the location of a country road. The other day the opposing fractions gathered, each daring the other to attack. Something like a pitched battle ensued. William Cushman was shot dead and William Russell mortally wounded, others being injured. D. F. and Isaac Orcutt, father and son, both of the opposing faction, came to this city and gave themselves up. They are in jail charged with murder. They claim that they shot only in self defense. The Sheriff and and Coroner have gone to the scene of bloodshed, distant thirteen miles, with a force sufficient to enforce peace.

Fire on the Lake.

The crew of the fishing steamer Edith of Erie, Pa., had a terrible experience in the lake about twenty miles from Sandusky, Ohio. The steamer caught fire and the flames spread rapidly, soon enveloping the boat. The crew launched the little raft and took refuge thereon. A terrific sea was running and they narrowly escaped drowning and almost perished from cold. The tug Anna Robertson sighted the burning steamer, and rescued the crew. The Edith burned to the water's edge and sunk.

Desperate Act of a Convict.

At Birmingham, Ala., a negro named Charlie Fleming, a city convict, attempted to escape from the street gang. Street Commissioner Burkhalter, who was on horseback, overtook him and, drawing his pistol, commanded him to surrender. The negro quickly snatched the officer's pistol, fired one ball into Burkhalter, another into Burkhalter's horse, killing the animal, and buried a third in his own brain, dying instantly. Burkhalter's wound is not serious.

Scaffold Falls.

At Newton, Iowa, while Joseph Bowker, Oscar Evans, and Farris Miller were at work frescoing the Methodist Church the scaffold on which they were working gave away and they fell to the floor, some eighteen feet. Bowker had his left wrist badly crushed and sustained internal injuries which may prove fatal. Evans had one ankle broken and his back badly sprained. Miller received slight injuries on the head and legs.

Five Deaths by a Tornado.

A tornado swept over portions of Brown and Coleman counties, wrecking buildings and leveling fences. At Trickham, in Coleman County, W. D. Watson's house was raized to the ground. Mrs. Watson and four children were killed outright. An infant escaped unhurt, while Watson's injuries will prove fatal.

Beat Non-Union Men.

A mob of twelve masked men attacked four non-union sailors at San Pedro, Cal., and beat them cruelly with clubs. An Italian named Dezacre was fatally hurt.

Hazing Made a Crime.

The New York Senate has passed the bill to punish hazing by making minor grades of hazing misdemeanors and hazing which results in physical injury a felony.

They Want Ice Water.

Three hundred employes of the Pendleton glass factory at Anderson, Ind., went out on a strike because the company refused to supply the men with ice water.

New Chief Justice of Tennessee.

Judge D. L. Snodgrass has been elected Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Tennessee, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Chief Justice B. J. Lea.

Too Much Morphine.

Florence Hathaway, 15 years old, was found dead in bed at her home at Peru, Ind. She took morphine to relieve pain and took too much by mistake.

Wiped Out by Fire.

The business portion of Sidons, Miss., a town on the Illinois Central Railroad, was wiped out by fire. Loss, $25,000; insurance, $8,000.

REBELS SURRENDER.

BRAZILIAN WAR HAS COME TO AN END.

Almost a Fearful Tragedy at Its Close—Strange Action of President Peixoto—Admiral Mello Was a Traitor to Da Gama.

Surrender Without a Shot.

The Brazilian rebellion is crushed, and in its stead there bids fair for a time to be inaugurated a carnival of slaughter and butchery. Seeing the hopelessness of continuing the struggle, deserted by Admiral Mello, who with the warship Aquidiban was in parts unknown, Admiral Da Gama of the insurgent forces first sought the services of the Portuguese charge d'affairs in negotiating with the government for peace; but that official, acting under orders from the home government, assumed a neutral attitude. Da Gama then, in direct communication with President Peixoto, offered unconditional surrender of all the warships and forts and garrisons with Rio harbor, accepting for himself and officers expatriation and sentence of exile to a foreign land, on condition of amnesty to his soldiers and sailors.

When this news became known the government fleet entered the harbor quietly. As the vessels made their way up the bay they were saluted by the various government batteries.

The greatest excitement had prevailed in the city. The streets were crowded with people, and all the available trucks and hand carts had been busy carrying household goods and personal effects out of the city. The people had fully expected a shelling of the city by the insurgent forces, and it was generally believed that a terrific naval battle was about to be fought in the Rio harbor. Da Gama's offer of surrender changed everything, and everywhere could be heard shouts of "Viva Peixoto!" and general acquiesence to the requests of the insurgent admiral. There had been much suffering in the city. All business houses had been closed and it had been very difficult to get food. The whole available police force was on duty constantly. Probably 100,000 persons left the city. Railroad transportation to the suburbs was free, and the government was feeding the poor. Naturally the populace cheered the news which they believed heralded the close of the long and stubbornly contested insurrection.

But joy was changed to consternation by the announcement that the government had refused the terms of Da Gama, and would open fire upon the insurgent vessels and forts at noon Tuesday. The exodus from Rio again commenced, and at 12 o'clock precisely the bar fortress opened fire on Fort Villegaignon. In a short time the Government forces at Fort Armacao and Fort Gragoata joined in the bombardment. The fire was not returned by the insurgents. The bombardment was continued until 3 o'clock, when it ceased. Castello, San Benito, Saude, Curtello and all the city batteries then opened a furious fire upon Fort Villegaignon and the insurgent warship Tamandre. The fire was also directed upon the insurgent works at Cobras Island and at other places. The forces at Enchadas lowered the hospital flag and hoisted the insurgent ensign. The garrison at Governador Island also took part in the attack on Fort Villegaignon, which was badly hammered by the Government guns. The works on Cobras Island took fire, but the flames were soon extinguished. The firing of the batteries lasted for an hour. No great damage was done. The insurgents did not fire a shot.

At 4 o'clock the Government fleet steamed slowly to close action, the torpedo boat Aurora leading. The other vessels in the fleet were the Nictheroy, America, Itaipu, Bahian, Tiradentes and Parahyba, and two steamers and five torpedo boats. Immediately the rebels hauled down the white ensign from one of the ships which was lying at Enchadas and hoisted a signal, which was answered from ashore. A launch containing an officer then went from one insurgent ship to another, and each vessel lowered the white flag. Two boats from the Government fleet outside then entered the bay. One of them went to Fort Villegaignon, and it was shortly followed by the launch from the rebel ship. A few minutes later the white ensign came down from the fort, and at 5:45 the Government fleet steamed up the bay.

The insurgent war ship Aquidiban was not in this harbor. Admiral de Mello has proved false to the emperor and, to President Fonseca and President Peixoto. His last act was treachery to Admiral da Gama.

The officers of the insurgent fleet took refuge on board French and Portuguese war ships. One French vessel put to sea with many of the rebel officers on board. It is said that Admiral da Gama is on board the British war ship Sirius.

Peixoto's action in not acceding to Da Gama's offer created the greatest surprise, abroad as well as at Washington. Such conditions were freely accorded in any honorable warfare in civilized lands, yet to the surprise of our administration they had been refused by Peixoto. In spite of its best efforts to be exactly fair and neutral yet in the contest in Brazil our government, in its desire to protect American interests, has given color to the belief that its moral sympathy lay with the Peixoto government. So the news that civilized warfare had been disregarded and that brave but defeated insurgents, hemmed in on all sides were to be refused the chance to surrender on honorable terms and forced to throw themselves upon the mercy of the government without any guarantee of their lives fell with disagreeable force upon every official in the government here who has had to do with the trouble in any capacity. Undoubtedly the moral sympathy of the United States has been a valuable aid to the Brazilian Government ever since 1892, when the first symptoms of the rebellion were manifested in the southern provinces, but if Peixoto had persisted in maintaining an unrelenting and vindictive attitude, that measure of support was certain to be withdrawn.

BAD STORM IN TEXAS

AT LEAST A DOZEN PERSONS ARE KILLED OUTRIGHT.

Cyclone Sweeps Over Longview, Emery and Other Places, Demolishing Houses and Uprooting Trees—Hailstones Weigh Fourteen Ounces—Peculiar Shaped Cloud.

Death in Its Wake.

A destructive storm passed over Longview, Texas, at 1 o'clock Sunday morning. At least six persons were killed outright, three were fatally and many seriously injured. Great lumps of ice fell, breaking 300 panes of glass. Many pieces of ice weighed fourteen to eighteen ounces, while others, which must have been very much larger, were found in the morning after a heavy warm rain with the mercury at 70. Some of the stones were as large as goose eggs. They sank from two to five inches in the ground near the town. Chickens and turkeys roosting in trees were killed, while ducks, geese and hogs were pelted to death.

At Lansing switch, six miles east, a dispatch says, the cyclone struck the graveyard, tearing up large forest trees by the roots and taking them northwestward. It struck the stanch old house of John Cains, occupied by a family of negroes named Lester. The house stood in a grove of ancient oaks, every one of which was uprooted. The house was built on stone pillars, pinned and cemented together and ceiled throughout, the rooms fastened together by walls of logs, but it is now entirely demolished. There are six persons dead, three mortally wounded, and five seriously and painfully hurt.

Half a mile south of the ill-fated Lester house, the house of John Buffit, a white man, was taken away from the floor and dashed to splinters, leaving the family unhurt, except from bruises by hail stones. The storm swept on toward Marshall. Fruit trees and fences were demolished for many miles around. A Texas and Pacific passenger train was passing at the time and barely escaped the funnel-shaped cloud.

Six Killed at Emery.

The cyclone passed over Emery, the county seat of Rains County, thirty miles south of Greenville, totally demolishing the western portion of the town. Six persons were killed outright. In addition to these at least fifty are wounded, and some of them will die.

The cloud came from the southwest, and, as described by an eyewitness, it resembled an hour glass, approaching like two funnels together, point to point. The bottom of it was forked, and it was one continual blaze of electricity. It had the rotary cyclone motion and seemed about thirty or forty feet wide. It struck the ground north of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas depot and its track extends about four or five miles north and is about 100 yards wide, according to dispatches from various points. Everything in the track of the storm is a complete wreck.

DENVER UNDER ARMS

TROOPS CALLED OUT BY GOV. WAITE.

Entire Police and Fire Department, Aided by Deputy Sheriffs, Refuse to Surrender—Neither Side Dares to Shoot—Revolt Against an Injunction.

Surround the City Hall.

Thursday was an exciting day in Denver. From 2 o'clock in the afternoon until 9 o'clock in the evening the First Regiment, Colorado National Guards, the Chaffee Light Artillery, and the Signal Corps were drawn up in front of the City Hall. A big brass "Napoleon" and two Gatling guns were trained upon the building, and the order to fire was momentarily expected.

The people of Denver awoke Thursday morning to find themselves under martial law. The Governor of Colorado had late Wednesday evening summoned the State troops mentioned above to assemble at their armory, Twenty-sixth and Curtis streets, at 10 o'clock a. m. Thursday. The Governor's orders did not, of course, specify what the troops were wanted for, and the venerable, but pugnacious, executive refused flatly to talk, but of course the whole town knew. This critical situation was brought about by the determination of Gov. Waite to oust the two members of the fire and police board, Jackson Orr and D. J. Martin, whom he removed for protecting gambling houses, and place in office their successors, S. D. Barnes and Dennis Mullins. Messrs. Orr and Martin, having obtained from the District Court an injunction restraining Gov. Waite from forcibly removing them, were determined to resist to the utmost.

GOV. WAITE.

Prepare for Battle.

The order for the troops to move was given at 2 o'clock. All the men were attired in fatigue uniform, and the artillerymen looked especially warlike in their slouch hats and tightly fitting suits. There was an average of twenty men to a gun, and each of these weapons of death had four horses attached to it. At the city hall the whole police department was rapidly collected and prepared to defend the old fire and police board. In addition several hundred of the toughest citizens, many of whom have records as man killers, were sworn in as deputies by Sheriff Burchinall and placed in the city hall as a re-enforcement of the police department. Each deputy was armed with two six-shooters and instructed to use them in case of necessity. The police were armed with shotguns in addition to their clubs and revolvers. Chief Pearse of the fire department made early arrangements to assist in the battle, and his mode of warfare, while of a peculiar nature, was decided upon as the first method of action for the defense of the city hall.

Lines of hose were arranged throughout the building ready to be attached to the fire hydrants in order to greet the advance guard of the opposing forces with streams of water, to be given additional force by the use of the steam engines in the central station. Should the streams of water prove unavailing in protecting the hall from the invading forces the men were so stationed as to open fire from behind the walls of the city building.

The militia were drawn up in line of battle. The Gatling guns were turned on the city hall. The police force was drawn up on the main floor of the city hall, armed with rifles and shotguns, ready for action. Gen. Brooks, commanding officer, delivered to Police Lieutenant Clay, in command outside of the city hall, a message to the effect that if the removed police commissioners did not vacate within half an hour the office would be taken by force. Orr and Martin refused to surrender. Then a long series of fruitless parleying began between the attorneys for the opposing factions. The Governor remained closeted in his private rooms at Douglas place all day, guarded by fourteen trusty militiamen.

A Truce Arranged.

The Chamber of Commerce took a hand in the overtures for peace and made several propositions to the Governor and the rival Police Board. Finally the Governor agreed to withdraw the troops and leave the old board in possession for a few days, if they would agree to submit the case at once to the Supreme Court on its merits. This proposition was promptly refused by Messrs. Orr and Martin, the de facto board. Bloodshed now seemed inevitable. The American flag was at this point displayed out of the window of the Board of Trade. The crowd outside cheered wildly. "They won't dare fire on the flag," somebody shouted. More cheering.

Suddenly an order from the Governor came, stopping all hostilities for two hours. The reason soon became plain. Gov. Waite had been communicating with the War Department at Washington, and had secured orders for the regulars at Fort Logan to proceed to Denver and assist in keeping the peace. They arrived by special train at 8:15 p. m., and went into camp 500 strong on the Union depot platform, awaiting orders from Brig. Gen. McCook, commanding the Department of the Colorado. Gen. McCook had a conference with the Governor, and then, about 9 p. m., the force of State militia that had been stationed around the City Hall received marching orders, went to the armory, and there disbanded, subject to call, the men going to their homes. The Governor was afraid that if firing was begun in the darkness some non-combatants might be shot and a general riot be precipitated.

It Was a Big Gold Year.

The world's production of gold for 1893 was perhaps $148,000,000, divided as follows: United States, $35,000,000; Australia, $35,000,000; South Africa, $30,000,000; Russia, $25,000,000; India, $4,000,000; China, $3,000,000; and other countries, $16,000,000. This is an increase of more than $17,000,000 over the figures of the director of the mint, and $10,000,000 over our figures for 1892. The probabilities are that even this estimate is too low, as a much larger increase is expected in the United States and Australia; and from a semi-official source we learn that the bureau of the mint estimates the production of gold for 1893 at $150,000,000.

He began an investigation, and soon ascertained enough to warrant him in believing that another horse was substituted for the stallion and the barn fired to cover the theft. It is now stated that the horse is known to have been taken to Bartholomew County, and that it is there to-day. Mr. Stover hopes to soon have the thieves in a net.

AT WAR WITH HERSELF.

The Story of a Woman's Atonement, by Charlotte M. Braeme.

CHAPTER XLIV.

Captain Flemyng had very pretty rooms in Castle street, Welldon. He was not often here, but he retained them for himself. He was very popular with his landlady—rather a severe maiden lady, who was accustomed to speak of him as "quite the gentleman."

On this June morning, when so great a change was to take place in his circumstances, he had risen late. Miss Danvers had sent twice to say that breakfast was ready, and yet he did not appear. A third time the little page knocked at his door—this time the message was of a more startling description.

"A lady is waiting to see you, Capt. Flemyng, and she says her business is important."

"A lady," repeated Paul; "who can it be?"

He never even dreamed of Leonie; his only impression was it might be some one soliciting charity—some one about a fancy fair, or a bazar, or something of that kind. How little he thought that waiting for him were the title of Earl, and the inheritance of Crown Leighton!

"A lady," the little page had said; so Capt. Flemyng hurriedly completed his toilet and then went down to the drawing-room, where the visitor awaited him. He saw a lady closely veiled and wearing a large traveling-cloak. He bowed, inwardly wondering who she was and what she wanted. Then the veiled figure came up to him and a faint voice murmured his name. He started back in surprise.

"Leonie!" he cried. "Great heavens! what has happened, what has brought you here?" He saw then that she held in her hands a paper packet. She placed it in his.

"Take this, Paul," she said, simply; "it is yours."

He took it, wonderingly, and then she threw back her veil and gave a great gasping sigh as of one who is relieved of a deadly burden. He looked at the beautiful, colorless face, with its strange expression of peace after a storm.

"What does it mean, Leonie?" he asked. "You astonish me—stay, you shall not speak one word until you have taken something. You look so ill, my darling."

Still holding the packet in his hand, never looking to see what it was, he led her to the little couch and made her sit down, and then he poured out a glass of wine. She would have refused it, but he told her he would not listen to her until she had drunk it.

The generous wine brought back a tinge of color to the sweet face. It was all sweet now; that torrents of tears seemed to have washed away the former pride, hardness, and coldness forever. He was struck by the softened beauty, and bent down to touch the white brow with his lips, but she shrank from him as she had never done before.

"Do not do that, Paul, until you have heard what I am here to say. Look at what is written on the document I have given to you."

He looked and saw—

"The last will and testament of Ulric, Earl of Charnleigh."

"Leonie," he cried, "what does this mean?"

But she had risen from the little couch and was kneeling at his feet. He cried out again when he saw that; he tried to raise her, but she bent her head in lowliest humility.

"Listen, Paul—listen to me. I am worthy only to kneel here, not to stand by your side, dear; for I have willfully robbed you, knowing that all I had was yours."

"Robbed me!" he exclaimed. "What can you mean, Leonie?"

"Read that will, and you will understand."

He opened the document, and as he read a murmur of wonder that sounded almost like regret came from his lips.

"Mine," he said—"it is not possible! Mine, Leonie, and not yours!"

"Yes; I have robbed you, Paul. I found this will long months ago, and hid it. I came down to Crown Leighton this morning purposely to destroy it, never intending to give to you what is your own, but I could not do it; Heaven was merciful to me—I could not do it."

He seemed quite bewildered.

"I do not understand, Leonie. What is it you say? Explain to me clearly—you have startled me."

Kneeling there, she told him the whole history of her sin—from the first moment when she found the will on the eventful night of the charades to this, when, humbled and repentant, she came to confess the truth to him. She did not spare herself; she told him how, one by one, she had discarded her own self-respect, her love, her honor, her hopes of Heaven. She did not spare herself; she did not hide from him one single incident of her wrongdoing.

"It was a terrible temptation, Paul," she said, "and I yielded to it. I have not one excuse to offer. I repent of my sin now, but that will make it none the less heinous."

Paul sat like a man suddenly bereft of his senses, unable to speak, unable even to think clearly.

"I am dazed, Leonie," he said, at last; "I cannot understand your words even yet."

"I have robbed you," she said—"I have deceived you in every way. I have kept this will back from you, trying to compromise with my conscience, trying to make myself believe that if I married you it would be the same—it would not matter which had the inheritance, you or I."

He tried to speak, but she went on hurriedly—

"I did not love you, Paul. I loved Bertram Gordon; and the greatest wrong I could have done would have been to marry you, for I love Bertram with all my heart's love."

"Was it only to be Countess of Charnleigh that you promised to marry me?" he asked, sadly.

"That was all. I love you just as though you were my elder brother. I have never had a lover's love for you, Paul; perhaps that was the worst part of my sin."

He let the will fall, and with a low moan buried his face in his hands. She tried to draw them away.

"Do forgive, me, Paul—Paul, my dearest friend—Paul, my brother, do pardon me! I am so sorry—so sorry for my sin!"

He looked at her.

"Leonie, I do not value Crown Leighton or the title that goes with it; but I do value you and your love above all earthly things. You have made me an earl, yet I am poorer than the poorest pauper. You are worth a thousand earldoms to me."

"I am a truer woman, dear, kneeling here and giving you up, than I should be if I married you. I cannot marry you, Paul. Heaven helping me, I will not speak falsely or act falsely again while I live."

"You are a noble woman, Leonie. You might have destroyed this; you might have defied the whold world to prove my claim. You have acted loyally after all."

"Yes, after all; but that 'all' comprises much, Paul. I have sent from me the man I loved. I have done my best to break an honest heart. Now listen to me, Paul. I know my own strength and my own weakness. I am going away—going where, with hard work and privation, I may forget the enervating lessons I have learned—where I may do my best to atone for my sin. You must not persuade me to stay, neither must you ask me whither I am going. I have one favor to request of you. Will you take care of Lady Fanshawe? From your abundance you will spare something for her. For the rest, you will do what you will. Make the discovery public if you choose; if you can spare me, do. I do not ask for mercy, but you will show it to me. No one but you need know that the will was found, so long ago; they will think, when they read of it, that the discovery has just taken place. You can spare me so far, Paul."

"You are a noble woman," he repeated; "the world holds none nobler."

She smiled sadly.

"I am going now," she said. "Let me be the first to call you Lord Charnleigh. Ah, you will forgive me, Paul, because I have suffered so much. You will forgive me before I go?"

"My darling," he said, with a deep sob, "I cannot part with you. I love you so dearly, Leonie. Do promise to be my wife—forget all this, and renew your promise to be my wife."

"I cannot," she returned. "Please Heaven no other false words shall pass my lips to you while I live. I cannot marry you because I do not love you; and I do with all my heart love some one else. Say you forgive me, Paul."

"I forgive you, Leonie," he said; and then before he could interfere to prevent it, she had quitted the room.

CHAPTER XLV.

When Leonie Rayner left Paul she gave no thought as to whither she was going. She never thought of Florette waiting for her at Crown Leighton; she had made the great sacrifice for which she had strained every nerve, and the reaction was fast setting in.

She told the coachman to drive her to the railway-station; she had some vague idea of going to London and losing herself in the crowds of that vast city. One thing she knew was impossible, and that was for her to meet just at present those belonging to the old brilliant life now passing from her forever. She would go to London and find some employment there; but first she must have rest—rest. She said the word over and over again to herself; it was all she could hope for—rest. A sweet peace seemed to float around her; she was aroused only when the carriage stopped at the station. The coachman came up to her, and touched his hat.

"Have I any message, my lady, to take back to Crown Leighton?"

She started as the familiar words fell on her ear.

"No, none. You gave me a title that does not belong to me, Simmons. I am no longer Lady Charnleigh. The will has been found that makes Captain Flemyng Lord Charnleigh—the heir to Crown Leighton. He will be your master now."

Her voice was low and clear, every syllable distinct. The man looked at her in astonishment too great for words.

"It is no secret," she continued. "You can tell all the servants when you return."

"I am very sorry, my lady," and Leonie was touched at seeing tears in the man's eyes. He did not leave her until he had seen her comfortably placed in the London train.

Then she was alone for the first time since she had trampled on her temptation and put away her sin—alone, with a strange feeling of weariness and peace—alone with strangely mingled thoughts. The brilliant life was over forever. Leonie, Countess of Charnleigh, was dead—no such person existed. How would they speak of her in that world she had loved so well? They would say that it was a short, brilliant reign, and that she had been much admired; and they say also that she died a queen. There had been nothing paltry—nothing mean in her abdication. She had given up entirely—she had not reserved to herself jewels or purses of gold, as some women might have done. She was proud as on that June day when, amidst light and shade, the lawyer had announced to her the fable of her wealth.

A strange weariness was creeping over her; she laid her head back and closed her eyes; she removed the thick veil from her beautiful, colorless face, that the air might refresh her. Strange fancies crowding on her mind—strange fancies floated before her—then a calm, deep brooding darkness fell, and the tired senses seemed to sleep.

Nature must have its reaction. After a great storm comes a calm. Such a calm came over Leonie Rayner as she closed her eyes—darkness and silence seemed to enfold her, and she knew no more. The strain upon her nerves had been terrible; forlong months past she had known no peace; night and day she had been at war with herself. Now the war was over—the evil spirit vanquished—and she fell as a warrior might fall who had fought a hard battle and, wearied out, dropped by the wayside

She remembered no more. The train was one not much used—there were few passengers; nor did it stop until Euston square had been reached. There a porter, opening the door, was startled to find a lady with a white, beautiful face, lying like one dead.

He gave an alarm, and there was a rush of people to the spot. It happened most providentially that in the booking office, sending a messenger to Crown Leighton, was Ethel Dacre. There had been great alarm when Leonie's sudden journey was discovered. Lady Fanshawe was amazed, annoyed and disconcerted.

"Such a thing to do in the very midst of the season—to rush off to Crown Leighton in that eccentric fashion! What would the world say?"

But what the world was to say or think mattered little now to Leonie Rayner. Lady Fanshawe could not be pacified until Ethel had promised to go herself to Euston square and send a messenger to Crown Leighton.

"Send a letter to Lady Charnleigh begging her to let us know what she is doing and when she intends to return."

So Miss Dacre, who began to have some faint glimmer of the truth, went at once and while she was engaged in dispatching a messenger she heard the people saying that a lady had been found in a railway carriage either fainting or dying.

A sudden conviction seized her that it was Leonie. She found her instinct had not deceived her—Leonie, cold, silent and motionless, but with a look of peace on her white face which Ethel had not seen for months, was lying in the ladies' waiting room. She guessed at once what Leonie had done.

"She has been to Paul Flemyng and has told him all."

Ethel knew that that calm, serene expression could come only from a soul that was at peace. Even while she stood at Leonie's side she formed her resolution; she decided that the girl should not be carried to that magnificent mansion where she had been queen. Westfield, her father's home, was but a few miles from London; she would take her thither.

She dispatched a messenger to Lady Fanshawe, telling her what had happened and what she had done, and then ordered a carriage and took Leonie home to Westfield. The doctors pronounced it to be a case of brain fever, from which there did not seem any chance for the patient's recovery.

* * * * * * *

It was a June day on which Leonie Rayner had turned from her sin and fled from further temptation—fled, resolving to be loyal and true for the rest of her life, come what might. The wheat was standing in huge golden sheaves, and the fruit was hanging ripe on the trees, when she opened her eyes to reason and light—such feeble reason, such dim light. At first she was conscious of no other sensation but that of lying at rest, and then, when that became familiar to her, she began to understand that she was more helpless and feeble than a child. She tried to raise her hand, but could not; she tried to speak, but the trembling lips could form no words; then she looked round, but the place was all strange to her. Near the window she saw the outline of a woman's figure; Leonie raised one of her hands, and it seemed to her that it must belong to some one else, it was so white, so thin, so frail.

And then, slowly, gradually, the once active brain began to work again; memory and reason, the power of thought, began to return to her. She sighed deeply, and the figure at the window hastily turned round.

"Ethel!" she whispered, faintly.

"My darling! Thank heaven, you are yourself once more!" and the next moment Ethel Dacre was kneeling by the bedside holding the frail, trembling figure in her arms.

"Tell me where I am, Ethel," she said.

"You are in my home—Westfield; you have been here ever since you were taken ill."

"How long is that?" asked the faint voice.

"More than six weeks, Leonie. But you must not talk—you must rest."

"Rest!" The word fell like a chime of half-forgotten bells—like the faint, sweet music of a dream. "Rest!" The poor, half-dazed mind dwelt on the word—it opened the whole past to her.

"Does every one know, Ethel?" she asked.

"Yes, my darling; everyone knows, and everyone says you are the noblest woman in the world."

Her fair name had been saved from all stain or reproach. She turned her face away, and fell into a sweet, dreamless sleep, every moment of which was full of healing to her.

It was some weeks longer before she was able to leave her room. Once or twice she thought to talk to Ethel about that terrible past, but Miss Dacre would not hear a word.

"When you are stronger, Leonie, you shall say what you like, but not now. Make haste and grow strong. Papa wants to take us both to France. Would you like to visit Reims, where your mother's family live? We will go there and stay until you are quite well."

The idea of visiting Reims delighted her, and then, by degrees, as Leonie grew stronger, Ethel told her how Lady Fanshawe was still at the London house, superintending affairs, and how Paul had taken possession of his estates, and now was installed as Lord Charnleigh.

"How is he, Ethel? Did you ever see him?" she asked.

"Yes—I see him every day, Leonie. He drives over to see how you are." Then, noticing that the sweet face grew pale, she added, "You will not see him, Leonie. Dr. Markham has forbidden me to allow anyone to see you until we return from France. Half fashionable London has sent to ask about you."

"Then people do not like me less because I am no longer a countess?" she said.

"I think all sensible people like you better than ever," replied Ethel. "When you are stronger I will show you what all the papers have said about you—I have carefully preserved them—and then you will understand how you are appreciated."

Leonie did not grow strong as soon as Miss Dacre had hoped. When she was able to travel, Sir Huntley took them both to Reims. The brave old general had grown very fond of the girl who had acted in what he called a truly brave and loyal fashion. He would have done anything for her. Leonie begged hard that she might see Lady Fanshawe before she went, but Ethel was firm.

"Lady Fanshawe was grieved very much about you," she remarked; "indeed, for a long time she persisted in saying that there must be a mistake about the will. If you were to see her it would only bring about a rush of painful memories. You must wait until you return."

"Ethel," said Leonie, "you evaded my question the other day. How is Paul?"

Miss Dacre's face flushed.

"Leonie," said she, "Paul loves you too well to be happy; he would give back his earldom, dear, to win you."

But Leonie Rayner looked with frank, clear eyes into her friend's face.

"I shall never act falsely again, Ethel, while I live; and I cannot marry Paul, because with all my heart I love Bertram Gordon."

HARD TUSSLE WITH A FISH.

Cole Thought that the Sturgeon Was Dead, but Found Out Otherwise.

Manly Cole, of North Wolcott, N. Y., made a remarkable catch near the shore of Lake Ontario late yesterday afternoon, says a correspondent of the Philadelphia Telegraph. In company with Abraham Griswold and two other companions he was walking along the beach from Red Creek to Port Bay, when a large fish was observed floating on its back twenty rods out in the lake. It was thought to be dead, but its large size led Mr. Cole to desire its possession.

So, stripping off his clothes, he plunged into the water, thinking to tow the fish to land. As he drew near the fish he noticed about four feet of rope dangling from its gills. He seized the rope and started to tow the monster to shore, but the fish was not nearly so dead as it had seemed, and in an instant shot off in a direct line for the Canadian shore, dragging Mr. Cole after it.

Mr. Cole, being a plucky man and a fine swimmer, made up his mind to hang to the rope. A desperate struggle ensued. First the fish had the advantage, then the man. This was kept up for a full hour. Then the fish succumbed and was towed to the beach more dead than alive. Mr. Cole was so exhausted that he was unable to speak.

The captive was found to be an Ontario sturgeon weighing seventy-five pounds. It is supposed that it had been caught and anchored by a rope through its gills somewhere up the lake, but had escaped. Such fish are rare on the south shore of Lake Ontario, though common enough in Canadian waters, and this is the first one captured near Port Bay this year. It is probably the first ever captured in this manner anywhere. It was shipped to Newark, N. J., last night, where sturgeon sells at 12 cents per pound.

PRIMITIVE DEVICES.

PECULIARITIES OF ANCIENT MACHINERY.

The Water Hoists of Madagascar and the Ganges—The Dutch Inclined Plane and the German Flying Wheel—The First Hydraulic Lift.

Used in Hauling and Lifting.

I became acquainted with a man, says a writer in the Globe-Democrat, who told me that he was commissioned by a large manufacturer to hunt out various primitive forms of the application of power. It became then his duty to search through all sorts of musty tomes in half a dozen languages.

"And what have you found?" I said.

"One of the oddest is that used on the coast of Madagascar by the natives. It consists of a long pole swung something after the fashion of the old oaken bucket. The pot goes down in the well. Now, the weight of the pot is just equal to the weight of the beam, or log, so that when it is filled with water it will not rise steadily. But the ingenious natives have arranged a railing on each side of the log, and, to make the pail come up, deliberately walk backward. Is it not ingenious?

No one but a Dutchman would ever think of hoisting a package into a building in the curious fashion outlined here. A glance at the picture shows how it was done. The sliding seat holds the man; when the package is to go up the man slides down, and vice versa. It was used in the Netherlands about 100 years ago. In method of application of power than that of the flying wheel, as it was called, a device used in Germany and Austria along about 1670-1700. The lads in the wheel had to be nimble fellows, but, the way being long and the day likewise, they must have been very tired at nightfall. Happily this rude method of hoisting has now passed away.

Travelers on the Ganges often tell of the strange way in which the natives hoist buckets of water by means of a series of cranes. The method calls for a number of changes from one crane to another, but the labor being shared by half a dozen people, is not so tiresome to the individual as in the case of the wheel. Still, American engineers would doubtless find it decidedly primitive and irksome.

The Chinese of the last century used an odd device to haul up their wine. It was a rope running around a shaft, which, in turn, connected with a great wheel, upon which was a device something like the escapement of a modern watch. By working a lever up and down the ratchets were rapidly thrown along the teeth of the wheel, and slowly the barrels of wine came from the cellar.

The earliest use of the hydraulic method is shown in the picture, and a quaint study it is. The water was forced against a paddle wheel, which, in turn, communicated its power to a rope, and this did the hoisting.

For a unique screw attachment, the one here shown beats the world. It was used by the builders of the Middle Ages to carry the stones upward in raising the high walls that surrounded the cities. It was painfully slow in its action, but at the time was regarded as a wonderful thing.

The monks of the Middle Ages had a clever scheme, simple and effective, for hoisting casks. It was the earliest form of the windlass, and for simplicity and general utility affords the best example of the early method of the intelligent use of hoisting power. Four men, or more, would man the capstan and, like sailors in a ship, heave away until the plunder came into the castle.

Just a Few Kisses.

Some wag with plenty of time on his hands has conceived the idea of hunting through the works of all the prominent English and American authors for the purpose of gathering all the adjectives with which they qualify the word kiss. The result of his labor is that kisses can be as follows: Cold, warm, icy, burning, chilly, cool, loving, indifferent, balsamic, fragrant, blissful, passionate, aromatic, with tears bedewed, long, soft, hasty, intoxicating, dissembling, delicious, pious, tender, beguiling, hearty, distracted, frantic, fresh as the morning, breathing fire, divine, satanic, glad, sad, superficial, quiet, loud, fond, tricky, criminal, heavenly, execrable, devouring, ominous, fervent, parching, nervous, soulless, stupefying, slight, careless, anxious, painful, sweet, refreshing, embarrassed, shy, mute, ravishing, holy, sacred, firm, trembling, electrifying, ecstatic, hurried, faithless, narcotic, feverish, immoderate, lascivious, libidinous, sisterly, brotherly, and paradisiacal. The task seemed interminable and he gave up at this stage.

A Great Irrigation Project.

The people of Arizona are enthusiastic over a gigantic irrigation scheme, which is hoped to enhance the attractiveness of that State. The plan is to build a big steel dam in the Grand Canyon of the Colorado River of sufficient strength to resist any pressure of summer floods, part of the water thus confined to be used to operate turbine wheels to drive pumping machinery for elevating the remainder to the plain above. The supply of water in the Colorado is unfailing, and many of the most extensive valleys in the Territory could be irrigated by such a system. The scheme is generally said to be entirely feasible.—Philadelphia Ledger.

NIKOLA TESLA, the famous electrician, has invented an engine which does away with fly-wheels, crossheads and eccentrics, with everything, in fact, but the piston and cylinder, all the control mechanism being electro-magnetic.

"FRED only puts on the smoking-jacket I bought him when he is sick." "I didn't know he was ever sick." "He isn't except when he tries to smoke."—Life's Calendar.

"LICKED" TOM REED.

How Billie Crowell Whipped the "Czar" in College Days.

There was a man in Bowdoin College who once "licked" Tom Reed! That is the very word to use—"licked." If he were alive to-day he could boast of something that would make him pre-eminent. William Crowell, or, as the boys called him, "Billie" Crowell, was a great, tall, lanky student, with shocky blonde hair, a close friend of Reed's. A. W. Bradbury, in a St. Louis paper, says concerning Tom and Billie: "One day, I remember, Tom was leaving his room, when he met Crowell just outside the door. I do not know what passed between them; at any rate, Crowell was a sturdy, athletic chap, handy with his fists, and—biff! he suddenly let out a right-hander which made Tom stagger. The row continued for some time, and Tom was fully and finally licked. Remember the incident? Well, I guess Tom does!"

BILLIE CROWELL.

They Loved Well.

The strangest test of will power and endurance ever made was in Mexico, the characters being a Mexican woman and an American man.

They were lovers, and the girl's parents refused their consent to the union, insisting that she should marry a wealthy Mexican suitor.

At the suggestion of the girl they agreed to die together, and to test the strength and endurance of each other's love they choose a means of suicide unlike any ever dreamed of before.

Food and fruit were placed on a table in the center of a room, occupied by both, the girl having escaped from her home, but being unwilling to elope with her lover. It was agreed that they should starve to death with plenty before them, and should either succumb to nature and partake of the food—then both were released from the bond of death—but there should be an everlasting separation.

For twelve days they endured the pangs of hunger without a murmur or a thought of wavering from their purpose to die together. The twelfth day the father of the girl discovered her whereabouts, and, breaking the door, they were carried out, too faint to stand alone.

It took them several days to recover their strength, and when they did they were married.

This is a true statement, and the American is living with his Mexican wife to-day.

A Lookingglass for the Canary.

The following interesting story of how a canary was cured of homesickness was told by W. G. Evans: "Not long go my wife purchased a canary at a bird store. It had been accustomed to companions of its kind at the store, but at our house it was entirely alone. The pretty little songster was evidently homesick. It would not sing, it would not eat, but just drooped and seemed to be pining away. We talked to it, and tried by every means in our power to cheer the bird up, but all in vain. My wife was on the point of carrying the bird back to the store when one day a friend said: 'Give him a piece of lockingglass.' Acting on this suggestion, she tied a piece of broken mirror about the size of a man's hand on the outside of the cage. The little fellow hopped down from his perch almost immediately, and, going up close, looked in, seeming delighted. He chirped and hopped about, singing all the pretty airs he was master of. He spends most of his time before the glass, and when he goes to sleep at night he will cuddle down as close to the glass as he can, thinking, very likely, that he is getting nearer to the pretty bird he sees so often." — St. Louis Globe-Democrat

Joked at a Menace.

During the year 1883, threatening letters were sent to many public men in England. Among others, Lord Salisbury received a letter from the Chief Constable of Hertfordshire, informing him that his life and that of the late Mr. Smith, First Lord of the Admiralty, were to be attempted the following Monday. This letter Lord Salisbury sent to Mr. Smith, with the accompanying grimly comical little note: "MY DEAR SMITH: The inclosed may interest you. DEMOCRATIC COUNTY MEETING.

The members of the county committee will meet in Auburn, March 24, at 2 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of organization, election of chairman, vice-chairman, secretary and treasurer and executive committee.

The precinct committeemen elected last Saturday, and those holding over in townships where no one was chosen that day, should attend this meeting.

In all cases, all democrats are invited to attend this meeting and be present at the organization.

I earnestly request a full attendance.

BEEKS ERICK, Chairman.

N. J. SHOOK, Secretary.

Judicial Convention.

The Democratic Judicial Convention for the 35th Judicial Circuit, composed of the counties of Steuben and DeKalb, will be held at Waterloo on

WEDNESDAY, MAY 2 1894,

at 2 p. m. All delegates to the judicial convention are earnestly requested to be present.

BEEKS ERICK,
JOHN W. SOMERLOTT, } Chairmen.

For County Chairman.

The COURIER always aims to be fair and impartial in these matters, and not to overlook or omit the names of any who are aspirants for places in the gift of democratic voters. At the time we spoke of John F. Shuman of Waterloo, for this important place, no other name had been mentioned. A few days ago some one spoke of Hon. S. S. Shutt.

Of course we would be suited with him. The latest name we have heard mentioned in this connection is also an excellent one. W. J. Frederick, of Garrett, is urged by his friends to allow his name to go before the meeting. We have not seen Mr. Frederick himself, but we feel that he would be a strong and valuable leader. But as we have already said, the COURIER has no ax to grind, and is interested alone for the success of the party, and whether it be Mr. Shuman, Mr. Shutt or Mr. Frederick, on whom the democracy shall bestow this honorable, but very difficult and delicate position, we shall be suited and will as ever, be found ready to cooperate heartily with whatever the party leader has to do. Let every committeeman come to the meeting here next Saturday, and assist in the selection.

The Caucuses.

Last Saturday's democratic caucus in Auburn was held in the surveyor's room, when D. D. Moody was made chairman, and R. S. McClellan secretary. It was decided to follow the usual course, and have two committeemen from each precinct, one from the country and one from the town. In the northwest precinct Charles Groscop was chosen for the country, and Sam. Campbell for town. In the northeast, those present from the country chose J. L. Ferguson, while the town took W. H. Meder. Southeast Wm. Ashelman in the country and C. A. Picker in town. Southwest, G. H. Oberholtzer for country and a vote for town between E. L. Cochran and Frank Dills, resulted in choice of Dills. There was a fair attendance and good feeling. The same is also reported from every caucus we have heard from.

Fairfield chose W. H. McGiffin in the west and H. H. Slaybaugh, east.

Waterloo, John Koons in southeast; E. A. Brown in N. E., and Simon Dilgard in west.

Butler township chose Perry Harkey. North Richland, Hon. M. F. Franks. Wilmington, 1 J. E. Latson, 2, C. P. Uris 3, M. E. Gardner, 4, J. J. Oberlin, 5, James Shull.

THE silver seigniorage bill passed the senate last Thursday.

THE New York World reports a sworn circulation of 433,167 daily average for February and January of this year.

W. E. HOLDEMAN, of the Nappanee, (Ind.) Advance, throws a side light on Senator Peffer as follows: "Senator Peffer, of Kansas, was at one time a well known resident of this vicinity, and left a record that abides here yet, though it is thirty years since he and his family betook themselves to another section of the country. There were several of the Peffer brothers living in Penn township, on the western edge of Elkhart county, and all possessed radical characteritics. Just before the late war the Senato-to-be lived in Penn township on a farm balonging to one of his brothers. He was a republican and was considered a pretty good stump speaker for a countryman. During the 1860 campaign he contracted with the republican committee of the county to make speeches for $1.50 a night. He did this for a time, but it was finally discovered that he put in his off nights in remote parts of the county making democratic speeches for the sum of $2 per night. A republican committeeman hauled him over the coals for this, and he owned up to the charge, but tried to excuse himself on the ground that he had not 'done the republican cause any harm' by the democratic speeches he had made. However he never made any more republican speeches in this section.

The writer made an involuntary visit to Angola last week in connection with the Desters trial, and was forcibly reminded of the absurdity of the formula in the oath administered to witnesses, namely, "to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth." By the infinitesimal amount of truth the witness was allowed to impart to the listening jury, it seemed as though but a very small amount of truth was allowed to be imparted and that in homeopathic doses.

The entertainment given by the Citizens' Literary Club at the First Baptist church, Friday evening, was one of the best ever given in this city. The opening chorus was one of the best ever rendered by that quartet. J. Morris Widney, of Auburn, sang Thomas Q. Seabrook's song, "The Story of the Prodigal Son," which was highly enjoyed. Miss Harriet Baker, of Avilla, recited a poem entitled the "Dinner Party;" Glady Halter "spoke a piece; Misses Gertrude Bowersox and Zula Frantham gave an instrumental selection on the organ and violin, all of which received hearty applause. The debate between Messrs. Miner and Sellers was also very much enjoyed In short it was a spendid affair, and one which the public does not have the opportunity of hearing very often.

As was advertised, the wrestling match between Harry Parker, the Erie, Penn., wonder, and James Morgan, champion middle-weight of the south, took place at Clark's Hall last Friday evening. Parker had defeated Morgan at Toledo, and Morgan had defeated him, and this was advertised as a "mixed match" for $100 a side and gate receipts, the forfeit money being deposited with the Garrett Banking Company a week before. As early as 7 o'clock people began to congregate in front of the hall, waiting admission. When the doors were opened at 8 o'clock the people flocked in and in a short time hall was full. At 9:10 the curtains were pulled aside and Mr. E. P. Fitzgerald, who was chosen referee, introduced the wrestlers. They shook hands and in 36½ miontes Parker landed Morgan on his back. The first bout was wrestled catch-as-catch-can style, and the second and third Graeco-Roman. In the second round Morgan put Parker on his back in eight minutes, and in the third Parker laid the champion of the south on the carpet in just six minutes. Mr. Fitzgerald declared Parker the winner and gave him the money. Col. C. B. Alsbaugh and D. W. Linville were time-keepers. Hank West and "Kid" Moore were in Morgan's corner, and Chester Shaffer and a gentleman whose name we did no learn, were Parker's seconds. The latter gentleman left for Cleveland, Ohio, Saturday morning, where he has an engagement. We understand that Parker and Pat McCarty, champion light-weight wrestler of Illinois, will meet at this place in a short time. If they do, the public can rest assured of a good match.

Isaiah Davis and son-in-law, Capt. Andrews, are building a store room at what is known as the Pattent Switch, in Newville township. They expect to have a postoffice in the near future. The new burg will be named "Davistown,"

One of our prominent friends has been out in deep water for the past few days, all on account of the doings and sayings of what was known as the most notorious liars that has ever disgraced the names of the good people of St Joe And to show the appreciation in which said person was held, a mass meeting was held and the time fixed for his departure, and he went without stopping to argue the point. See?

One of the men employed at the Big 4 store (we wouldn't like to say one of the proprietors) had an occasion one day last week to draw some syrup out of a barrel containing what is called rock-candy syrup, and very valuable. While the syrup was running his attention was called to something else and the stuff was allowed its own way. After a half hour, we call him Bert for short, remembered the sweet in the back room. Our informant says that the syrup was allowed to run all the time the employe was kicking himself and all the old horses, barrels and an old iron kettle that stood near. A part of the floor was taken up and the syrup and expended gas was allowed to escape.

In these cold and blustery days when work is slack and money tight, there is nothing that will give a greater return for the money expended than the Young America, made by Kessler Bros.

"The people of this vicinity insist on having Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and do not want any other," says John V. Bishop, of Portland Mills, Indiana. That is right. They know it to be superior to any other for colds, and as a preventive and cure for croup, and why should they not insist upon having it? 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

E. R. Swetnam, of Fairfax Station, Virginia, says: "A party came forty miles to my store for Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and bought a dozen bottles. The remedy is a great favorite in this vicinity and has performed some wonderful cures here." It is intended especially for coughs, cold, croup and whooping cough and is a favorite wherever known. John T. Picker took his pole, line and small fly hook and went up creek Tuesday afternoon to angle for a mess of shiners. After consuming several hours and hooking two or three small specimens, he began to hunger and started homeward; but passing an enticing pool by the wayside, made one more cast. The line jerked, so did John, but it wouldn't come. Then ensued a terrific struggle, but John succeeded in bringing the game to a low spot on the bank, where the fish flopped out on its back, breaking the line, but John was there with both feet and dragged him out to a place of safety. It was a black sucker, weighed 4½ pounds and measured 20 inches.

Court.

The cow case between John Clark and Will Meeks was going on last week. It resulted in favor of Clark. Peter Montavon, of Waterloo, was divorced from second wife, to whom he was married about two years. The case against Wes. Harris was called up—the one for hitting Wm. Derthick with a hammer. Harris has been in jail waiting for trial, though he had been bailed out on a previous case by his brother, Henry. This time Henry very properly concluded to let him go. And he did right, for even had he bailed him out this time, there were other cases waiting that would have put him in again. Ingersoll and Timmerman were called up yesterday and plead guilty to the charge of burglary at Waterloo. They had employed H. J. Shaffer to defend them, but when he found they were wearing the stolen clothes, and had left some of their own clothes in the store that night, he advised them to plead guilty. Judge Emanuel gave them a sensible little talk and then gave Timmerman three years, it being his second offense. Ingersoll got two years. The Harris case was going on when we closed, with P. D. West attorney for the state and Gen. Blair for the defense. For a new man Mr. Emanuel takes hold as judge with a good deal of energy.

Reports were received from the treasurer, clerk and sheriff in regard to fees collected by the sheriff and turned into the county treasury. From these reports it appears that, as shown in our list of allowances, the sheriff had collected fees during the quarter just ended, over and above his salary, $203 50. The fees collected in his office have not so far been enough to pay his salary, and there is still due him on back salary for the previous quarters, $395.31. His regular salary for each quarter is $550, and if he collects less than this, he only gets what he has collected. This term he got the $550 of regular salary and $50.70 on the back amount due him, making the $600.70 as shown in the allowances.

THIS is good advice which the "We" of the Buffalo Times offers to himself: "Let us sober up."

LEST the announcement that the railways have decided to pay no attention to the interstate commerce law may mislead somebody into the belief that the decision is recent, we will state that it is as old as the law.

THE cable brings the information that the Corbett-Jackson fight will undoubtedly take place under the auspices of the National Club in London. If there is no club further away from America which can be induced to take the fight the London Club will do very well.

ROSEBERY is called a young man for the high position of premier. And so he is, by comparison with Mr. Gladstone. But, bless your soul! at 47 Napoleon had lost Waterloo and was cosily locked up in St. Helena reflecting on a career which for twenty years had been on a more exalted plane than the amiable English earl has ever reached. But then a British premier is not expected to be a Napoleon.

IN Germany, too, the work of a great author may be suppressed. One of its courts not long ago ruled that science is free, but the aggressive young Emperor, in the interest of his religion, takes it upon himself to overrule that high status of literary freedom by declaring one of Prof. Haeckel's late essays unsalable. His "Monism, a Scientist's Confession of Faith," is now "police forbidden" in his own country—where it ran through five editions in five months.

THE firing of the great guns with which the ships of foreign nations are provided costs so much money that the practice necessary to secure accuracy in their use is not allowed, and the so-called drills at the guns are for the most part theoretical. The result of the firing in Rio harbor shows that modern artillery is not sufficiently understood to make the gunners proficient. Not only is a small fortune blown away at each discharge of a big gun, but the life of the cannon is measurably shortened.

GENERALLY speaking, the slope of rivers flowing into the Mississippi from the east is, on the average, about three inches per mile. Those entering it from the west have an average descent of about six inches per mile. The average descent per mile of the Missouri after it leaves the mountains is reckoned about a foot; the Des Moines, from its source to its conjunction with the Mississippi, about seven and three-tenths inches. The entire length of the Ohio shows a fall of even five inches. The Mississippi, from the mouth of the Ohio to the Gulf, has a fall of about two and one-half inches.

KENTUCKY editors cannot be too careful about what they print. The citizens of the Blue-grass Commonwealth are touchy and statements published with the most amiable intentions are likely to cause trouble. Here is the editor of the Mount Sterling Times, for example, who printed what he thought was a graceful obituary notice, winding up with the prefunctory statement that "the deceased had gone to a happier home." He is now the defendant in a libel suit brought by the widow of the corpse, and when he goes home after seeing the paper to press he takes the middle of the street and carries his shotgun at full cock. The notice was gratis, too.

DR. HARPER, of Chicago, continues to dispose of Genesis in a manner which is at once learned, candid and gratifying. Speaking of the geneological table of Noah's descendants, the Doctor says: "Do you ask how old this table is? I'll answer you. I don't know." This is straightforward and to the point. There is nothing in it suggestive of the Irishman who, being told to return evasive replies to the questions of an attorney in a lawsuit, answered all the learned gentleman's inquiries by asking in turn: "Was your grandmother a monkey?" Dr. Harper's method is frank, open and candid. He is not evasive, and in that, at least, he had the better of the Irishman, although there is little choice between the two as to the amount of information obtainable.

NEW YORK's crusade against the ferryboat is to be imitated by the Municipal Order League of Chicago, which purposes to begin hostilities against persons who chew tobacco and leave visible reminders thereof in the street cars. The street railway companies have notices posted in the cars requesting passengers not to spit on the floor. These notices might as well be in Sanscrit for all the good they do. The tobacco chewing and expectorating goes on without intermission and without any protest from the conductors. The city health department is to be asked to stop the nuisance, but it is doubtful if it has either the power or the inclination to interfere. The only remedy is to educate the tobacco chewers up to a point where they will voluntarily refrain from working their jaws during the few minutes occupied in a street car journey. Something might be done meanwhile to induce them to roost on the grip car or hang over the dash-board when the craving for the weed is too strong to be resisted.

ONE of the most peculiar wills ever filed for probate in Belgium is that of Mme. Meens, whose first husband bore the name of Verhaegen. Mme. Meens died in Antwerp, a few months ago, leaving her estate to all her relatives up to the twelfth degree of kinship on both the father's and mother's sides of her first husband. The only condition was that they should make good their claims within six months. The news created great interest in Belgium, where the name Verhaegen is a common one. The widow was reputed to be worth hundreds of millions. As a result, the court was obliged to pass upon the alleged rights of 14,554 heirs. The family-tree of one heir alone covers a space sixteen meters square. The poor people are doomed to disappointment, as the estate turned out to be worth only about three millions. So many lawyers have been engaged that their fees alone will swallow up this amount.

CANADA is forced to admit that she cannot even hire immigrants to settle in the Dominion. All sorts of inducements have been offered, including free land, exemption from taxation and a cash bonus. A vast area of unsurpassed agricultural land remains virgin soil in the Northwest because farmers cannot be induced to go there and till it. And now, in seeming despair, the authorities have withdrawn the cash offer and await the consequences. It is a dismal outlook. Emigration from the Dominion more than balances immigration and natural increase of population combined. At the same time the public debt is increasing at an alarming rate. It is over three hundred million dollars, which, per capita, is more than four times the burden of our own national debt. It is the shadow of the British flag that blights the prosperity of Canada. Nowhere else in the three Americas does the emblem of monarchy float.

THE controversy between the Interior Department and a showman who wants the loan of a few dozen Indians for exhibition purposes is not of interest except in a general way. The department refuses to lend the Indians to this showman, while another showman is granted the privilege of taking as many of the nation's wards as he wants. It is to be doubted whether the Indians should be loaned out to any one. Their travels abroad do them no good. On the contrary, the redskin who sees something of the world returns to the reservation dissatisfied with his lot. He usually acquires all the vices of the white man in addition to his own, which are numerous enough. He adds to his already strong craving for whisky, he smokes cigarettes, carries a cane and wears plaid-check trousers. When he comes to return to his native environment of dirt, fleas, government blankets and dog-stew his soul revolts within him and discontent takes the form of running off stock or murdering some one. He is a better Indian when he not allowed to wander from his own fireside.

THE stage is to be elevated again. This time the elevating process is not to be undertaken by a society female with a shady record and a friend with a big bank account, but by the managers of what are known as the cheap theaters—those temples of the drama where the general admission is 15 cents and where half a dollar secures a private box. The managers have formed an alliance against "poor performers and worse dramas," and declare they will no longer allow their audiences to be insulted by actors who cannot act, or be tortured by the productions of authors whose energies could be expended more profitably in the propulsion of wheelbarrows or the manipulation of scoop shovels on the public highways. The reform is a laudable one. Cheap theatricals are not necessarily bad theatricals, any more than high-priced shows are necessarily good shows. Some very good entertainments are given in low-priced theaters, and the man who pays $1.50 for a seat in a fashionable theater does not always get value received. The managers of the popular-priced houses, if they will stick together, can accomplish the desired object, and it wouldn't be a bad idea if their more aristocratic brethren would follow their example.

The Dower Chest.

In Holland the dower chest once formed a part of every bride's equipment. Less portable, but more sightly than the "Saratoga" trunk, it fulfilled its purpose with grace and dignity, passing down as an heirloom from generation to generation. The modern chest is an easy thing to secure, but these the up-to-date girl holds in disdain; her chest must be really antique, of carved oak of English or Flemish make, or elaborately inlaid with marqueterie of colored woods and dated or initialed with figures and characters eloquent of other times and manners. There are very few of the genuine old-fashioned "dower chests" to be seen on this side of the Atlantic. One of them in this city is a very massive affair, weighing several hundred pounds.—Buffalo Commercial.

THE EASTER SYMBOL.

I think of Easter as a dawn:
The flushing skies, the passing cloud,
The fleeing of a sorrow gone,
A presence pure and gentle-browed.

There comes the gloom of morning rays,
There passes all of gloom and sin,
And down the dew-bejeweled ways
The god of summer enters in.

The past is but a shriveled leaf,
A written scroll to fade away,
With all it held of joy or grief
Merged in the glory of to-day.

Sweet hope goes down into the tomb
And takes from death a grander life,
Joy rings across the voice of doom,
And peace is gained by every strife.

The egg expands its pulsing wings,
The twig awakens into flowers,
And from the soul of man there springs
The perfect age of fullest powers.

Over and over all is told,
The stars their orbits still repeat,
Season to season buds unfold,
And worlds and atoms meet and meet.

There is no loss, there is no gain;
There is no waste of time or force;
And every act and thought and pain
Are meeting points in nature's course.

And death is not! the very rocks
Await the resurrection morn;
And fire or storm or change unlocks
The old, and thus the new is born.

So may we live in perfect trust,
And in the tempest stand serene,
For God will re-create the dust
Though countless ages intervene.

The wrong shall vanish in the right,
The evil melt into the good;

For as the day includes the night,
The false is true when understood.

Thus all is rounded in a song—
The song of hope, the song of youth,
The music of a mighty throng
On the eternal hills of Truth.

O Spirit of the Easter time,
To all the sweet assurance give,
And swell the sound in voice and chime:
"Though be ye Dead, yet shall ye Live."
—Richard Lew Dawson.

EASTER MONDAY EGG ROLLING.

A Custom Which Is Peculiar to the White House.

Egg rolling on Easter Monday is a custom which is peculiar to Washington, D. C. No one appears to know its origin, but every Easter Monday, within the memory of the oldest inhabitant, hundreds, and now even thousands, of children have gathered in the "White House lot," the grounds south of the President's house, bringing baskets of gayly colored eggs and spending the day rolling them down the sides of the green knolls and grassy slopes. The day has gradually developed into an almost universal holiday.

EASTER EGG ROLLING AT THE WHITE HOUSE.

The White House grounds are given up to the children from dawn to dark. Fathers, mothers, sisters, aunts, and cousins come to look on, and it is indeed a beautiful sight to watch them as they come from all directions, from near and from far: even before sunrise many may be seen waiting at the closed gates; at 8 o'clock these are opened wide, and the eager children, dressed in holiday attire, flock in, each one carrying a basket or box of colored, hard-boiled eggs.

There is no distinction; all classes and conditions are equally welcome. There is no limit to age; the child who can scarcely walk alone and the girl and boy of 16 are alike welcome. Many of the wee tots are accompanied by colored nurses, who, if we can judge by their dusky faces all aglow with smiles, expect to enjoy the pleasures of the day quite as much as the children.

Some very elegant carriages are driven to the grounds; in fact, before noon there is a long line of them, and the drivers wait for hours while the little people enjoy the sport.

There is a certain way of rolling the eggs, and the tradition is that those who roll the greatest number without breaking any are to be the most successful in life. It is interesting to watch the young folks while they engage in this game, all seeming to fully appreciate the honor of playing hen. They are truly the happiest of children as their merry laugh and joyful exclamations ring and echo throughout the entire domain; nothing rude or discourteous is heard or seen to mar the innocent festivities.

The inclosed grounds consist of about twenty acres, handsomely laid out, containing fountains and many ornamental shrubs and trees, all kept in perfect order. The White House is situated upon a little rise of ground admirably adapted for this recreation of egg-rolling. When the sport ceases the lawn is covered with broken egg shells of various colors.

At 1 o'clock the children partake of their luncheons, which consist largely of cold-boiled eggs. At 2 o'clock the President has a reception for them; he always stands at the door leading from the east room into the large hall, and as they pass through he smiles, speaks a word of welcome to all, and shakes hands with as many as possible; since there are hundreds passing through, it is quite pardonable if a few are overlooked.

This is the only day during the whole year that the little folk are given free access to the White House and its grounds, and they heartily enjoy the privilege.

AN EASTER IDOL.

An Easter Processional.

Let us sing of bright morn breaking
From the glorious east;
Lilies fair their sheaths forsaking;
Larks in light their music making;
Sing the song of wings and waking
That befits our feast!

Apple boughs in white are dressing,
And in heaven's blue arch
Little clouds, like cherubs pressing
Rank on rank with cheeks caressing,
Shed their softness like a blessing
On our joyful march!
—St. Nicholas.

NEW EASTER CARDS.

A Variety of Offerings that Are Calculated to Fit All Tastes.

The display of Easter cards, that have become as much a feature of the religious festival season as the Christmas holidays, is more lavish this year than ever, says a New York paper. Not many new striking designs are to be seen, but the shops given to that sort of thing have filled their windows with a variety calculated to fit any financial posibility, from the humble nickel to the haughty gold eagle. The beauty of the offerings only to be attained by the latter coin is beyond question, but there are plenty of charming things in the smaller and more modest that can happily fulfill their mission as a token of remembrance and regard. One that is especially taking with young people is the novel arrangement of a dove on a card so that when the card is set upright by means of the rest at the back, the handsome bird tilts forward and has an unusually natural appearance of flying. An old church tower and the moon rising over the trees at the back, with other doves hovering about, carry out the pleasing effect.

IN FAVOR WITH YOUNG PEOPLE.

"A JOYFUL EASTER."

A more expensive token is in the form of a garland of Easter songs. This has several trees attractively illuminated with flowers and children amid the words and score of the songs.

Another is a framework of gold and silver, from which hang three bells. Vines twine about the timbers, and doves and flowers below fill out the picture.

Perforated cards with the lettering ornamented with gold and silver and angels' heads at the corners are catching. They are small and cheap. There are also very pretty ones in folding shape that display flowers and appropriate verses when opened.

RINGING OUT THE GLAD TIDINGS.

A graceful card with exquisite coloring is of two calla lilies and clustering forget-me-nots, with a moon and cross in the distance. The sentiment is "A Joyful Easter." The tints are delicate grays, blues, greens and gold. It is as pretty a card for a cheap one as could be wished for.

FROM A GARLAND.

EASTER KISSES IN RUSSIA.

On That Day Even a Peasant May Salute a Princess with His Lips.

There are records of very many curious Easter customs. In Russia, every female, even a princess, must submit to be kissed by the lowest boor who presents her with an egg; but in some parts of England a still more curious, and, if possible, more senseless custom prevailed.

A chair, gayly decked with ribbons and artificial flowers, is placed in front of some inn or house of public resort, upon the seat of which is a raw egg. The chair is attended by a number of gaily dressed damsels, who seize upon any man passing, and, despite his kicking and struggles, seat him with a good hard bounce upon the egg. He is then grasped by a dozen strong hands and lifted bodily, chair and all, in the air, above the heads of the assembled bystanders, lowered, and raised again. This is repeated three times. Instead of being allowed to depart, however, he is embraced, perforce, and kissed by every one of the attendant graces.

An Easter Whipping.

It was nearly dusk. It had been a typical Easter—a beatiful, sunshiny morning. The well-dressed throng of church-goers on their way to morning service had stopped again and again among themselves to comment on the beauty of the day. In the afternoon it had still been clear, but the fresh western wind had begun to blow. And now it was growing late. The fog—the cold, damp, nasty fog—was rolling in from the ocean.

The wind made her shiver as she stood on the street corner.

She was not big enough to be out at that time, when every one was hurrying homeward, even if she had been clad to withstand that western wind. She couldn't have been more than seven.

He came whistling around the corner. He must have been ten, and no cold could get in through the thick overcoat he wore.

"Whatcher cryin' for?"

"I'm cold."

He came up close, looked around to see that no one was looking, whipped off the overcoat and put it around her.

"I've got lots more home."

Then he vanished into the modest little home up the street.

"Where is your overcoat?"

"Lost it."

He got a whipping for being careless, but he'd sooner take ten whippings than confess to anything like soft-heartedness.

How to Prepare Easter Eggs.

One way is to put them for a few minutes in hot water, and then write with tallow a name or design, flower or ornament, on either side of the egg. Then boil it in water in which a colored solution or dye has been put. The color will not adhere to the part of the shell which has been touched with the tallow, and whatever has been drawn will be quite white. Eggs boiled in logwood will be violet or purple, and with a pin or knife one may scratch on the shell any design desired.

THE TAX ON INCOMES.

MANY REASONS ADVANCED IN ITS FAVOR.

Prominent Men Express Themselves on This Important Subject—Flimsy Objections to Free Ore—Weak-kneed Democrats—Protection Forces Immigration.

Millionaires Don't Like It.

The following are extracts from Uriel S. Hall's article in the March Forum:

The wealthy classes of the Eastern States, who are now opposing us in the enactment of this bill, are embarrassing the best friends of a peaceful government. The principle that the wealth of this country should help to bear the burden of national taxation is too well settled by logic, by authority, and by experience, to justify extended argument now. Too often already have members of this Congress been warned that, whenever the richer class should be asked to share the burdens of government, they, prompted by avarice, would denounce the suggestion. It is their position, not mine, that needs defense. In a recent speech in the House of Representatives, I said:

"Were I called upon to frame a law that would keep down demagogy, that would take the last grain of justice from the conglomerate mass of Populistic heresies, it would be an income-tax law." I sincerely feel that every word I said was true. Under our tariff system its burdens are put upon consumption (the necessaries of life that the poor must have or perish) and a poor man with a wife and five children is forced to pay out of his small income a larger sum for the support of the government than is the average man of great wealth and small family. All the greatest authorities on taxation say that the subjects of a nation should be taxed to support that nation according to their ability, not according to the section in which they live; recognizing that we should all be common bearers and common supporters of a common country, ignoring sectionalism.

Senator John Sherman, in a speech delivered in the United States Senate March 15, 1882, uses the following language: "The public mind is not yet prepared to apply the key of a genuine revenue reform. A few years of further experience will convince the whole body of our people that a system of national taxes which rests the whole burden of taxes on consumption, and not one cent on property and income, is intrinsically unjust. While the expenses of the National Government are largely caused by the protection of property, it is but right to call property to contribute to its payment. It will not do to say that each person consumes in proportion to his means. That is not true. Every one must see that the consumption of the rich does not bear the same relation to the consumption of the poor as the income of the rich does to the wages of the poor. As wealth accumulates, this injustice in the fundamental basis of our system will be felt and forced upon the attention of Congress."

Thorold Rogers says: "Taxation in proportion to benefits received is sufficiently near the truth for the practical operations of government." Rousseau and the elder Mirabeau, J. B. Say and Garnier have approved of this system; while Sismondi, in laying down his canons of taxation, declares that "every tax should fall on revenue, not on capital," and that "taxation should never touch what is necessary for the existence of the contributor." John Stuart Mill declares that "equality of taxation, as a maxim of politics, means equality of sacrifice."

If this income-tax bill is defeated, one will be passed in the near future that will be far wider reaching and involving far greater danger of injustice toward wealth.

Week-Kneed Democrats.

The Reform Club of New York had a big tariff-reform meeting in Little Falls, N. Y., on Feb. 22. There was great opposition to the meeting. At 7:30 p. m. the opera-house had not been lighted, but few people had arrived, and the prospects for a successful meeting were not flattering. It was then that the leading Democrats, who had given but half-hearted support to the arrangements, began to decline the honor of acting as Chairman to introduce Mr. W. B. Estell, the speaker. Disgusted at the cowardice of the Democratic politicians, the Reform Club representative at last asked Mr. P. W. Castler, a manufacturer and farmer, but not a politician, if he would preside. He gladly consented to do so. Here is a part of what he said:

We all understand the object of this meeting. Not even the most radical of our Republican friends claim that Democratic laws have caused any of the hard times through which we are passing. They only claim that it is the fear of what may happen should the Wilson bill become a law that has caused the stagnation in trade and the closing up of our mills. In regard to what would be the consequence of the enactment of the Wilson bill, opinions differ, and we have with us to-night a gentleman who will explain most fully the Democratic position of this question, and show you by facts and figures that there can be no question but that the passage of proper tariff reform measures will not only restore our former prosperity, but greatly enhance it. He will also show that the present depression is due, not to Democratic measures or the fear of Democratic measures, but to the condition the country was left in by the actual results of Republican laws and Republican mismanagement. I know that there are many within these walls to-night who are sorry that they voted for Cleveland and a change in the national policy. But I want to tell them that had the Republican party continued their extravagant rule and financial policy we would be suffering ten times as badly to-day as we are now. The condition of these weak-kneed Democrats is the same as was that of many Republicans after the election of Lincoln. They had voted for Lincoln and the abolition of slavery; but when they began to realize what a radical change it would make in the secession of the South and the utter prostration of the business interests of the country, they weakened and were sorry that they voted the right way, and many of the leaders in the Republican party, notably the leader of that party in this State, advocated abandoning the principles upon which Lincoln was elected and allowing slavery not only to continue in the South, but to extend right through the States to California. I believe in the future when we look back to the time when we voted for tariff reform we will do so with as much satisfaction as those who voted for the abolition of slavery and fought and bled for that cause.

Flimsy Objections to Free Ore.

There is no excuse whatever for the opposition to the free-listing of iron ore. The free admission of iron ore—exclusively for the relief of manufacturers on the northeastern seaboard who cannot bring ore from the shores of Lake Superior or the mines of Alabama—would injuriously affect no domestic producer of ore, but would stimulate the entire iron and steel industry. It is announced that Senator Morgan of Alabama "made a vigorous contest" in the caucus for a duty on iron ore. And yet we could quote here pages of effective arguments made in the Senate heretofore by this same Senator Morgan in favor of putting iron ore on the free list. He was right then, and he is wrong now. The free admission of ore would not depress the iron-ore industry in Alabama, where the cost of making iron is now lower than in any other part of the world, nor would it harm the iron-ore industry on the shores of Lake Superior, from which region ore of the first quality is now sold for $2.75 per ton, delivered at Cleveland, Ohio. Even this hitherto unheard-of price will be reduced in the coming season, unless certain powerful capitalists shall succeed in controlling the output and price of ore from the marvelous deposits in the Mesaba district in the interest of the deep mines elsewhere. The obstructionists who oppose the free-listing of ore really have not a leg to stand on. Either they are obstructionists with a sinister or malicious purpose, or they are shamefully ignorant of the actual condition of the iron-ore industry.—New York Times.

Protection Forces Immigration.

Protection does not raise the standard of wages; the most that can be claimed for it is that it enables the manufacturer to pay the existing standard, and that if his protection was withdrawn his labor would engage in other pursuits in which they would receive better wages. It is an admitted fact that, with very few exceptions, the labor in the unprotected receives higher wages than in the protected avocations. I appeal to the wage-workers of the country to witness the fact that the accumulation of surplus labor in this country is constantly increasing and that the competition for work is growing more severe each year. The clamor for a strict enforcement of the laws of immigration as well as the demand for the enactment of more stringent ones attest the truth of this fact.

Nothing, in my judgment, has done so much to overstock our labor market as the enactment of prohibitory duties which exclude the people of other countries from obtaining our food products, and should we continue the same, nothing on earth can check the tide that is flowing in upon us. Our free lands all having been taken up, this immigration will drift into our cities to augment the ranks of the unemployed and increase the competition for work s well as the number to be supported by charity.

I received, a few days ago a letter from a constituent in one of the protected industries protesting against the passage of this bill. It was gentlemanly in tone, and I think contained an honest expression of the writer's opinions. He said, in substance: "I came to this country from England. I received only about the wages there as I do here. About six years ago, in the factory in which I worked, twelve of our number were selected to meet the masters and request an increase of 10 per cent. in wages. They told us they could not give it because the American tariff was in their way, but if we could get that removed they would increase our wages 20 per cent. So I came to this country."

In this letter is an argument that is unanswerable. "The American tariff prohibited the products of my labor from coming to this country, so I came," says this operative. And so others will come. Would not the workingmen in this country be in a better condition with a moderate tariff and an increase of 10 or 20 per cent. in wages in England than they would be with a protective tariff and all the foreign labor in that country here by their side? It illustrates another point—that by excessive protection the wages in foreign countries, which consumes the surplus products of our farms, have been forced down, thereby reducing the demand for our agricultural supplies.

I asserted that protection had broken down our markets; have I not demonstrated the fact? It has done more; it has forced into this country an unnatural and in some degree an undesirable immigration, until the peace and good order of society in our great cities is imperiled. It has destroyed trade, deranged our finances, and paralyzed our business.—From Congressman Bynum's speech in Congress.

For One Year.

The Republican papers took occasion on the 4th of March to indulge in doleful reviews of the condition of the country consequent, as they allege, on one year of Democratic rule. The panic was the creation of the Democracy, according to their logic, but they fail to explain why it has been world-wide in its sweep. Democracy is a pretty big institution, but it hardly determines conditions in Great Britain France, Germany, Italy and creation generally. The Democratic party took power on March 4, 1893, pledged to three things, namely: 1. The repeal of the Sherman silver purchase law. 2. The repeal of the Federal election law. 3. The reform of the McKinley tariff. Within the year they have repealed the Sherman law, they have repealed the Federal election law, and have passed through the House, and have pending in the Senate, a comprehensive plan of tariff reform and revision. The chances are that it will be in operation on the date stipulated in the pending bill—that is, on the 1st of June. That is doing pretty well. The Democracy is willing and proud to stand on its record. If the Republican papers are in a reminiscent mood they will find plenty of material for reflection in a comparison of the condition of the treasury and finance generally when Cleveland gave way to Harrison on the 4th of March, 1889, and the condition on the 4th of March, 1893, when Harrison gave way to Cleveland.—Pittsburg Post.

The Income Tax.

The Senate will bring itself much nearer to the people by a prompt majority for the income tax.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The proposed assessment on incomes for raising revenue for the government would be a rich man's tax. The tariff is a poor man's tax.—Toledo News.

The question has been raised as to how the imposition of an income tax will affect the conduct of impecunious foreigners seeking the hands and fortunes of American heiresses. This is a matter worthy of Congressional investigation.—Detroit Free Press.

A fairly laid income tax is the most just tax that can be levied by the government. Who has a greater interest in the execution of laws for the protection of property than the rich man with a big income, and who is better able to pay for the protection he gets than such a man?—Fort Collins Courier.

The people are becoming very tired of seeing all the national revenues raised by taxes on consumption, so that an income of $1,000,000 a year pays its percentage only on what one man eats and drinks and wears, while a thousand incomes of $1,000 each pay on all that a thousand families eat and drink and wear.—San Francisco Examiner.

Shouldn't Delay Its Passage.

The Syracuse Courier (Dem.) states its belief that neither Senator Hill nor Senator Murphy will finally oppose the Wilson bill, but it adds: "An enemy of the Democratic party, its most bitter partisan opponent, could not select a time more opportune for doing it the greatest injury, by delaying the passage of the Wilson bill, than the present."

THE NATION'S SOLONS.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed, and Acted Upon.

Doings of Congress.

Tuesday in the House was devoted entirely to the consideration of a bill relating to the extension of the time for allowing a street railroad company in Washington to change its system of motive power. The debate rapidly drifted into a discussion of the merits of the cable and the underground electric system, and it was boldly charged that the General Electric and Westinghouse Companies, which held stock in almost all the overhead trolley lines, had retained all the prominent electric engineers in the country and would not spare money to prevent a practical demonstration of the feasibility of the underground electric road now in operation at Buda Pesth and for a short distance on the outskirts of Washington. To prevent this Mr. Wall proposed to restrict the motive system to be used by the Metropolitan Road to underground electric. No conclusion was reached. In the Senate Senator Gallinger presented an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the tariff bill providing that the act shall become operative, so far as importations from Canada are concerned, only by proclamation of the President. The proclamation is to be issued upon conditions specified. Senator Peffer introduced an independent tariff bill in the Senate amending the McKinley law in various particulars. His resolution for an investigation as to whether Senators had been speculating in Wall street was defeated in the Senate.

The proceedings in the Senate Tuesday were of an extremely uninteresting character. Without the intervention of any morning business, except the presentation of a few petitions and the introduction of some unimportant bills, the Senate took up the discussion of the seigniorage bill. Senators Stewart and Lindsay spoke in favor and Mr. Dolph spoke in opposition to it, holding that its passage would destroy the existing equality between gold and silver. Mr. Stewart was unwilling to have the bill amended, for he believed that to return it to the House would be fatal to it. Mr. Stewart delivered a silver speech along the line of his well-known theories. No definite action was taken. The House began the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government, and fair progress was made. Only three amendments of any importance were adopted, one appropriating $43,500 for lighting Hay Lake Channel, another of $64,000 for the public building at Buffalo, and another of $30,000 for repairing the postoffice at New York. The latter was fought by the Appropriation Committee. The only other amendment of importance was one made by Morse (Rep., Mass.) to cut off the appropriation for the Interstate Commerce Commission. This amendment was overwhelmingly defeated.

The Senate spent considerable time on the seigniorage bill Wednesday, and in executive session confirmed the nomination of J. Marshall Wright as naval officer at Philadelphia, but reserved the right to reconsider if found desirable. In the House forty pages of the sundry civil bill were disposed of, making in all eighty-three in two days, and leaving only sixteen pages more, exclusive of two paragraphs, those relating to the coast and geodetic surveys and the Missouri River Commission, which were passed over temporarily. No amendments of importance were adopted, although the Northwestern members made a vigorous effort to increase the amount for the survey of public lands.

The seigniorage bill passed the Senate Thursday by a vote of 45 to 31, after an interesting debate. The Senate then took up and passed the bill to amend an act authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge over the Missouri River at Sioux City. A charter was also granted the Iowa and Nebraska Pontoon Bridge Company authorizing it to build a bridge across the Missouri River near Sioux City. After an executive session of thirty-five minutes the Senate passed a bill granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railroad Company a right of way through the Chippewa and White Earth Indian reservations in Minnesota. Bills to extend the time for completing a bridge across the Missouri River between Kansas City and the town of Sibley, Mo., and granting right of way to the Duluth and Manitoba Railway Company across the Fort Pembina reservation in North Dakota, were passed. In the House the bill to ratify the reservation of certain lands in Oklahoma for the Agricultural College passed. Consideration of the sundry civil bill was resumed.

In the House Friday morning after the passage of a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information as to measures taken by him for local supervision and inspection of public buildings the House went into committee of the whole and resumed consideration of the sundry civil bill. An amendment offered by Mr. Loud, directing the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey to survey San Francisco harbor and approaches thereto, was adopted. To the paragraph appropriating $750,000 for expenditure by the Missouri River Commission Mr. Broderick offered an amendment setting aside $75,000 of the appropriation to strengthen and improve the river banks at Atchison and Leavenworth. Mr. Mercer offered a substitute for the amendment, being to set aside $150,000 of the appropriation for the Missouri River, providing that it should be used for the construction, repair, and maintenance of revetments between the mouth of the Platte River and Sioux City. He insisted that the commission should be made to understand that there was something besides the sixteen-mile reach at Jefferson City which needed attention. The river between Omaha and Council Bluffs should be looked after.

In the House Saturday the Senate amendments to the Senate bill to charter the Iowa and Nebraska Pontoon Bridge Company and to construct a high wagon bridge at Sioux City, Iowa, were agreed to. The House then went into committee of the whole, and the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill was resumed. Mr. Bowers offered an amendment to the appropriation of $20,000 for special council to aid district attorneys so as to provide that $500 of this be expended in the employment of special counsel in the cases of the Southern Pacific Railroad to set aside United States patents now pending at Los Angeles. The Chair ruled the amendment out on the ground that it changed existing laws. The committee then rose. A resolution authorizing the enlisted men of the army and navy to wear a badge on public occasions, on motion of Mr. Outhwaite, was agreed to. The remainder of the day was devoted to eulogies upon the life and character of the late Representative W. H. Enochs, of Ohio.

The Peaceful Sparrows.

My own observations do not tend to an indorsement of the theory that sparrows are quarrelsome, says the writer in Land and Water. The so-called fights are simply affairs of gallantry, commenced by a cock sparrow with half-spread wings and rigid figure, hopping excitedly round a hen who pretends to pick at him. His cries animate every cock within hearing, and all join in the scene with the same noise and gestures. The hen naturally attempts to escape from so embarrassing a situation, but is persistently pursued until it is thought she has been badgered enough. The assistants then sneak off one by one, leaving the end of the affray in precisely the same state as when it commenced, and which finally terminates by each one of the pair going its own road.

The Bear and Boat.

Four men in a boat had an exciting scrimmage with an enormous bear on Lake Whitcom. They were on a fishing trip, and were armed only with an ax and a pistol. They saw it swimming in the water and opened fire. The bear made straight for the bow of the boat, with its eyes like small balls of fire and its mouth wide open. It seized the boat, tearing a piece of wood off the gunwale several inches in length; then, dodging the blows of the ax that were directed at him, bruin gave the side of the boat a swipe with his foot, nearly overturning it. But just then the pistol and ax got in their work, and the bear gave up the fight and the ghost. The carcass was towed ashore and weighed nearly 300 pounds.

AN AUBURN MIRACLE.

AN ACT OF HEROISM IS FOLLOWED BY DIRE RESULTS.

Edward Donnelly Saves a Life Almost at the Cost of His Own—After Years of Suffering He Is Restored to Health—His Story as Told to a Reporter of the Auburn Bulletin.

[Auburn (N. Y.) Bulletin.]

It is on record that upon a chilly April day, a few years ago, an eight-year-old boy fell into the East River at the foot of East Eighth street, New York, and when all efforts to rescue him had failed, Edward Donnelly, at risk of his own life, plunged into the water and, when himself nearly exhausted, saved the boy from drowning. It was a humane and self-sacrificing deed, and received deserved commendation in all the newspapers.

There is a sequel to this accident, however, which thus far has not been published. It is to the effect that Donnelly was paralyzed as a result of the cold plunge and came near dying. Auburn people have known the family since his wife was Amanda Grantman and his sister Mrs. S. D. Corry, of 21 Moravia street. Donnelly himself describes the rescue and the result:

"I was general foreman of the F. A. Mulgrew Saw Mills, foot of Eighth street, New York, on the East River. It was on the 20th of April, 1889, that the boy fell into the river, and I rescued him from drowning. At that time I was in the water so long that I was taken with a deathly chill, and soon became so stiffened up and weak that I could neither work nor walk. For some time I was under treatment of Dr. George McDonald, who said I had Locomotor Ataxia. He finally gave me up, and on the 1st of June, 1892, my wife and I came up to Auburn.

"When the disease first came upon me the numbness began in my heels, and soon the whole of both my feet became affected. There was a cold feeling across the small of my back and downward, and a sense of soreness and a tight pressure on the chest. The numbness gradually extended up both legs and into the lower part of my body. I felt that death was creeping up to my vitals. I was still taking the medicine ('It was Iodide of Potassium,' said his wife), and was being rubbed and having plasters put all over my body, but with no benefit.

"I sent to the Chas. H. Sagar Company, the popular Auburn druggists and chemists, at 109 and 111 Genesee street, and got three boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and began taking them. In three weeks' time I was so improved that from being helpless, I was able to help myself and to get up and go to work, and to walk every day from No. 74 Walnut street, where I then lived, to Osborne's New Twine Factory, Seymour and Cottage streets—more than a mile—where I was then employed, but all the while I was taking Pink Pills.

"Then Dr. Patchen, of Wisconsin, uncle of my wife, and who was here on a visit, began to poo-hoo at me for taking Pink Pills, and finally persuaded me to stop taking them and let him treat me. When he returned to the West he left a prescription with Dr. Hyatt, of Auburn, who also treated me. But their treatment did me no good, and after a while the old trouble returned and I was getting bad again. Then I began to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills; have taken them ever since, am taking them now; have taken in all nearly 20 boxes at an entire cost of less than $10.00 (my other treatment cost me a pile of money), and again I am well and able to work.

"If I was able I would, at my own expense, publish the virtues of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to the whole world, and especially in New York City, where I am much better known than I am here."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People without doubt mark the beginning of a more healthful era. They were first compounded by an eminent practitioner, and used as a prescription for many years in general practice with almost incredible success. They are now given to the public as an unfailing blood-builder and nerve-restorer, curing all forms of weakness arising from a watery condition of the blood or shattered nerves, two fruitful causes of almost every ill that flesh is heir to. These pills are also a specific for the troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, all forms of weakness, chronic constipation, bearing down pains, etc., and in the case of men will give speedy relief and effect a permanent cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork, or excesses of whatever nature. The pills are sold by all dealer, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50—they are never sold in bulk or by the 100) by addressing Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

Knew the Apple.

A man of about 60 years of age went into a store on Main street Wednesday afternoon and stood by the stove warming himself and listening to the conversation of the men present. Happening to glance at a barrel of apples by the counter, he took up one and bit it. He stopped, looked at the apple, and then stopped reflectively. After taking another taste of the apple, he broke out: "Say, I'd almost be willing to bet a dollar that I can tell where this apple grew. There is only one tree on earth that has the flavor that apple has, and it grew back of the house where I first lived when I was married, and set up for myself. Say, now, didn't that apple grow in Bowdoinham? I know full well it did." The clerk told him that a man from that town brought them in, and the stranger said: "I have not been down there for ten years, yes, fifteen, but I remember this bittersweet apple tree, and the apples here taste as they did twenty years ago."—Lewiston Journal.

Untactful.

The pages of amusing literature are stocked with the sayings of honest and untactful people. The following incidents have, moreover, the merit of being strictly true.

A lady who had studied an elementary treatise of astrology one day took it upon her to "cast the horoscope" of a boarding-house acquaintance.

"Let me see," she began, after taking down the day of the "subject's" birth, "you are in Aries. Aries is intellect. Why, no!" she suddenly exclaimed, looking up, as the full force of the definition struck her, "there must be some mistake. You can't be in Aries!"

Another innocently frank person was admiring the baby grandson of a famous man.

"Now," said she, encouragingly, to the parents of the child, "this boy will be a genius. It is perfectly safe to expect it, for you know genius always skips one generation!"

The Land of Promise

Is the mighty West, the land that "tickled with a hoe laughs a harvest;" the El Dorado of the miner; the goal of the agricultural emigrant. While it teems with all the elements of wealth and prosperity, some of the fairest and most fruitful portions of it bear a harvest of malaria reaped in its fullness by those unprotected by a medicinal safeguard. No one seeking or dwelling in a malarial locality is safe from the scourge without Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Emigrants, bear this in mind. Commercial travelers sojourning in malarious regions should carry a bottle of the Bitters in the traditional gripsack. Against the effects of exposure, mental or bodily overwork, damp and unwholesome food or water, it is an infallible defense. Constipation, rheumatism, biliousness, dyspepsia, nervousness and loss of strength are all remedied by this genial restorative.

The Czar's Double.

The Emperor of Russia had up to a short time ago a double in the person of a banker of the name of Carlesben in Copenhagen. Carlesben was introduced some time ago to the Czar, who himself remarked the extraordinary likeness. This proved unfortunate for the banker, who henceforth drove in a carriage and four, and was only too pleased when he was taken for the Emperor of all the Russias. As a result Carlesben went insane on the subject and recently died in a madhouse in the firm faith that he was the Czar.

Tariff and Taxation.

Tariff duties and internal revenue taxation on incomes and corporations are exciting public interest, but of quite as much interest are those things which tax the system and require at once an external remedy. On this subject, with special recommendation, Mr. Pierce D. Brown, Bridgewater, Mass., says: "In accidents from all kinds of athletic sports, to reduce sprains and bruises, I have used St. Jacobs Oil and always found it most reliable." Also, Mr. C. R. Sands, Margum, Okla., writes: "I have used St. Jacobs Oil for sprains and rheumatism and would not be without it for anything." Mr. R. Ledbetter, Denton, Texas, says: "I have used St. Jacobs Oil and it is the only thing I ever saw that would cure toothache in ten minutes' time," and it is usually prompt and sure for frost-bites. All of these communications are of recent date, showing unabated interest.

Wanted to be Safe.

Whether an epithet is libelous or not is determined by law alone. There is a pleasant story of an English gentleman rushing into his friend's chambers in Lincoln's Inn and exclaiming: "Quick! quick! that scoundrel Jones is in Chauncey Lane, and I want a list of all the abusive names I can call him without risk of prosecution."

A Peculiar Measure.

A joker, thinking to get the best of an Irish butcher, went into his shop and gravely demanded a yard of meat. Whereupon the Irishman with equal gravity, went to a pickle barrel and extracting three pig's feet therefrom, silently laid them before the customer, who was obliged to acknowledge that the joke was rather at his own expense.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

This remarkable, almost unheard-of, yield was reported to the John A. Salzer Seed Co., LaCrosse, Wis., by Frank Winter, of Montana, who planted one bushel of Great Northern Oats, carefully tilled and irrigated same, and believes that in 1894 he can grow from one bus. of Great Northern Oats three hundred bushels. It's a wonderful oat. If You Will Cut This Out and Send It with 8c postage to the above firm you will receive sample package of above oats and their farm seed catalogue.

PHILOSOPHERS tell us that from Adam down no man has understood a woman; but men are not tired of trying yet, by any means.

MEDICAL writers claim that the successful remedy for nasal catarrh must be non-irritating, easy of application, and one that will reach the remote sores and ulcerated surfaces. The history of the efforts to treat catarrh is proof positive that only one remedy has completely met these conditions, and that is Ely's Cream Balm. This safe and pleasant remedy has mastered catarrh as nothing else has ever done, and both physicians and patients freely concede this fact.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Sold by all Druggists.

Ely's Cream Balm WILL CURE CATARRH

Price 50 Cents.

Apply Balm into each nostril. ELY BROS., 56 Warren St., N.Y.

Many times women call on their family physicians, suffering, as they imagine, one from dyspepsia, another from heart disease, another from liver or kidney disease, another from nervous exhaustion, or prostration, another with pain here and there, and in this way they all present, alike to themselves and their easy-going and indifferent, or over-busy doctor, separate and distinct diseases, for which he prescribes his pills and potions, assuming them to be such, when, in reality, then are all only symptoms caused by some womb disorder. The physician, ignorant of the cause of suffering, encourages his practice until large bills are made. The suffering patient gets no better, but probably worse by reason of the delay, wrong treatment and consequent complications. A proper medicine, like Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, directed to the cause would have entirely removed the disease, thereby dispelling all those distressing symptoms and instituting comfort instead of prolonged misery.

The lady whose portrait heads this article is Mrs. Ida Coventry, of Huntsville, Logan County, Ohio. She had an experience which we will permit her to relate in her own language. It illustrates the foregoing. She writes: "I had 'female weakness' very bad—in bed most of the time, dragging down pains through my back and hips; no appetite; no energy. The family physician was treating me for 'liver complaint'. I did not get any better under that treatment so I thought I would try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and his 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I felt better before I used one bottle of each. I continued their use until I took six bottles of each. In three months' time I felt so well I did not think it necessary to take any more. In childbirth it does what Dr. Pierce recommends it to do—lessens the pain and perils to both mother and child and shortens 'labor'. I would like to recommend Dr. Pierce's Extract of Smart-Weed to those who have never tried it; it surely is the best thing for cholera morbus, or pain in the stomach I ever used; it works like a charm. I try never to be without it."

The following is from Mrs. Harriet Hards, of Montpelier, Idaho: "I have enjoyed better health since I began treatment with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, for leucorrhœa and uterine debility than I have for sixteen years. I am cured of my trouble, and now weigh one hundred and sixty-six pounds, whereas my weight for many years stood at one hundred and twenty-five pounds. With pleasure, I remain,"

Yours truly,
Mrs. Harriet Hards

The following is from Mrs. M. A. McAllister, of Lim Rock, Jackson Co., Ala.: "I was in bad health; age was working upon me, and I had ulceration of the womb; could not get about. I took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and it cured me; I felt ten years younger. I have not had any return of my trouble. I am the mother of thirteen children and I am fifty-three years old, have never seen a better woman's friend than your medicine. I have recommended it to my friends here, and it has never failed in any case, so let me thank you for the good it did me." Yours truly,
M. A. McAllister

For "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated school teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, general housekeepers, and overworked and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all restorative tonics. It is not a "cure-all," but admirably fulfills a singleness of purpose, being a most potent specific for all those chronic weaknesses and diseases peculiar to women. It is a powerful, general as well as uterine, tonic and nervine, and imparts vigor and strength to the whole system. It cures weakness of the stomach, indigestion, bloating, nervous prostration, hysteria, debility and sleeplessness. A Treatise (100 pages, Illustrated), on "Woman and Her Diseases," sent sealed in plain envelope, on receipt of ten cents to pay postage. Address, World's Dispensary Medical Association, Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y. It contains a vast number of testimonials with half tone, or phototype portraits of their authors and gives the full address of each.

Common Nuisance.

Hank Little, the editor of the Garrett Clipper, has been on another of his protracted drunks. His admirers among the newspaper fraternity should see him on such occasions, which means about half the time. As he turned south around the Sheets block onto Cedar street last week, just able to stand up, tout nose of his reminded one of a lantern on a wreck. People along the streets where he staggers most, are complaining of the disgusting spectacle, and ask why it is that he is not arrested and either made to go home and stay there, or be locked up, so as not to disgrace our streets. He has also started out on the old confidence game of begging money from prominent men. And this is the man, who, assisted by other newspaper men who claim to be more respectable, is giving unlimited advice to the commissioners of DeKalb county how to manage its finances. Drunk or sober, he make a disgusting spectacle of himself.

MR. HOFFELDER ENLIGHTENS THE PRESS.

MR. BARNS.

DEAR SIR: Please give space in the COURIER for the following statement:

Concerning the items in the Waterloo Press in its issue of March 8, I will make a few remarks. It took Mr. Willis nearly two weeks to bring some of his truthful and beneficial information before his readers, after having branded himself as a liar and defamer of the present board of commissioners by passing in silence the repetition of his base charges against them, after having branded the farmers in general as good for nothing, after the acknowledgment of having made a fool of himself, he succeeded in obtaining some more useful information about the St. Clair bridge, which Mr. Willis called the Stroh bridge. But that bridge is far more level than the head of Mr. Willis. Then he blows about the fruitbearing results of his criticism of the contracting of the last bridges. The plans and specifications for that work were discussed last October by the commissioners, and by them only, three months before the Press commenced to criticise the board, and it takes a good deal more experience and better brain than the editor of the Press possesses for such work; but I really pity the man who makes such strange reports to show off or to make a point for himself, and who has the sad misfortune of always being behind time with his useful, beneficial advice. Twenty long years he has to go back to find some stones to throw at the present commissioners. After being challenged to come on with his receiver, he has to bring in his hobby—the "Spencerville township," which, however, existed only in that editor's head, and "why not have a receiver appointed?"

Yes, why does not the editor of the Press, an attorney at law, show to them that ask kindly his advice, the way to carry out his proposition, to bring into effect his proposition? It would make a better point for him than simply asking his silly question that has become too old already. Must not every sensible man laugh at his proceeding after the statement we give? But it seems he enjoys very much to act like the clown in a circus, who, after the performers have finished their parts, imitates them to make the people laugh.

He gives the finishing touch to his items by stating that his office is crowded with callers giving him pointers to go for me, and that those callers consist of two democrats to one republican; and the best sentence coming from the powerful, irresistible pen of the editor will benefit the county at large. What a keen intellect does not his exclamation reveal to his readers! "Oh, John, they are after you and you will never be elected to congress." But since Frank and Hank have formed a covenant, we can hardly tell which is which.

JOHN HOFFELDER.

Colorado's Unique Resort.

From Harper's Weekly.

If there is in all the world a resort like Glenwood Springs, in Colorado, it is modestly hiding its fame in some forgotten corner. The peculiar attraction at this new rendezvous in the heart of the Rockies is an open-air hot-water swimming hole, in which one may bathe just as delightfully when the thermometer is at the freezing point as one does at Narragansett Pier on the hottest midsummer day. The pool is like that at Hollywood, and that only other great bath of the kind which the late Colonel Broadwater established near Helena, Montana. But those other baths are both housed in, while this singular one at Glenwood is covered by nothing but the blue sky, and surrounded or enclosed only by Dame Nature's breath—the atmosphere. Besides, the Glenwood pool is six hundred feet long, and big enough to make the other fashionable pools seem babylike by comparison.

For a long time this beautiful resort was the means of astonishing and delighting the visitors to Colorado in a way that made them certain to remember the place as long as they live. The hospitable people of Denver and the enterprising officers of the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad would keep from such visitors every hint of the true nature of entertainment at Glenwood Springs while carrying them out to the place in the way the journey is always made—in swift trains of the most modern excellence. When the visitors reached the Springs they were certain to be enraptured with the mere view of the place. It is at the very mouth of one of the world-famous canons of Colorado, out of which pours the Grand River, which does not know a commonplace foot in its entire great length. There was the sudden opening of the canon, the view of the widening valley between the mountains; and facing one another, with the river between them, the cozy village and the expensively beautified property at the Springs. However the face of Nature might be dulled by the harsh grasp of winter, the Springs was sure to be as fresh and green as an English garden in May—a little spot of perpetual emerald luster in that gigantic setting. The visitors were glad they came before they knew what they had come for. Then imagine their surprise when some one of their entertainers suddenly appeared in Coney Island surf attire, or, if only men were there, in a mere pair of bathing trunks, unconcernedly approaching the little lake of crystal, or perhaps reclining on its bank, the while that ice silvered the rocks in the river only a few yards away! Whoever ventured thus did so because he knew that the warm pool tempers the air all around it.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

A Regular Sell.

An Irishman in hardest luck
  Had tramped through many states,
And everywhere was badly stuck—
  Against him were the Fates.
His tattered clothes were quite a sight,
  His thin, starved body too.
For nowhere could he get a bite
  Or any work to do.

He reached a city though one day
  And tried to beg a meal,
But every person turned away
  Their anger to conceal.
He asked for work, he was refused,
  For bread, refused again.
Until he felt himself abused
  By all the city men.

While passing by a junk shop which
  A sheeny pedlar owns,
He saw the fellow had got rich
  On buying rags and bones.
Pat thought awhile, and then went in
  To interview the Jew,
And try an honest meal to win,
  As beggers oft will do.

"Good morning sir," said Pat inside
  "Do you buy rags and bones?"
"Vy yes, of course" the Jew replied
  "Dots vy dis store I owns!"
"Well then," said Pat, "my luck prevails
  For once in many a day,
Be jabers! put me on the scales
  And see how much I weigh!"

H. L. BRAMISH.

Jim Meadows' Hobby.

A CHARACTER SKETCH.

AND did I know Jim Meadows? Well, I rather guess I did. The Lord only made a few like him, and I reckon the model's broken long ago."

Cal. Swanley heaved a deep sigh, knocked the ashes from the bowl of his corncob pipe and laid it on the table besidehim. His two companions, fellow occupants of the "bar parlor" in the PalaceHotel, looked at Cal. interrogatively, which plainly meant that they expected him to impart further information.

It could be seen, however, that Cal. was intent upon telling a story whether they wished it or not, so his audience of two settled themselves in their cosy chairs and prepared to listen.

"Seems to me I can see Jim Meadows right now," continued Cal., after a pause, "though he has been dead and gone nigh on five years. He wasn't what you might call a handsome man, though he was quite passable in looks, but the expression on his face used to attract everybody almost at sight. It was just plain good nature, benevolence, generosity, or whatever you call it, and it was written right across his face clear as daylight. Jim was a poor man once—poor as Lazarus, but even then he used to have a reputation for doing uncommon kind acts. They say that when one of his chums, who had a large family to keep, fell sick of the fever, Jim worked overtime for two weeks and did that fellow's work so that the wife and children would not be in want. Children used to run after him and climb upon his shoulders everywhere he went, and many a lot of fruit and candy did he buy for juvenile crowds that followed him. Among the youngsters in the town he was popularly known as Santa Claus, doubtless on account of his goodness of heart.

"Well, one day came the news that Jim Meadows had grown suddenly rich. A distant relative of his had died in Australia, leaving to Jim as next of kin a vast property, said to be worth $100,000. To those who knew the man it was a foregone conclusion what would become of most of the money. Not that Jim was any kind of a fool in spending. He was not a drinking man at all, and of course had no luxurious habits.

But his great desire in life as a poor man was to relieve the wants of humanity, to succor the needy, care for the sick and cheer the unfortunate. As a rich man, therefore, it was but natural that he should put his pet schemes into practice, yet he had his own peculiar way about doing it.

Knowing his disposition, the directors of local charities were not slow in approaching him with appeals for aid to help swell their funds for the poor, but, to the surprise of all, Jim met their overtures with quiet but firm refusals.

"'How much will I subscribe, gentemen? Not a red cent,' he would say emphatically. 'Your ways of feeding the poor and mine differ. No deserving person who needs assistance need wait ten days for it if he or she comes to me. You listen to the pleadings of a starving widow and her children and tell them, in a matter of fact, business kind of way, 'We will have your case investigated as early as possible and then determine what assistance we can give you.' And in the meantime she and her children may starve to death—she may be in her coffin when you have concluded your 'investigation.' I don't believe in theoretical charity. It must be quick, spontaneous, hearty, practical, or it don't amount to a hill of beans.'

"And he wasn't going to squander any money on building or endowing churches, either. Schools he would help, but it was the real, hard working, deserving poor that Jim loved to aid, and he claimed that they wanted their stomachs filled, and their bodies clothed, in a bigger kind of a hurry than they yearned to sit in pews and fall asleep over dull sermons.

"But from the day the lawyers deposited Jim's money in the bank for him, and gave him the pretty little check book to draw whatever sums he wanted, Meadows made it a practice to go around the poorer districts of the town and inquire into the wants and condition of the people. He was like an angel wherever he went, spreading sunshine and happiness in places where he found gloom and sorrow.

"Did Jim hear of a case of sickness where the family was too poor to afford a doctor? He had one there pretty quick, and the physician was commissioned to let no expense bar the way to good diet for the invalid.

"Did he hear of a death in any house where funeral expenses could not be raised, or would be ill afforded? He assumed the responsibility himself and paid all the undertaker's bills.

"Did he hear of an honest bread-winner out of work and with a family looking to him for bread? He took care they had bread, aye, and butter too, for both butcher and grocer received orders to supply the family with such necessaries as were required.

"Did a good and respectable workman need tools before he could start a job? Jim bought them for him. And he never was known to meet a boy or girl upon the street whose shoes or clothing indicated distressful poverty, but their wants in the way of garments were promptly attended to.

"Love him! Bless your hearts, there wasn't a man in all the State more loved than Jim Meadows, and if the prayers of the widow, the orphan, the sick and unemployed have any weight in heaven, there's enough of 'em up there to offset any sins the poor fellow was ever guilty of.

"He used to take the keenest sort of delight in doing good on the quiet, and in unexpected ways. Ever hear of the way he paid off his old score against Tom Moody, the foreman down at Gaspers'? Well, it was this way. Jim and Tom were courting the same girl—the one that is Mrs. Moody now. Tom was of a jealous disposition and began to be very bitter against Jim when he found he was after his girl. So he used his mean influence down at the factory and Jim was thrown out of work without any reason. Soon after that he had his fortune left him, and just about that time Gaspers got in difficulties and they had to shut down the factory the very week after Tom had married. Moody hadn't saved any money for a rainy day, and as a consequence he and his new bride were face to face with poverty and starvation. Yes, and how d'ye think Jim Meadows got in his revenge on Tom for the mean trick he had played on him? He just rented a cosy little house, put $500 worth of furniture in it, and presented it with a year's rent receipt, to Mr. and Mrs. Moody as "a gift from an old friend." That's the sort of man Jim Meadows was.

"He never dressed stylishly or even expensively himself. The plainest kind of clothes were good enough for him. If he was ever told that his coat looked shabby he would quietly say, "Well, I can't afford a new one this month," but he would very likely buy a new suit that very day for some poor devil or another who needed clothing badly. He was frugal in his eating, but nothing was too good for any invalid in whom he took an interest.

"Jim used to go to the police court nearly every morning, not out of a morbid curiosity, but just to see what good he could do the poor wretches who often find their way there. Many a fine he has paid out of his own pocket to set a prisoner free, but he never showed any sympathy for a real criminal unless there seemed to be evidence of a desire to reform. He had a kindly word for all, but his was not mere verbal sympathy, his practical charity went hand in hand with his cheering disposition.

"One night he saved a young girl from suicide. She was one of the class that so-called honest folks turn up their noses at, but nobody was too low for Jim to lift up if he could do it. That girl was tired of her life of shame and wanted to end it in the river, and she would have succeeded if Jim had not happened by at the time and rescued her. She was brought up at the police court after leaving the hospital, but Jim secured her discharge and placed her in charge of a laundry which he had started for just such poor creatures as she. She has led a good life ever since and owns that laundry now herself, but she has never worn anything except black since Jim Meadows died, and she says she never will.

"Once he was told of a poor but proud family, who were living in a somewhat fashionable locality. They had suffered severe reverses and, although brought up in a luxurious way, were now living on almost bread alone. The head of the house was dead; the eldest son had been the sole support of his mother and three sisters since their loss of property, but for the past six weeks he also had been incapacitated for work by illness. Though desperately poor and on the verge of starvation, these people, it was known, were too dignified and proud to accept charity, so what does Jim do but take a few directories to the house and beg the three young ladies to copy the names and addresses for him at $10 a week each. He claimed that he was in a hurry for the work, but he kept them at it nearly six weeks, and it is said that when their labors were completed Jim just piled the manuscripts away in an old tool chest, where they were found years afterwards all mildewed and useless. That's the sort of man Jim Meadows was.

"How did he die? Well now, it does seem a shame that a fellow like Jim ever should die, but the fact is his big fortune dwindled away by reason of his prodigal generosity, and in eight years every cent was gone. Jim was no business man. He had been so much occupied in providing for others that he had forgotten to provide for himself. He never looked after his financial affairs, but just kept drawing money out as he needed it and giving it away right and left. So in the end of course the crash came, and Jim was as poor as ever. He went to work at his old trade, but the thought that he could no longer benefit his fellow man as he used to, preyed upon his mind. He could not bear to look upon suffering and be unable to relieve it, and so, in the course of a very few months, the worry broke down his health, and after a brief spell he died, and his last act was to will all his little personal effects to the poor cobbler who had attended on him in his final days.

"A funeral! Gosh, such a one as that was! There were more real mourners followed Jim to the grave, more tear-stained faces and sorrowing hearts in that sad procession than ever attended any funeral of king, statesman or philosopher. There wasn't a spark of selfishness in Jim's whole nature. All he thought about was helping others, and the grief-stricken crowds that stood around in that cemetery and sobbed aloud in their anguish when that coffin was lowered into the grave, had experienced his generosity themselves. The city put a monument over his head, but bah! what's a piece of cold marble amount to? His name is engraved indelibly in the hearts of thousands, and they will hardly ever tire of telling their children and grandchildren in coming years the sort of man Jim Meadows was."

JOHN S. GREY.

A Mutual Accident.

A girl and her lover once rode on a train
  In the beautiful, bright frosty weather.
One car held alone the young miss and her swain
  And they sat very closely together.
So closely, in fact, that their lips often met
  In long, sweet and impassioned kisses,
Their solitude neither one seemed to regret—
  No vulgar eyes witnessed their blisses!

The course of true love never runs smooth, we know,
  And here was example specific,—
The train on a sudden began to run slow,
  Then stopped with a jerk most terrific!
The couple, quite scared, jumped a distance apart
  With faces that looked very frightened,
A trainman came in and commenced to impart
  A story which should have enlightened.

"Tis an accident slight," reassuring he said,
  And his words were in pleasant tone spoken,
"The engine has parted and run on ahead—
  For the tender attachment is broken!"
The young lady blushed quite as red as a rose,
  As she whispered aside to her lover,
"Why he wasn't looking, yet somehow he knows—
  Our secret how did he discover?"

Costly Things.

The State Capitol at Albany, N. Y., is the costliest building of modern times. Nineteen million six hundred thousand dollars have been expended on it to date. The Capitol at Washington from 1793, when its corner stone was laid, to 1878, had cost, including its expensive furniture, its almost annual alterations and repairs, less than $13,000,000.

The most expensive municipal hall in the world, and the largest in the United States, is the Public Building of Philadelphia. The largest clock in the world is to be in its tower.

The most expensive Legislature in the world is that of France, which costs annually $3,600,000. The Italian Parliament costs $430,000 a year.

The next to the highest price ever paid for a horse in the world was $105,000, for which Axtel, the trotter, was sold in Indiana at the age of three years. On January 11, 1892, Arion was sold by Senator Stanford to I. Malcolm Forbes, of Boston, for $150,000. That beats all prices. Charles Reed, of the Fairview Farm, Tennessee, gave $100,000 for the great stallion, St. Blaise, at a sale in New York in October, 1891.

The most costly book in the world is declared to be a Hebrew Bible now in the Vatican. In 1512 it is said that Pope Julius II. refused to sell the Bible for its weight in gold, which would amount to $163,000. That is the greatest price ever offered for a book.

In 1635 a tulip bulb was sold in Holland for $2,200. It weighed 200 grains.

The costliest meal ever served, according to history, was a supper given by Ælius Verus, one of the most lavish of all the Romans of the latter days, to a dozen guests. The cost was 6,000 sestertia, which would amount to £48,500, or nearly a quarter of a million dollars. A celebrated feast given by Vitellus, a Roman Emperor of those days, to his brother Lucius, cost a little more than $200,000. Suetonius says that the banquet consisted of two thousand different dishes of fish and seven thousand different fowls, besides other courses.

The largest sum ever asked or offered for a single diamond is £430,000, which the Nizam of Hyderabad agreed to give to Mr. Jacobs, the famous jeweler of Simla, for the "Imperial" diamond, which is considered the finest stone in the world.

The costliest toy on record was a broken-nosed wooden horse, which belonged to Napoleon Bonaparte, and was sold a year or two ago for 1000 francs.

The costliest cigars ever brought to this country were of the brand made for the Prince of Wales in Havana, the manufacturer's price for which was $1.87 apiece.

The costliest mats in the world are owned by the Shah of Persia and the Sultan of Turkey. The Shah and Sultan each possess a mat made of pearls and diamonds, valued at more than $2,500,000. The largest mat ever made is owned by the Carlton Club, of London, and is a work of art.

The costliest crown in Europe, experts say, is that worn by the Czar of Russia on state occasions. It is surmounted by a cross formed by four magnificent diamonds, resting upon an immense uncut, but polished, ruby. The ruby rests upon eleven large diamonds, which in turn are supported by a mat of pearls. The coronet of the Empress, it is said, contains the most beautiful mass of diamonds ever collected in one band.

The most expensive royal regalias in the world are those of the Mahajah of Baroda, India. First comes a gorgeous collar containing five hundred diamonds, arranged in five rows, some as large as walnuts. Top and bottom rows of emeralds of equal size relieve the lustre of the diamonds. A pendant is a single brilliant called the "Star of the Deccan." The Maharajah's special carpet, 10 x 6 feet, made of pearls, with a big diamond in the centre and at each corner, cost $1,500,000.

The most valuable gold ore ever mined in the United States, and probably in the world, was a lot containing two hundred pounds of quartz, carrying gold at the rate of $50,000 a ton. It was taken from the main shaft at Ishpeming, Mich.

The greatest sum ever paid for telegraph tolls in one week by a newspaper was the expenditure of the London Times for cable service from Buenos Ayres, during the revolution in the Argentine Republic. The cost of cabling from Buenos Ayres to London was $1.75 a word, and the Times paid out $30,000 for one week's dispatches.

Anecdotes of Actors.

A WRITER says that no vocation in life is so susceptible to the influence of wit and humor as that of the actor. The stage is practically the distributor of amusement, so it is but natural that its votaries should excel in the production of entertaining stories and anecdotes. Many volumes have been published which were devoted to the bright sayings and witty repartee of famous actors, but a few hitherto unpublished anecdotes of living Thespians may prove both new and interesting.

In Nat Goodwin's early days in the profession he had the misfortune to work under a manager who was much addicted to drink, and who, in such cases, became very irritable and quarrelsome. When laboring under the influence, it was not unusual for him to discharge the whole staff, from star down to property man, but of course the company took little notice of these spasmodic ebullitions of temper, as they were pretty well used to him. One night this manager, while morosely nursing one of his periodical "jags" came across Goodwin in the green room.

"See here, Goodwin," said he, trying to steady himself, and closing one eye so as to get the right focus on the comedian. "I've a d——d good notion to discharge you on the spot!"

"No doubt," replied Nat calmly, "and perhaps you would if you were sober enough to find the spot!"

Roland Read boasts of a nasal organ which is certainly not obscure. He has been frequently twitted about his prominent feature, but never more rudely than one winter's day when an acquaintance accosted him on Broadway with, "Hallo, Reed, I met your nose on the other block and it looked awfully cold."

"Can't help it, my boy," replied the comedian without stopping, "I scratched it as far as I could reach!"

Walter Q. Seabrooke was formerly a bank clerk in Mt. Vernon, N. Y. The first position he secured on the stage was at a very lenient salary and he sometimes found it difficult to make ends meet. A Wall Street broker owed him a little money, and one day Seabrooke went to see him with the intention of collecting. While patiently waiting in an ante-room for an interview, another gentleman, evidently a stranger, came in in somewhat of a hurry and asked, "Excuse me, are you the broker?" "No," replied Seabrooke doggedly, "but I'm the fellow that is broke!"

When Henry E. Dixey was playing at the Gaiety Theatre in London he gave a very successful and artistic interpretation of Henry Irving, the popular English tragedian. A certain section of the Cockney play-goers resented Dixey's burlesque, clever as it was. To make fun of Henry Irving seemed almost sacrilegious. Said one bitter critic to Dixey, sarcastically, "But of course you are bound to introduce, that part, as your caricature of Irving is the only 'meat' you have in the play." "Yes, that's so," replied Adonis sadly, "and I'm bound to make game of him, you see!"

De Wolf Hopper, of "Wang" and "Panjandum" fame, as those who have seen him will remember, possesses a pair of wonderfully long legs, which he uses to good purpose in his grotesque and amusing dances. On one occasion the comedian had to travel from the depot to his hotel in the regular stage, which was nearly crowded. The man opposite to Hopper complained loudly about the latter's knees and rather rudely exclaimed, "Your darned legs fill the whole car." "That's nothing," replied Hopper cheerfully, "they frequently fill the whole house!"

JOHN KINGSTON.

Reciprocity.

We were friends of long years standing,
  Jimmy Jones and I, perforce,
With a friendship still expanding
  By continued intercourse.
Till we met a lovely creature
  Like an angel from above,
Beautiful in every feature—
  With her we both fell in love.

Jimmy won her—won her fairly,
  Though I strove to gain her hand
With such loving words as rarely
  I was able to command.
Jimmy married her, and placed her
  In a mansion neat and trim,
When her bridal costume graced her—
  Heavens, how I envied Jim!

Years have passed, and I'm still single,
  Fancy free, enjoying life,
With my friends I daily mingle
  All unmoved by worldly strife.
Jimmy's grown quite thin and weary,
  Quite a saddened man to see—
Married life to him is dreary—
  Mercy, how he envies me!

FRANK PERRETT.

Some Notes on Etiquette.

Don't walk in a stooping posture in public places. It shows bad form.

Never pass bad money in a street car. It is not fare to the conductor.

Don't pick your teeth before company. Go pick them by yourself and pick the best you can get for the money.

It is bad taste to eat peas with a knife, but the peas will taste just as good.

Do not try to kiss strange ladies on the street or you might get a return smack.

Don't write letters to any girl but your own. Courting is all right, but not breach-of-promise courting.

Do not speak insolently to a bigger man than yourself or the result may be striking.

Never eat or drink more than you can carry. You are liable to give yourself a-weigh.

Do not sit opposite a lady in a public conveyance. She is likely to look 'cross at you.

It is not correct to swear before ladies. If they want to swear first, let them do it.

Don't try to have the last word, especially with your wife. That is her prerogative.

Never strike a man when he is down. When he gets up again he might knock the stuffing out of you.

Don't say "No, thank you," when a fellow offers you a 25-cent cigar. It is rude, besides being untruthful. C. S.

Tit For Tat.

Said the landlady, severely,
To her boarder, "It is nearly
Time you came home rather earlier I think,
It was almost three this morning,
And I wish to give you warning
That of sleep I have'nt lately had a wink!

I don't wish to make a strife, sir,
But if I had been your wife sir
And the partner of your sorrows and delights,
On this fact just be relying—
Clubs you'd have to be denying
'For you wouldn't dare to stay out late at nights!"

And the boarder glared upon her
As he said, "Upon my honor
I consider you display an awful gall,
But just let me tell you, madam
Sure as I'm a son of Adam
If you were my wife, I'd not come home at all!"

ALEX T. MORAN.

What She Says When Kissed.

Boston girl—Mr. Bunkerhill, your conduct shocks me beyond utterance.

New York girl—Thanks awfully, don't you know.

Providence girl—Oh, mamma!

Philadelphia girl—Are you sure nobody saw us?

Baltimore girl—Dear George!

Washington Girl—Well, I suppose I'll have to pardon you.

Pittsburg girl—Oh Harry!

Cincinnati girl—What bad form!

Indianapolis girl—Ah, there!

Chicago girl—More! More!

Detroit girl—Well, I declare!

Louisville girl—Yum, yum!

St. Louis girl—How shocking!

Nashville girl—Oo! Oo!

Atlanta girl—Golly!

New Orleans girl—Oh, my!

Kan. City girl—Breakaway, there!

Denver girl—Gosh!

San Francisco girl—Rats!

Texas girl—Whoop la!

Every girl—Oh, don't!

Not Good Enough.

"Keep your own counsel;" the words are a warning
  To all who are apt to be free with the tongue,
Do not such wise admonition be scorning—
  Ponder it deeply, life's duties among.

"Keep your own counsel;" the motto is chiefly
  Meant for the people who chatter too loud,
A bit of advice that is given quite briefly
  To speak not too much of yourself in a crowd.

"Keep your own counsel;" 'tis wiser and better
  Not to talk much of your private affairs,
Gossip is certain to be the begetter
  Of doubts and misgivings, of troubles and cares.

"Keep your own counsel;"—that is, if you're able,
  Mine charges very extravagant fees,
And I doubt if he'd satisfied feel at my table,
  Or whether my bank-book his wants could appease.

Health Maxims.

Don't sleep in a draught.

Don't go to bed with cold feet.

Don't stand over hot-air registers.

Don't try to cool too quickly after exercising.

Don't eat merely to save food and get your money's worth.

Don't sleep in a room without proper ventilation.

Don't stuff a cold lest you be obliged to starve a fever.

Don't neglect constipated bowels.

Don't use your voice much when very hoarse.

Don't try to get along without flannel underclothing in winter.

Don't sleep in the same undergarments you wear during the day.

BANKER—I understand you have discovered a mine of wealth.

BROKER—Yes, but it isn't wealth of mine—it's another fellow's.

Some Proverbs Without Point.

Lights in literature have said that a proverb is the wit of one and the wisdom of many, but there are some in popular use to-day that are open to suspicion as to their wisdom.

For instance, the saying runs "A barking dog seldom bites," but it wouldn't do to risk taking this as a guide or it might mean a frayed pants and afraid man as well.

Then again we have, "A soft answer turneth away wrath." Not always. Just try to whisper quietly that "it is all right" to your landlady when she braces you for the two months' board you owe her, and, however softly you may speak, please take notice it it turns away her wrath much.

Then they say that "a friend in need is a friend indeed." Can't see the force of this. I have several friends who are continually in need and always come to me in that condition. Without detriment to my happiness or pocketbook I could dispense with their friendship.

"Two heads are better than one" is a very popular saying. After a night with the boys one is generally found to be considerably too many.

"Better late than never" does not apply to going to jail, getting a black eye or marrying a shrew.

"Never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day"—unless it be the lending of money, and "sassing" a bigger man than yourself.

"Money makes the mare to go" is just simply an outrageous libel. Nearly every mare I have backed on the strength of this statement either came in last or was left at the post.

"Every dog has his day." That's all right, but I know a few that also claim a large portion of the night to do their howling in.

A very pretty and sentimental proverb reads, "Absence makes the heart grow fonder." Of whom? The adage is not explicit on this point. Does it allude to the "girl I left behind me" or to some other girl whom I may meet?

"No news is good news." Just try to believe this when you are waiting day by day for a remittance and have reached your bottom dollar!

"Where there's a will there's a way." This is about the falsest assertion in the whole of the proverbs and I don't care what it alludes to. I know many deserving fellows who have the will to own a competency and have struggled for it, but no practical way has suggested itself in a lifetime.

This proverb making is a wonderful business, but I don't take much stock in it. JOHN T. DUNNE.

Not a Bit Scared.

Just a frail and timid creature,
Pinched of face and pale of feature,
  And seemingly the weakest of her t.
Five feet high perhaps—no taller,
Not a woman there is smaller,
  But of danger in the crowd she little recks.

Nerves are weak, and brains are swimming
In that surging throng of women,
  And the spirits of the strong are giving way,
Yet that slim and fragile figure
Elbows past a crowd much bigger
  To the counter on this "Special bargain day!"

Bad Thing to Walk On.

JOE.—Talk about fasting! Why Jilkins walked 27 miles the other day on an empty stomach!

JIM.—Why didn't he use his feet instead of his stomach?

Sized Her Up.

"Do you think I am a nice girl?" asked Edith of her lover, as she leaned her 160 pounds on him while they sat in the armchair.

"Nice? Bless you, dear, I think you are immense!" replied the youth fervently.

Smiling Room Needed.

The fellow who laughs in his sleeve
  Should have, we must presume,
If we the statement would believe,
  A lot of "elbow room."

It is Given Him.

The judge may be in greatest haste,
  The jury be quite hurried,
The counsel have no time to waste
  And the witnesses be flurried,
The ushers and spectators, too,
  May think delay a crime,
But the convict one thing has to do
  And that is, "take his time."

Meant the Pawnbroker.

WILD SON—Any relations? yes, one—my uncle!

WRITE

for Dr. Miles' Book on Nervous and Heart Diseases entitled "New and Startling Facts." Everyone should have and read it. Address the President of the DR. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind.

Facts About the Heart

Surprising as it may seem, diseases of two of the most vital portions of the human body have received but little attention from medical writers and investigators. They are those of the heart and nervous system. The former is the hardest worked organ of the body; whose duty it is to keep every part of the human frame constantly supplied with the vital fluid called the blood, and the moment this important organ ceases to beat death ensues, while in the nervous system reside not only the mind but the seat of life, and upon its condition depend the health and activity of the whole or a part of the body. So delicate is the nervous system and so intimately is it connected with the heart, that the prick of a needle, in the upper portion of the spinal cord, where the roots of the nerve which controls the action of the heart are located, will cause instant death.

THE HEART.

Weaknesses and diseases of this organ are therefore exceedingly important, as well as common. High authorities state that one person in four has a defective heart, while those of a whole family are often imperfect, and what is more surprising is that two-thirds of the persons thus affected are not aware of the fact, but in their ignorance, attribute the symptoms of a diseased heart, such as shortness of breath, palpitation, pain in the chest, etc., to other causes. And what is more strange still, physicians commonly make the same mistake. In the first stages of heart disease they almost universally fall into this fatal error, because too little is taught concerning this all important organ in our medical colleges. The symptoms of heart disease are given below, and should be carefully read by everyone.

Scarcely a daily paper can be found that does not contain a notice of the sudden death, from heart disease, of some prominent person who was stricken down without warning while apparently in the best of health and bodily vigor. But this condition was only apparent; premonitory symptoms had long existed but were not recognized, or were attributed to some other affection, as were those of General Sheridan in his first attack, when physicians treated him for derangement of the stomach, but which subsequently proved to be organic disease of the heart. Few physicians are aware of the fact that heart disease is a frequent cause of functional and organic disorders of the stomach, lungs and kidneys. Few persons die of chronic disease af the heart whose stomachs, if examined, would not be found to be affected. The frequent and fatal error is in mistaking the effect for the cause.

The heart is a hollow muscle situated between the lungs, a little to the left of the centre of the chest. In the adult it is about five inches long, three and a half wide and two and a half thick. The average weight in man is three-fourths of a pound, while in woman it is two-thirds. It is divided into halves, the right and the left. Each side is sub-divided into two cavities, as shown in the illustration. The right side of the heart receives the dark blood from the veins of the body, and forces it into the lungs to become purified by coming in contact with the air. While in the lungs the blood throws off carbonic acid gas and absorbs oxygen. This process changes the dark red blood to a bright red. It then returns to the heart, entering the left side; from thence it is forced through the arteries to all parts of the body. The heart contains four sets of valves. Two of these separate the upper and lower cavities of each side. These, like the valve, or sucker in a pump, perform an important duty.

From this necessarily brief description it will be seen that this important organ is quite a complicated machine, and like all other complicated apparatus may readily get out of order, which, experience shows, it often does. Yes, a great deal oftener than people usually imagine. A little investigation will convince any one that there is ample reason why it should, when it is remembered that the heart is but a hollow muscle, and by far the most wonderful and important in the body, and that it works incessantly from the beginning to the end of life. Day and night it labors without rest, performing such an enormous amount of work as to be almost beyond belief. Physiologists inform us that with each pulsation, or contraction, of the heart, it exerts 50 pounds of force, which amounts to 3,600 a minute, 216,000 an hour, and the inconceivable number of 5,184,000 in a single day! Now, it is necessary that all this vast amount of labor should be done, and well done, every day. If not, the health will surely suffer in consequence of the least failure on the part of the heart to perform its duties.

When it is remembered that the lungs are often weak, as are the eyes, stomach, liver, kidneys, and in fact every organ, is it at all surprising that such a hard worked organ as this one should also become weak or diseased? Again, is it astonishing that when injured by overwork, when exhausted by the use of coffee, tobacco and other heart stimulants, or by tight clothing, which interferes with its expansion, rendering its labors more difficult, or by many other causes that might be given, would space permit, that the heart becomes weak or diseased? Nor is it strange that, when thus weakened and exhausted it should suddenly give out in consequence of any undue mental or physical strain, and the possessor drop dead. This can perhaps be intelligently explained by comparing it with the eye.

DILATED HEART.

SYMPTOMS: Debility, Shortness of Breath, Weak Pulse, Fainting and Smothering Spells, Swelling of Ankles, Dropsy.

Contrary to the general supposition, heart disease is as readily benefitted by judicious treatment as disease of any other organ. When people learn to recognize the symptoms of this dread destroyer, they will then readily discover that there are as many defective hearts as there are eyes, lungs, stomachs, kidneys and wombs. It therefore behooves everybody to carefully investigate this interesting and important subject.

There are two classes of heart disease: First, the nervous or functional. Second, the organic, those in which the form or substance of the heart is changed. These two classes are not, as the majority of physicians suppose, distinctly separated from each other. The nervous class is, according to Dr. Miles' extensive experience in treating heart disease, often only the first stage of the organic class. Or, at least, nervous heart troubles, are so frequently followed, in the course of time, by the worst and most fatal forms of disease as to show that nervous affections strongly predispose to form the first stage of the disease. Dr. Miles has kept for years careful record of the cases treated by him. It includes inherited tendencies and the very first symptoms of weakness of the heart observed by the patients. Of thousands of cases thus recorded by the Doctor, most of the worst ones began with the nervous symptoms, which physicians decided were merely due to the stomach or liver.

All who experience any of the following symptoms should promptly secure relief.

Shortness of Breath, Fluttering or Palpitation, Pains in Left Breast, Side, Shoulder or Arm, Neuralgia or Intermittent Pains, Oppressed Feeling in Chest, Choking Sensation in Throat, Weak or Hungry Spells, Dreaming or Nightmare, Smothering Spells, Difficult or Asthmatic Breathing, Swelling of the Feet or Ankles, etc., etc.

HEART DISEASE

is incurable according to most doctors, but recent discoveries have proved that the contrary is true. In medical knowledge there has been rapid progress, the acme of success was reached in the discovery of which not only relieves heart troubles of every kind promptly, but in almost every case effects a permanent cure. Letters are being daily received testifying to the marvelous cures that it has made in cases where the sufferers had been given up to die. No matter how bad or chronic the case may be, "where there is Dr. Miles' Heart Cure there is hope." Preston, Idaho, Dec. 26, '93.

Gentlemen:—I have taken twelve bottles of your Nervine and it has done me much good. I can do now in a day what used to take me a week. I am a music teacher and used to suffer from brain fatigue after protracted work, but now that has entirely left me, and instead of sleepless nights I can sleep soundly for eight or ten hours. For this great relief I give the sole credit to Dr. Miles' Nervine.
Yours truly, PROF. L. D. EDWARDS.

Mrs. Henry Zorn, of 106 Rosette St., New Haven, Ct., writes:—
"I feel it my duty to tell what your Nervine has done for me. I had suffered nearly 3 years with my head. First I had severe headaches and during the last year dizziness, pressure and throbbing in the brain. I have taken three bottles of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, and my head is nearly well.

Gentlemen:—Your Restorative Nervine has done me great good. For years I have not felt so well as now. The starting point of my disease was a sunstroke received in battle before Port Hudson, La., June 14, 1863. Up to the time of beginning to take Dr. Miles' Nervine I had continual distracting pain in my head, also weak spells, and the previous four years I had to give up everything of an active character. I know, however, your remedy has cured me, and think the cure will be permanent. Your truly,
Dayton, O. COL. C. W. DEAN.

"Last February I felt very ill. Consulting our home physicians, they pronounced it womb trouble of long standing. The doctor said I must go to the hospital and have an operation performed—it was all that would help me. They performed the operation, but I was no better mentally when I returned home. One morning a friend told me of your remedies. I had no faith, but thought I would try them. My husband got me a bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine, and that night I slept well and commenced to get better right along." MRS. T. C. SALT, Osseo, Wis.

Dr. Miles Medical Co.:
My heart was so deranged that at times my pulse would get so very weak that it was very difficult to keep up circulation. I could not sleep well. Was subject to distressing pains in back of head. My physician treated me for sympathetic heart trouble, doing me no good whatever. In fact he plainly told me he could not cure me. I have used 3 bottles of Nervine and am thankful to say I have been relieved of all my bad symptoms.
Fargo, Ind. ARTHUR CRITCHFIELD.

Specht, Ohio, Sept. 18, '93.
Gentlemen:—I have waited to see if my old trouble would return, before writing you concerning your medicine. I have taken 1½ bottles of Nervine and think the other ½ bottle will cure me entirely. My arms, that were once so painful, are now quite well. I would not have them the say they were for any money. I recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted as I was, for I am greatly relieved. You can publish this if you wish.
Yours truly, MRS. M. J. TOPE.

Gentlemen:—You know more about the horrible distressed feeling of a nervous person than my pen can describe, but I desire to say that about four weeks ago I could not walk across the floor, I was so weak. My brother got me a bottle of your Nervine and after taking a few doses I felt better. When the bottle was all used I was able to be at my work again. Yours truly, A. E. CRAWFORD.
Anderson, Ind., Aug. 8 1893.

Gentlemen:—For 8 years I suffered from nervous prostration, sleeplessness, nervous debility, headache, in fact, life was miserable. One bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine cured me. It is a wonderful remedy. Mrs. A. M. Hanna.
Buffalo, N. Y.

Mrs. J. Gardner, of Vistula, Ind., wrote us 6 years ago:—For eight years I was subject to spasms. Some days I would have from forty to fifty and would remain unconscious for hours and my joints would become stiff. I was long subject to severe headaches, dizziness, back ache and palpitation of the heart, and was unfit for work. After taking Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine a while I was entirely cured. The same lady writes from Goshen, Ind., June 3, '93:—I have not had a spasm since being cured five years ago.

Gentlemen:—I cannot describe the numb, creepy sensation that existed in my arms, hands and legs. In addition I had a strange weakness in my back and around my waist. Physicians said it was creeping paralysis. I procured a bottle of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and began using it. Marvelous as it may seem, but a few days had passed before every bit of that creepy feeling had left me, and there has not been even the slightest indication of its return.
LaRue, Ohio. JAMES KANE.

"I had some kind of disease for 3 years, and went to our family physician and stated my case to him and he gave me medicine for malaria. This did me no good. I had become so weak that I could scarcely do any work, and could not sleep more than 3 hours any night. I felt blue, despondent and miserable. I bought a bottle of your Nervine and tried it. After taking 3 bottles I feel perfectly well and can sleep soundly.
Asherville, Kan. H. P. EVANS.

Last year extreme nervousness manifested itself in my condition. I kept growing worse from day to day until I lost my speech and all control of myself. I knew what was going on about me, but was helpless. I began to recover my speech and power to walk, owing entirely to the use of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, and after using this wonderful remedy several months I was perfectly well, greatly to the astonishment of those who knew of my case.
MISS GENA HULL, Waukesha, Wis.

Ringwood, Ill., Oct. 17 1893.
Gentlemen:—I have been taking your Restorative Nervine for the past three months and I cannot say enough by way of praise. I am satisfied that it has saved my life, for I had almost given up hope of ever being well again. I was a chronic sufferer from nervousness, and could not sleep at nights. I was also troubled with nervous headache and had tried doctors in vain, until I tried your Nervine. Wishing you every success.
Yours truly, MRS. M. WOOD.

I had been afflicted with epilepsy nineteen years in very severe form. An acquaintance, who had used your Nervine with excellent results, recommended it to me, and I purchased a bottle, the only one I have used so far. Its effect has been wonderful, as, since beginning its use, I have had but two spells. I shall continue the Nervine until completely cured. My general health is now excellent, and I sleep well. If my statement can do humanity any good I am pleased to give it.
WILLIAM HEARKLESS.
Kennard, Ind., Feb. 15, 1893.

Gentlemen:—Your Restorative Nervine has worked wonders for our daughter Blanche, now 15 years of age. She had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and had lost the use of her right arm. She was in such a condition we feared St. Vitus dance, and are positive that but for your invaluable remedy she would have had that affliction. She took three bottles of Nervine and has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid, and no money could procure for our daughter the health Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine has brought her.
MRS. E. BULLOCK, Brighton, N. Y.

My wife was suffering with a swelling inside the head, behind the ear, which caused her extreme pain. Doctors were unable to relieve her, and finally agreed nothing would help her but an operation, which was the cutting open of the skull and extraction of the formed matter. We were about to consent to this when a neighbor besought us to try your Nervine and the result was wonderful! When the doctors came to perform the dangerous operation it was unnecessary. A better agent had already done the healing work."—S. A. HARBURG, "Fidibus," Denver, Colo.

Greenwood, N. C., Oct. 1 1892.
Dr. Miles Medical Co.:
Gentlemen:—My condition was such that I could not rest nor sleep, day or night. My terrible sufferings were caused by a nervous disease. In all I have taken six bottles of your Nervine. I took it as directed and now I can eat and sleep as good as ever. I cheerfully testify that your medicines are safe and effectual. Yours truly, MRS. L. WICKER.

Gentlemen:— I cannot give you and your medicines praise enough, they have done me so much good. The doctors here are surprised that I have been at work all spring, for they thought I would never be able to work again. Your curing me has given you a great name here. I was troubled for many years with a severe affection of the heart and was unable to get relief in any way, until I began to use Dr. Miles' Nervine. This remedy has restored me to my former good health and I therefore cheerfully recommend it.
DANIEL WOOD.
South Muscatine, Iowa.

Gentlemen:—As I have been greatly benefitted by the use of your Nervine, I send you this testimonial, which you are at liberty to use where and when you please. I was troubled with severe headache, indigestion, constipation and general debility, with pains in left side, between shoulders, and sore spot on stomach for the last 22 years. I have tried some of our best physicians during that time, but never received any but temporary relief. Five years ago I took treatment for three months from Dr. Miles himself, and found great relief. My wife was also ailing for over a year, but a few doses of your Nervine soon cured her.

DR. MILES'

RESTORATIVE NERVINE

THE ONLY REMEDY FOR NERVOUS DISEASES ADMITTED TO THE WORLD'S FAIR

It is well to bear in mind that Dr. Miles was the first to place before the public a scientific remedy for the treatment of nervous diseases—a remedy that was the result of years of careful study and patient investigation. The remarkable success of the Restorative Nervine has attracted much attention, and as a consequence today Dr. Miles has many imitators, who advertise remedies to cure nervous diseases. A careful investigation of the advertisements of these imitators will show that they are attempting to sell their medicines by means of a great flourish of trumpets rather than upon their merits as scientific and reliable remedies. "Be ye not deceived."

The following list of affections will give those persons who have paid little attention to the subject an idea of the number and variety of nervous diseases, for which Dr. Miles' great Restorative Nervine, a brain and nerve food as well as medicine, is a new and remarkable remedy. As a very general rule nervous troubles are not well understood. Most people imagine that to have a nervous disorder one must be nervous—shaky. This is a great error. A large proportion of people afflicted with this class of diseases are not at all nervous. Nervous diseases include all affections of the brain, spinal cord or nerves. Thus all head troubles, such as fits, headache, dizziness, dullness, pressure, the blues, mania, melancholy and insanity are nervous disorders, no matter how caused; pain or congestion in the spinal cord, which constitutes most backaches, tenderness of back, etc., are spinal or nervous diseases; Neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, Cramps, etc., are nervous troubles. So, too, are a large class of disorders which arise from a weakness of the nerves of an organ or part, as weak lungs, heart, stomach, kidneys, bladder, eyes, etc.

Apoplexy.— Dr. Wright says; "In advancing life there is associated with headache, dizziness, dullness, etc., a great danger of a far more serious disease, namely, apoplexy, and it is fortunate if it affords you timely warning before the blood vessels give way and the effusion of blood takes place."

Backache—Is usually caused by an irritable or congested state of the spinal cord. It is of the same nature as headache, differing only in location. Dr. Miles has met with many cases in his private practice in which headache would extend to the back, while in many others the pain would entirely leave the head and go to the back. Not a few people have a weak back for several days after headache.

Bilious Attacks.—Biliousness is of two kinds, one being caused by malarial germs in the system, which disturb the stomach and liver; the other form is purely nervous, and is due, like sick headache, to an irritable condition of the brain and upper portion of the spinal cord which derange the nerves going from the upper part of the cord to these organs. See Sick Headache. If the Restorative Nervine is taken in three teaspoonful doses at the very beginning of the attack, before the stomach is much disturbed, the attack will almost always be prevented.

Blues, Melancholy.—These are not imaginary complaints, as some uncharitable and not well-posted people believe. They are as distinct diseases as headache or neuralgia, with which they are often associated. They are the result of an irritable and exhausted condition of the brain.

Coughs, Colds.—People who take cold easily have a weak nervous system. Colds are the result of an external irritation applied to the nerves. Thus a person with a weak nervous system gets wet feet. The effects are conveyed by the nerves to the throat, lungs, womb, etc., where the cold settles.

Cold Hands and Feet.—This disorder always indicates a chronic weakness or irritable state of the nervous system. People who have much headache, backache or neuralgia usually have cold extremities. They do not, as most persons suppose, indicate a want of blood, but an imperfect distribution of it. Just the same as during a headache or chill they get cold. When the nervous system is chronically weakened the hands and feet remain cold. This is especially true of those persons who are subject to some head trouble. Cure the nervous disorder and they always become warm.

Cramps—Are always caused by an irritation of the nerves. They are local spasms. The nervous system should be treated. Use the Restorative Nervine with confidence. It has performed many wonderful cures.

Delirium Tremens,—Drunkenness, Dipsomania. Alcoholic beverages act powerfully upon the brain and nervous system. Many persons inherit a love of drink, which may be so strong as to constitute a form of mania. Delirium tremens is an acute form of insanity caused by the prolonged or excessive use of alcoholics. The long continued use of intoxicating drinks produces many derangements of the system, which are not recognized by the patient. One of the first is an irritable stomach, attended with loss of appetite, nausea and vomiting mornings; called the dry vomit of drunkards. Neuralgic pains in the bowels, limbs, etc., frequently attend the habitual use of liquors. The liver commonly becomes diseased and the whole nervous system impaired.

Dizziness.—Dullness, Vertigo, Heaviness, Pressure in the head and many other disagreeable brain symptoms, wear out the brain and nerves. Causes and treatment the same as for headache.

Fits—Epilepsy.—From the time of Hippocrates until within a few years past this fearful disease has been treated by the medical profession in vain. There are two varieties of this disorder, the first or severe form is characterized by convulsions and complete loss of consciousness. The attack usually begins with a cry. The patient falls insensible, the face becomes pale, the head is drawn backward or sidewise, the mouth froths; the teeth are ground together, the tongue is often bitten. The convulsion lasts from two to five minutes, when it gradually subsides and consciousness returns, the patient falls into a deep sleep, from which he awakes with a feeling of exhaustion and confusion of the mind. In the second or lighter form, known as epileptic vertigo or petitmal, the person suddenly stops; then goes on as usual. In other cases there is a sudden dizziness, a partial or momentary loss of consciousness, after a few minutes the "queer spell" passes off and the patient looks around with astonishment. Between these two extremes there are many intermediate forms. In course of time the mind becomes affected, the memory fails, the judgment is impaired, the wretched being becomes irritable, melancholy and morose. The worst cases terminate in insanity or idiocy. The chief cause of this frightful disease is an inherited tendency to nervous disease. Headache in the parents is the most common cause of epilepsy in the offspring. The two affections are very closely related; many medical writers have observed this fact. Professor Edward Liveing, of London, says in his able work on "Headache:" "I have dwelt thus at length on the epileptic affinities of headache because they are the most important." Dr. Marshall Hall states that headache, epilepsy, apoplexy, paralysis and mania form a natural group of diseases which are very intimately related.

Headache.—Sick, Nervous or Bilious, Dizziness, Dullness, Pressure, Etc. That repeated or prolonged attacks of these disorders of the brain predispose it to many forms of disease can be proven by quotations from a large number of eminent medical writers. The poor memory, excessive irritability and nervousness which so frequently result from repeated attacks of headache, indicate in an unmistakable manner that the nutrition of the brain, and consequently its power of resisting disease, is impaired. In almost every case of apoplexy, paralysis, insanity, epileptic convulsions, sunstroke, inflammation of the brain, etc., there has previously been much headache.

Dr. Wright, in his popular treatise on "Headache," remarks: "I am convinced that it is unwise ever to neglect a headache." In his late work on the same subject Dr. Day states that "no parent should ever neglect a headache in a child;" and Professor Wood, in his "Practice and Medicine," emphatically declares that "its indications should never be neglected."

There is a marked tendency for headache—like many other disorders—to be inherited. "When we consider," says Professor Day, "the disorders of the brain and nervous system, there are few sensible parents who will not admit that headache is an affection more frequently hereditary than almost any other." Many other authorities could be cited to the same effect. In the case of one patient whom Dr. Miles cured of long-continued headache, thirteen members of his family were subject to it. Headache tends to shorten life in many ways: (1.) By causing more or less nervous exhaustion, especially of the nerve centers, which in turn affect the whole body, (2.) by inducing other forms of disease which tend to shorten life, as epilepsy, insanity, heart disease, brain disease, apoplexy, etc. Dr. Miles has never known a person to have brain fever, sunstroke, congestion of the brain or apoplexy who had not been subject to headache.

It is well known to oculists that persons having weak eyes, which are always more or less congested, are much more liable to have inflammation of these organs than those who have strong ones. In like manner it can readily be seen that persons subject to headache are much more liable to disease of the brain, as it is an easy matter for the congestion, which accompanies all headaches, to be fanned into inflammation.

Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Bilious Attacks, Sick Giddiness. We speak of sick headache more at length, than any other form of this affection, as it is a typical nervous disorder, and the one with which the majority of people are most familiar. Not only are the masses in almost entire ignorance as to its true nature, but also physicians. It is commonly supposed that sick headache is caused by some derangement of the stomach or liver. This theory is unscientific and not sustained by facts. Everybody knows that injuries and diseases of the brain often produce vomiting; that the mental impression resulting from the sight of a disgusting object will cause sickness of the stomach in many persons. Dr. Miles has demonstrated that sick headache is also due to a disturbance of the brain. Out of 632 cases of this order, of which he has kept careful record during the last few years, every patient stated that the first symptoms of an attack were always felt in the head, and in some cases hours elapsed before the stomach became deranged. Sick headache after a few years usually changes into the nervous form. That is, the stomach is less frequently irritated by the disturbance of the brain. How the state of the brain influences the condition of the stomach, heart, liver and bowels is readily explained. Now, physiologists have demonstrated that a serious injury to the pneumogastric nerve will cause instant death by paralyzing the heart, lungs and stomach. Therefore, any disturbance at the base of the brain, it can be readily perceived, may, and often does, derange the stomach, heart and lungs. In this manner vomiting, nervous dyspepsia, palpitation of the heart, and asthma are often caused, to say nothing of the many other affections. The reason why every headache does not cause sickness at the stomach is that the disturbance of the brain does not alway reach to the roots of this nerve. This is but one of the numberless other diseases that originate in the nervous system, and concerning the true nature of which physicians are greatly mistaken. Thus, Dr. Miles has discovered that many bilious attacks, nervous dyspepsias, pains in the stomach and bowels, disorders of the liver, heart, lungs, etc., are due to irritation of the nerve centers in the brain.

Hay Fever, Rose Cold, Influenza.—These affections are known to be due to a weakened or susceptible condition of the nerves supplying the nose, throat and lungs, which render them easily affected by vegetable emanations. Very many bad cases have been cured and nearly every one helped by the Restorative Nervine. When possible, commence taking it two or more weeks before the attack is anticipated.

Hot Flashes—Rush of Blood to the Head, Nervous Chills, Numbness, Tenderness of the Scalp, Irritability of Temper, Poor Memory. These are symptoms frequently met with in persons of a weak nervous system; they are due to nervous irritability or exhaustion. For them the Restorative Nervine is a good remedy.

Hysteria.—Excessive Nervousness. There are many more hysterical persons than is usually supposed. There are all degrees of it, from impulsiveness to convulsions. Hysterical people act in haste to repent at leisure. They are easily elated or depressed, owing to a defect in the nerve centers. Some will cry one moment and laugh the next. Their feelings are often stronger than their will. Hysteria is, in reality, like many other weak diseases—not a disease itself, but the effect of one or more derangements of the nervous system. Thus, when a person is subject to headache, weakness of the heart, etc., for some years, the nerves are worn out and become very weak, or, in other words, hysterical. No single remedy is better than the Restorative Nervine. Every case will be benefitted from its use, and not a small portion entirely cured; but, in some cases, other treatment should be resorted to.

Insanity—Mania, Melancholy. In extreme cases these maladies can best be treated by some specialist, or in an institution for that purpose, where special treatment can be given. In mild cases, or where the services of an expert cannot be had, few remedies will act better than the Nervine. It should be taken in large doses, that sleep and quiet may be produced.

Monthly Pains,—And Too Frequent or Profuse Menses.—These are always due to an irritable state of the uterine nerves. The Restorative Nervine seldom fails to cure them.

Nervous Dyspepsia.—At least five-sixths of the cases of dyspepsia arise, not from an inflamed stomach, but from a weakened, debilitated, overworked condition of the nerves which control the action of this organ. The brain has a remarkable influence over the nerves of the stomach. Care, anxiety, headache, dizziness, etc., greatly weaken these nerves. Thus bad news destroys the appetite. Merchants during panics are noted for being a class of dyspeptics. No people in the world use their brains so excessively as Americans, and none are so subject to this complaint. The Restorative Nervine soon soothes the brain, strengthens the nerves and cures the dyspepsia or indigestion.

Nervous Prostration.—Nervousness, Nervous Exhaustion.—Nervousness is really a nervelessness, a weakness. It is the same as nervous prostration, only of a less degree. It is often caused by such forms of nervous irritations as headache, dizziness, sleeplessness, care, anxiety, weakness of the heart, stomach, etc.

Opium and Morphine Habits are affections of the nervous system. These drugs, like alcoholics, act in small quantities as stimulants to the brain and nerves. After being taken for a time the effect upon the nervous system is such that it becomes a habit that is very difficult to break. But by the aid of the soothing qualities of the Restorative Nervine anyone possessing a little resolution can break off this disagreeable, expensive and soul-destroying habit.

Palpitation or Fluttering of the Heart is always an indication of a weak heart, and is due to weakness of the cardiac nerves. It is not the harmless affection usually regarded by the physicians.

Rheumatism was formerly believed to originate in the blood, but is now known to be a nervous disease, like neuralgia, headache, etc. This explains why it may go from one part of the body to another so readily, like neuralgia. Were it a blood trouble every joint would be affected at the same time. By soothing and strengthening the nervous system, Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, when taken as directed, is a remarkable remedy for this obstinate and painful disorder.

Sleeplessness is due to an irritation or congested condition of the brain, the same as headache. It soon causes nervous prostration and usually precedes insanity.

Spasms, Convulsions, Etc.—No remedy has ever been discovered that cures a larger proportion of cases of this frightful disease than the Restorative Nervine. If a child or adult shows any signs of going into spasms a dose or two will prevent it. If necessary the dose may be repeated often.

St. Vitus Dance or Chorea is a typical nervous disease. The Restorative Nervine soon gains a remarkable reputation, whenever it is introduced, for curing this malady.

Spinal Irritation.—An irritable or congested condition of the spinal cord commonly causes tenderness of the spine, crawling, creeping and burning sensations and backache. The Restorative Nervine is a reliable medicine for them.

For all the above diseases Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine will be found the best known remedy. It is obtainable at any drugstore at $1 per bottle, or will be sent, prepaid, on receipt of price by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

Gentlemen:—I had been sinking in health for some time and was not able to work but a few hours daily. Accidentally I heard of Dr. Miles' Nervine and bought a bottle. Before I had taken half of it I could work a full day and since I have regained my former health my friends have expressed much astonishment. They told me they thought I would be dead before this. Perhaps I might be had I not used your Nervine. You are at liberty to use this if you wish.

Gentlemen:—My daughter Fannie commenced to have spasms when she was two weeks old and has continued to have them at intervals up to recently. Just before commencing the use of your Nervine in January of this year her spasms were very severe, more like fits, in fact. Since taking twelve bottles of your Nervine she has not had a single spasm. She is now better and stronger. We are thankful for the benefit she derived from your medicine. F. E. MAYFIELD.

Fairbanks, Maine, Oct. 20, 1893.
Gentlemen:—I tried the first bottle of your medicine about a year ago, and have waited to see the results before writing you. I honestly think it has saved my life. I had a pain around the heart and in my shoulders, side and arms. When I commenced taking the medicine I could do no work, but now I work every day. I had employed two of the best doctors in the country and they did me no good, but your medicine certainly did.
Yours truly, E. S. BRAGG.

The Dr. Miles Medical Co.:
Gentlemen:—I will have to say a good word for your Nervine. I have been a sufferer from dyspepsia for over eight years, and tried a good many doctors and different medicines in hope of being cured, but I was unsuccessful until I tried your remedy. I used three bottles of Nervine and now feel as well as I ever did. Have gained twelve pounds since I began using it. I remain

Fighting the Good Fight.

The following is a synopsis of a sermon by Rev. Dr. Henry Johnson at South Bend, March 11, and taken from the Daily Tribune of that city:

I have fought a good fight.—Second Timothy 4:7.

Travelers tell us that in one of the galleries at Rome there is a beautiful fragment of an ancient Greek statue. It is known as the Torso. Michael Angelo used to stand in its presence and catch inspiration for his sublime work. The spirit of the old Greek artist seemed to touch the great Italian through the cold marble. But what is true of the beautiful fragment that has come down to us from the old Greek world, is equally true of a human character. Such a character was St. Paul, the apostle. He stood near his divine Master. The spirit of Christ touches you and glows in the character of his apostle. But when does a man fight a good fight? Well, when he realizes God's ideal in the world. That ideal glows on the inspired page of Genesis. Man was the beginning of a new order of beings. There had existed the angel and the animal. But when man was created there was formed the sublime compound of angel and animal. Man is the world formed by the union of the two hemispheres. Upon his creation God hung in His sky the sublime ideal to subdue and replenish the earth. He was to get dominion in the air and on the sea and on the land. He was to subdue the earth. He was to fell its forests, drain its marshes, plow its fields, tunnel its mountains, build its cities, bridge its streams and replenish it with the creations of hand and brain. But not only was he to subdue the face of the globe. He was also to subdue its sublime forces. He was to break the rocks and open the mines and compel them to give up their secrets He was to unlock the block of coal and extract its sun force that he might move his ship over the sea and propel his palace car over the continent. He must compel steam and gravitation and lightning to do his bidding He has just fairly begun to subdue electricity. In its application as man's servant it is just in its infancy. It is only a dream yet, only a prophecy. Its progress during the next 50 years will be marvelous With it man is to light and warm his home, propel his ship and car, send his thought over the globe—run the machinery of his factory and make brilliant his city. Its new applications will surpass our fondest dreams. But did the sublime tragedy of Eden modify somewhat the lofty ideal given to man at his creation. It may have retarded its realization, but man's sin cannot defeat God's purpose. He will over-rule it to His glory. Upon the tragedy of the Garden God wrote on the sky of man's future the promise of redemption. Sin is the dark shadow in the picture that brings God's mercy into the clearer light. With the tragedy of Eden as the background we see as never before, the height and depth and length and breadth of God's everlasting love. But man also fights a good fight when he realizes Biblical ideal of christian character. When the spirit renews us and gives to us the new life through faith in Christ, the angel in us comes to the front and the animal retreats. In a word, we enthrone the new man and dethrone the old man. The angel in us has freedom, and by the grace of God can bring the animal into subjection. The promise is "Sin shall not have dominion over you, for ye are not under the law, but under grace." But through the years we grow and our character is becoming more Christ-like. In no one hour of our progress here below can we claim perfection. The sea is yet to be crossed and the mountain to be climbed The ideal is still before us and we work towards its realization. As the chisel of the Angelo brings greatness out of the marble, so the grace of God brings out the angel in man through the years. God in Christ will flood the soul with love as the solar sun fills the world with light. Our apostle wrote; "By the grace of God, I am what I am." He gave Christ, his divine Lord, all the glory for what he had become in character. The ideal toward which we move is Christ. He is the ideal man of history and of the universe. The inspired pages glow with the promise that we are to be like Him. For in some future hour we are to see Him as He is. Then the angel man in us will have realized by the grace of God its lofty ideal. All hail to the hope that we are to be like Christ in character. But a good fight is faught also when we have by faith in the risen Lord overcome the fear of death. The apostle welcomed his going Hope burned in his soul and his departure was to him going home. It was the opening of the door that the eagle might wing its way to a purer air and to a loftier life. With him it was no dream. It was going straight to the presence of his Lord. Heaven to him was of more value than earth. How thrilling to think of its society. The best and greatest of the earth will be there. But they will all say, "We are here by the grace of God." The central glory of Heaven's glad throng will be Christ the Lord. We shall see him and shall wear the crown of grace. All hail the fact that the crown is a gift. Heaven will be the climax of earth—the realization of its dream. Here we are never satisfied. We traverse forests, we climb mountains, we visit foreign lands and brilliant cities, we listen to thrilling music and stand spell bound in the presence of beautiful art, but we are never satisfied But we shall be satisfied when we awake in His likeness. Our dream will be realized. O death, where is thy sting?

INDIANA PENSION OFFICE.

Mr. Ensley retires and Mr. Spencer goes in.

The Indiana pension office changed hands last Monday, March 19, and we copy the following interesting article from the Indianapolis Sentinel March 20:

It was 9 o'clock when Mr. Ensley and Mr. Spencer came out from the private office of the agent in the presence of the clerks. Mr. Ensley in introducing Mr. Spencer complimented the clerical force on its efficiency, saying that he did not believe there was a better one in any district in the United States. Mr. Spencer declared it as his intention to make changes in the force slowly. It was hinted, however, that most all the force would be changed as soon as their successors could be trained to the duties.

Mr. Ensley leaves the office with the best record ever made by a pension agent in the United States. During the four years he has been in office over forty six millions of dollars have been disbursed, for the correctness of the amounts of which, in a large per cent of cases. Mr. Ensley has been responsible, and yet there has never occurred a mistake of a single cent. Mr. Ensley has been faithful to his trust. He has invariably been the first to make his appearance at the office in the morning and the last to leave at night and has personally superintended all the work. He turned over to the government a balance of $161,000 upon leaving the office. There is not a cent transferred from agent to agent when a change is made. The retiring agent makes a settlement with the treasury and the new agent opens a new account. In this way there is no possibility for a dispute to arise between the agencies. Each accounts only to the government.

The work in the pension office has increased almost 50 per cent. since Jan. 21, 1890, the day on which Mr. Ensley succeeded C. A. Zollinger.

There were 47,005 names on the rolls then: now there are 71,296. There are at present eight helpless children on the rolls who were placed there under the act of June 27, 1890. When Mr. Ensley went in there were ten survivors of the war of 1812, 404 widows; 767 survivors of the Mexican war, and 319 widows. During the second year of his term two new names of survivors of the war of 1812 were added and since then all have died, the last one about three months ago There are now 205 widows of soldiers of the war of 1812, 667 survivers of the Mexican war and 354 widows. Last year twenty-two survivors of the Indian wars were placed on the pension rolls in this district, and eighteen widows of soldiers of these wars were also recognized. New there are twenty-five of the survivors receiving pensions from this office and twenty-six widows.

During the time Mr. Ensley was in office 61,317 pension certificates were received, on which calculations were made showing the amount due pensioners, for the accuracy of which calculations the pension agent was responsible.

Some idea of the work required to conduct the business of the office can be obtained from the fact that Mr. Ensley received 1,131,241 mail vouchers which would weigh 31,086¾ pounds, or about 15½ tons. Outgoing letters containg pension certificates and checks were handled to the number of 1,131,241, weighing 36,349 pounds, or about 18¼ tons. In making his reports to the third auditor after each payment Mr. Ensley used 11,161 sheets of paper, which would weigh about 559 pounds.

The number of checks drawn was 1-145,233, which would weigh about 2¼ tons; with stubs about 3½ tons. The number of vouchers received in blank form from the department at Washington was 1,896,000, which would weigh nearly 15 tons. Each one of these was signed by Mr. Ensley. The total amount disbursed by Mr. Ensley for pensions and expenses of the agency was $46,344,877.92.

The official correspondence of the agency during the four years was as follows: Communications received 43,-000, weighing 665 pounds; communications answered, 38,900, weighing 695 pounds.

A Pleasant Literary and Social Event.

Among the many interesting items we were obliged to omit in last week's issue, owing to want of time and space, was the social gathering given by Mrs. Penfield to the three literary clubs of Auburn. This pleasant event was on the evening of March 16. This was the first time in the history of these excellent clubs that they have had the opportunity of meeting together as clubs, and they greatly appreciate the kindness of Mrs. Penfield in giving them this pleasant privilege. She is also the fortunate possessor of a beautiful and commodious home in which to receive her guests.

The guests were called to order at the request of the hostess by Mrs. Ford, President of the L. L. C., in a few well-chosen words, this club being the oldest of the three represented. The roll was called by the secretaries of their respective clubs, and responded to by quotations from favorite authors, the members of each club remaining standing till the close of this exercise.

The first paper of the evening was by Mrs. Schaab, a member of the L. L. C., entitled "Mental Epidemics," which was very opportune and interesting. This was followed by a character sketch of Washington Irving by Mrs. Moss, a member of S. H. G. This was compiled and given in a very pleasing manner. A very pretty and charming piece of instrumental music was given by Mrs. J. J. Zent, a member of the C. L. S. C., entitled, "Annie Laurie" (variations). This order was observed in all the following exercises. Mrs. Barns gave her personal experiences of "Half Day in a Railway Coach," which blended the humorous with the pathetic. A brilliant piece of music was then given by Mrs. Lonie McIntyre, President of the S. H. G. This was followed by a reading entitled, "The Lady or the Tiger," by Mrs. Sam Nickey. The interesting story and the pleasant manner in which it was given charmed the guests.

Mrs. Emanuel gave an essay founded on the sweet story of the friendship of David and Johathan, and succeeded by her manner in impressing her hearers with the desire of possessing this pure and true friendship. To add variety to the exercises Mrs. Henry gave a delightful recitation, entitled, "A Scene at a Fire." In this she showed her ability to imitate the German dialect.

The closing exercise was an instrumental duet by Mrs. R. S. McClellan and Miss Edna Davis. The music was a very charming feature of the evening's entertainment and was greatly enjoyed. After some time was spent in social conversation, an elegant lunch was served in courses, and was one of the enjoyable features of the evening. Nicely tucked away in her napkin each guest found a souvenir in the shape of a card, on which was printed, "Welcome L. L. C., S. H. G., C. L. S. C., at the home of Mrs. W. L. Penfield, Friday evening, March 16, 1894." The evening will long be remembered by the fortunate guests for the charming manner in which they were entertained.

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

An Aeronaut Falls Into the Sea and Is Drowned—Death of Senator Colquitt—Powder Explosion—Fishermen Drowned—Coxey's Army of Peace.

FRUIT FROSTED

The Entire Michigan Crop Put in Jeopardy by the Cold Wave.

Specials to the Grand Rapids, Mich., Herald from the fruit belt are to the effect that the small fruits and peach buds have been badly frost bitten by the recent cold snap. Snow fell at South Haven and vicinity to the depth of fifteen inches and zero weather prevailed. Fruit men express grave fears for fruit of all kinds. Benton Harbor reports that the cold has been so intense that ice an inch thick formed and fruit growers in the belt are alarmed. Many thousand trees were just ready to blossom, but every bud is black and dead, doing many thousand dollars damages in Berrien County. Strawberries were starting up green, but are frozen to death. Even in the most sheltered fields they are killed. Fennville reports cold weather and peach buds badly injured. Shelby advices state that the peach crop in Oceana County has been damaged by freezing. Reports from Muskegon, Newaygo, Ottawa, and Van Buren counties report great damage to fruits of all kinds.

AERONAUT MEETS DEATH.

Lets Go His Hold at Cannes, Miss., and Falls Into the Sea.

Cannes special: An immense crowd gathered here to witness a balloon ascension by Aeronaut Wilton, who is well known in America. No car was attached to the balloon, and Wilton ascended hanging to a rope. When 1,500 feet high the balloon was caught in a current of air that carried it rapidly seaward. It was apparent that Wilton could not control the valve at the top of the balloon, which, had it been opened, would have allowed the gas to escape and the balloon to gradually descend. For some unexplained reason the aeronaut let go his hold of the rope from which he was dangling and his body shot down into the sea with frightful velocity. The accident occurred in full view of the spectators and a number of women in the crowd fainted. A number of pleasure boats hurriedly made their way to the place where Wilton had fallen, and after a short search his body was recovered. His death must have been instantaneous.

Fiendish Robbers.

Robbers entered the house of Basil D. Hall, a wealthy farmer at Great Bend, W. Va., and demanded his money. Hall recently sold a farm, and a few days since received $5,000 in cash, which he kept concealed about the house. The thieves knew this, as they threatened to kill Hall if he did not deliver that amount to them. Hall said he had sent the money to the Ravenswood Bank, when they tied him on a chair with ropes and then tortured him by holding a burning lamp under the palms of his hands, burning them to a crisp. Hall still refused to give up his money, when the robbers caught him by the head and forced it down over the burning lamp and burned one ear to a crisp, when Hall consented to turn over the money.

Fishermen Drowned.

A party of four fishermen went fishing in two small boats in an awful storm that was raging at Holland, Mich. The boats were found capsized. The boats were frail concerns, and it is supposed that the occupants were all drowned, as none of them have returned to their homes. The names of the lost are: Chas. Petrie, married; Jean McKay, single; J. C. Shafer, married; Irwin Takes, single. Takes was the only support of his father and mother. Petrie and McKay were brothers-in-law, as were also Shafer and Takes. Large numbers of persons are looking for the bodies.

Coxey's Army of Peace.

Louisville (Ohio) special: The followers of Gen. Coxey, who pitched their tents Monday night at Camp Peffer, near here, are suffering. The army is bigger and dirtier than it was when it left Massillon. Three or four days of warm weather would certainly swell it to large proportions. A bitter cold wind sweeps down the hills and the crusaders are lying like peas in a pod in the big tent, while outside are miserable looking wretches with blue and unshaven faces, performing the duty of sentinels. The army numbers 225.

Powder Explosion.

A terrific explosion at Canton, Miss., wrecked the drug store of Alexander & Co. A coal oil lamp fell to the floor and ignited two kegs of powder which exploded and tore the building to atoms. M. Alexander, one of the proprietors, was fatally injured and a bystander named Campbell received severe cuts from flying glass.

Waite is Winner.

Judge Glynn, in the District Circuit Court at Denver, has dismissed the contempt and quashed the injunction against Mayor Van Horn and Fire and Police Commissioners Barnes and Mullin, and empowered the latter to assume their duties, to which they had been appointed by Gov. Waite, at once.

Toledo Street Car Strike Settled.

The Toledo Electric Street Railway Company has came to a settlement with its striking employes and the men returned to work. The basis of the settlement will not be divulged by the parties concerned.

Senator Colquitt Dies.

Senator Colquitt of Georgia, who was stricken with paralysis for the second time about a week ago, died at his residence in Washington.

Brazilian Affairs.

Rio de Janeiro special: Peixoto is mobilizing the National Guards and is sending additional troops to meet Gen. Saraiva, the insurgent commander.

Admiral DeMello declares that Peixoto intends to resign the Presidency into the hands of Senor Prudente Moraes before the expiration of his term, in November next.

The report that President Peixoto has revived the Imperial decrees of 1838 and 1851 has reached Pernambuco, and is causing great excitement there. Some of the inhabitants of that State believe that the decrees might be stretched so as to cover many prominent people in that district, as well as giving the Government power to execute, without a trial, some of the foreign residents who may be suspected of having been in sympathy with the insurgents.

DYNAMITE EXPLOSION.

Five Persons Killed in a Powder Mill.

The dynamite works of the Acme Powder Company, at Black's Run, fourteen miles above Pittsburgh, on the Allegheny Valley Railroad, blew up, killing three men and two women, and badly wrecking houses and other buildings in Acmetonia, directly across the river; at Hulton, two miles south, and at Junction Station, a short distance east.

The names of the killed are:

WILLIAM ARTHURS, aged 30.
BELLE ARTHURS, wife of William Arthurs, aged 19.
SADIE REMALEY, aged 30.
NELLIE REMALEY, aged 25.
CHARLES SOBIN, aged 20.

At the time of the explosion there was stored in the works five tons of dynamite, a consignment ready for shipment. The works had a capacity of 20,000 pounds per day. The bodies of the victims were terribly mutilated. The explosion created the wildest kind of excitement in the Alleghany valley above and below Black's Run, at the mouth of which the works were located.

At Acmetonia, Hulton, Oakmont, Neronia, Johnston, Parassus, Kensington, Tarantum and other towns within a radius of seven miles, there was great excitement. Every window in Acmetonia, Springdale, and Hulton was shattered, while a few of the houses were considerably damaged. The works of the Acme Powder Company were wiped completely out of existence. The clerks in the company's office in Pittsburgh could give no estimate of the loss to the company.

A SHAMELESS SWINDLE.

Soldiers' Widows and Orphans the Victims of Pension Sharpers.

Delaware (Ohio) special: One of the worst frauds ever perpetrated on widows and orphans has been unearthed in this city. When the call was made for 200,000 volunteers in 1863, Delaware's quota was to receive a bounty of $100. As that amount of cash could not be had at the time, $25 was given in cash, and scrip was issued for the remaining $75. In time it became impossible to pay even $25 in cash, and interest-bearing scrip was issued for the full $100. This $75 scrip, with accumulated interest, now amounts to $201, while the $100 scrip amounts to $274. Most of this scrip still remains in the hands of the original holders, or their widows and orphans. Two pension attorneys, learning the facts, schemed to obtain possession of the money in the treasury. Obtaining a list of all volunteers from Delaware and Union counties, they wrote to them, offering to obtain the face value of the scrip in consideration of a fee of $25. Nothing was said about the interest attached to the scrip. In many cases no return whatever was made of the scrip, and its unfortunate owners lost all. The total amount of the steal is over $18,000. Seventy-eight persons have been victimized in Delaware County alone, and a large amount of money has been paid to the attorneys for the people of whom no trace can be found.

MORE TROUBLE.

International Complications Likely to Arise From the Brazilian Insurrection

Rio Janeiro special: International complications which threaten to assume a grave character have arisen from the revolution and the subsequent surrender of the insurgent war vessels and the escape of De Gama and his officers. The Portuguese war ship on which De Gama and his officers took refuge were permitted to leave the harbor under the express stipulation imposed by the Brazilian Government that Da Gama and the officers with him were to remain on board those ships until the governments of Portugal and Brazil had settled the question as to their ultimate destination.

The action of the Portuguese naval officers who protected Da Gama and his officers, has raised a strong feeling of indignation in official, as well as civil circles, and it is known that President Peixoto is in possession of documents of the utmost importance as showing that, aid was systematically given to the insurgents by the officers of other European vessels.

LARGER GOLD PRODUCTION.

The Increase of $11,000,000 Comes from America, Africa, and Russia.

Washington special: A production of gold throughout the world of $150,000,000 for the calendar year 1893 is the latest estimate of the bureau of the mint, and the figures which have recently been received verify the estimates made early in the year. The gold production of 1892 as revised in the last report of the mint bureau, was $138,861,000. The increase of $11,000,000 will be mainly furnished by the United States, the Witwaterstrandt regions of South Africa and Russia. The figures for the United States, although not yet quite complete, indicate an increase of $4,000,000 over those for 1892. The increase in South Africa will be about $6,000,000, in Russia about half a million and in Australia about half a million. There will be small gains in other countries, including China and Japan, but they may be offset by small losses elsewhere.

An Obstacle in Coxey's Path.

Washington special: One circumstance may interfere with the main features of Gen. Coxey's army program at Washington. His stated object in bringing his army here is to assemble it on the steps of the capitol the first of May for the purpose of impressing its views upon Congress. To do this it will be necessary first to secure authority from Congress, as there are specific acts upon the statute books forbidding the assemblage of crowds in the Capitol grounds, for holding any sort of public meeting, except sessions of Congress and assemblages incident to the inauguration of President. No place near the Capitol is available for Coxey's purpose, and if he is refused permission for the assemblage of his followers on the Capitol steps, the proceedings probably would not make so great an impression upon Congress as intended. District of Columbia Commissioner Ross said: "When we hear of the army actually moving on Washington, instructions will be given to the public to properly deal with them."

Texas Cattle Movement.

San Antonio, (Texas) special: The movement of Texas cattle to the Indian Territory has begun. Several thousand head will be moved from points on the San Antonio & Arkansas Pass Railroad to the Territory pastures within the next two weeks. The severe drought in Southwest Texas has caused the range to be unusually short of grass this spring.

Stricken Blind.

City of Mexico special: Senor Fernandez Leal, Minister of Public Works in the Mexican Cabinet, has been stricken with blindness. The other evening, while sitting at his desk examining an important document it became blotted and blurred before his eyes. He called in his Secretary and asked him if there was anything the matter with the paper, to which a negative response was given. Within a few hours total blindness came on the stricken Minister, and, notwithstanding the best medical treatment obtainable, he has been unable to see anything, being kept in a dark room with bandaged eyes.

Holocaust in France.

A building occupied by Sisters of Charity as a school for young women, at Laon, France, in the department of Aisne, was burned to the ground. Besides the sisters there were a number of pupils in the building and all were asleep. Those on the lower floors were awakened by the flames and narrowly escaped with their lives. The young women who occupied the upper floors were unable to reach the stairway and many of them were seriously injured by jumping out of windows. When the flames had burned themselves out the charred bodies of six young women, who slept on the floor, were found in the ruins. Many of these who escaped were seriously burned.

Dynamite Outrage.

Huntington (W. Va.) special: On the western fork of Hart's Creek, the scene of the Hatfield-McCoy trouble several years ago, where a number of men were killed, there has been an outbreak recently among a class that the good citizens, headed by Squire Vance, have tried to quiet. The other night dynamite was placed under the house occupied by the Justice, and most of the building wrecked. One of children was badly hurt. The dynamiters intended to blow up the Justice and his wife, and placed the explosive within six feet of their bed, but they fortunately escaped injury.

Coxey On the Road.

Massillon (Ohio) special: The weather was chilly and a light snow was falling. Coxey was not to be stopped, however, and left the city at 12:30 with his expected army of 10,000, consisting of about 100 people. He said that this number was up to his most sanguine expectations and when he reached Washington would be fully as large as he ever claimed. Carl Brown was Chief Marshal. The army marched to the camping ground selected for the first night, and there pitched their tents. There was no disturbance of any kind.

What Will He Do?

The President is carefully listening to arguments, political and otherwise, addressed to him respecting the seigniorage bill. He has not made up his mind what action to take. Anti-silver congressmen believe he will veto. The message the President sent the New York delegation advising them not to come to Washington, silver men think, indicates that he has decided to approve the bill. The President has until the 30th to decide.

An Inhuman Father.

Another brutal story comes from the Pennsylvania coal regions. At Barbertown, near Scranton, Penn., Andro Bartelli became angered because the baby cried. He picked the infant up out of the cradle, took the lid off the stove and threw the little one on the hot coals. His sister rescued the babe, but it was so badly burned that it died in a few hours. Bartelli left the house and has not been found.

Will Go to Work.

The bituminous miners of Coxville and Rosedale, north of Brazil, Ind., notified the operators that they would accept the proposed 16 per cent. reduction and return to work. This will give several hundred men employment that have been idle for several weeks. It is claimed they were forced to accede to the cut by the Clinton men returning to work several days ago.

Fatal Boiler Explosion.

By the explosion of a boiler in the tile factory at Gilbert's south of Rockford, Ill., one man was killed and a fire started, threatening to wipe out the town, but the flames were confined to the tile factory owned by D. H. Hager. The man killed was Fred Tornow, the engineer. Loss, $40,000; insurance, $10,000.

Wreck in Texas.

The baggage car, one coach and a sleeper on the south-bound Missouri, Kansas and Texas train left the track near Smithville, Texas, and rolled down a forty-foot embankment. A number of passengers were bruised, but none seriously. A broken rail caused the wreck.

Defrance Sentenced.

At Kalamazoo, Mich., Stonewall J. Defrance, the convicted forger, was sentenced by Judge Buck to eleven years at hard labor in Jackson Prison.

Indians Loaned for Show Purposes.

Secretary Smith has approved the application of "Pawnee Bill" for a loan of thirty-five Sioux Indians to be exhibited at the Antwerp Exposition.

Killed by an Electric Car.

At Cincinnati, Thomas W. Kinsey, aged 70, a retired business man, was run over by an electric car and almost instantly killed.

COXEY ON THE MARCH

STARTS FROM MASSILLON, OHIO, WITH ABOUT 150 MEN.

The Crusade Against the National Capital Begun Under Discouraging Circumstances—Crowds of Spectators Line the Roads—Scenes in Camp at Canton.

"Commonweal" Sets Forth.

Coxey's army of the commonweal left Massillon, Ohio, Sunday forenoon, and by night had covered the first eight miles of the long heralded march to Washington. A Canton, Ohio, dispatch says that as the column passed through the public square of the city of its birth there were just 122 people on foot, in wagons, or horseback. The national colors were carried at the head of the column by Sam Johnson, a Massillon negro. Carl Browne came next, mounted on a splendid white horse weighing nearly 2,000 pounds. He wore high top boots, corduroy trousers, a buckskin jacket, a fur overcoat, and a big sombrero. Doc Kirkland, of Pittsburg, was close behind with two aids. Then came Coxey in his phaeton, with a coachman driving a spirited team. Mrs. Coxey, her little son Legal Tender, and her sister, Miss Jones, drove with them to the first stop. A light running gear, having a speaker's platform, was next. It is to accommodate Carle Browne and his panorama illustrating his harangue against the national banking system as the monster of the age.

J. S. COXEY.

Lew Smith, the great unknown, headed the section of footmen. He is the man who made such an incendiary speech in Massillon that he was not allowed to speak the second time. People in the crowd the first time he spoke thought he was Fielden, the Chicago anarchist, and so announced. He replied: "I am the great unknown and must remain so." He is handsome, commanding and well dressed and maintains good discipline. Seventy-four footmen followed.

A covered wagon accompanied the band of fourteen members. Two wagons accompanied the tents and a commissary, and an ordinary farm wagon loaded with horse feed brought up the rear. The first stop was made at Reedurban, and here, according to the scriptural idea which Browne introduces wherever possible, there was a feast of loaves and fishes—rye bread, canned salmon, and oiled sardines. After an hour's rest the order to fall in was given. There were some recruits by this time—a dozen more horsemen—and probably 150 marched through the city and to Camp Lexington, just outside the city, where the night was spent. Marshal Browne says that the name, age, residence and occupation of every member is enrolled, together with a satisfactory reason for enlisting. The list was not open to public gaze, but Browne indignantly denies that there is a single tramp in the company. He says that others will join in camp all along the route.

BANNER CARRIED BY COXEY'S MEN.

Coxey is elated with the start and says a grand success is now assured. Before leaving Camp Concord at Massillon, a meeting was held. Carl Browne delivered his idea of a sermon. He read from the scriptures, selecting several passages from Revelation. He took the ground that all of the prophecies had been fulfilled. He explained the passage of the beast with seven heads and ten horns. New York, he said, was the beast, the seven heads financial conspiracies, and the ten horns such grasping, grinding monopolies as the Standard Oil Trust, the railroad trusts, and the land trusts.

CARL BROWNE

Purpose of the March.

J. S. Coxey's "army" of unemployed was organized to march to Washington and in person demand relief from Congress. Mr. Coxey associated with him as assistant Carle Browne, of California. The work of organization was begun months ago. Labor unions, farmers' alliances and similar organizations were invited to join intact. All organizations were advised to procure a wagon, if possible, to carry camp utensils. Appeals to Populists and various societies throughout the country were mailed at intervals for several months.

The itinerary of the trip is an interesting one. It has been so arranged that day meetings can be held in leading cities where labor troubles are abundant. It is from these centers Mr. Coxey expects to secure the greatest number of recruits. Arrangements, it is said, were concluded for seven thousand acres of land in Washington, owned by Senator Stewart, of Nevada, upon which the army is to camp. Editor Redstone, of the National Tocsin, is the agent. When the army reaches that city, Redstone will meet it with the unemployed of Washington and vicinity and escort it to the Capitol. When these pilgrims have surrounded the Capitol with a hollow square, they will separate into groups according to their Congressional districts, and will call upon their Representatives to come out. They will be petitioned to feed the army during its stay.

An inspection of Coxey's headquarters before the march began disclosed, in readiness for the march, a round tent sixty feet in diameter, used by a circus last year, two smaller tents, 24 by 40 feet in size, a commissary wagon of six or eight tons capacity, an ambulance wagon, with medical and surgical appliances and numerous smaller articles for the accommodation of the army. The big circus tent is to be used for sleeping quarters at night, and for the meetings en route, when the weather is too inclement for the open air.

Congress will be demanded to pass two bills. One provides for the issuing of $500,000,000 in legal tender notes, to be expended by the Secretary of War at the rate of $20,000,000 a month in constructing roads in the various States. Common labor is to be paid $1.50 a day for eight hours' work. Another bill is to provide that any State or municipality down to a village desiring to make public improvements may deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury non-interest bearing bonds not exceeding one-half the assessed valuation of its property upon which the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue legal tender at 98 per cent. of their face value. Jerry Simpson will be asked to introduce these bills.

FATAL TO THE FRUITS.

Country Visited by Freezing Cold—Drop of Fifty Degrees.

According to the press dispatches the recent cold snap has been fatal to the fruits. Throughout Illinois, Indiana, Iowa and Michigan the temperature has been unusually low for this season.

At Anna, Ill., the thermometer fell to about 20 degrees. The frost did great damage to fruit and vegetables throughout the section. The buds of the pears, cherries and early apples are thought to be killed. Strawberries are injured some, and there will be no peach crop whatever, this freeze having finished the ruin which the January cold snap began.

Cairo, Ill.—The temperature here has fallen several degrees below freezing. The damage to fruit growers and gardeners in this vicinity will reach many thousand dollars.

Mascoutah, Ill.—In two days there has been a drop in the temperature of from fifteen to eighteen degrees. Peaches, pears and plums are ruined.

Detroit, Mich.—Dispatches from various sections of Michigan report the temperature at far below the freezing point everywhere. The thermometer registers 10 degrees at Sault Ste. Marie, 12 at Alpena, 16 at Grand Haven and 20 in Detroit. The cold wave in Michigan is accompanied by northwest winds and light snow in some portions. Fruit-growers will suffer almost universally.

St. Louis, Mo.—The freezing weather that now prevails throughout this section of the Southwest is unprecedented for the month of March, and is causing consternation among fruit and vegetable growers, who will be heavy losers therefrom. Ice an inch thick formed in this city, and as far south as San Angelo, Tex., it was a quarter of an inch thick.

Muncie, Ind.—The temperature has dropped thirty degrees, and Muncie was visited by one of the severest blizzards of the season. One grower says that all the fruit in this section of the county has been killed, which will be a loss of thousands of dollars to farmers.

Wabash, Ind.—It is believed the fruit is all killed. Wheat which had grown rank is also injured.

Valparaiso, Ind.—Wheat is thought to have been killed.

Burlington, Ia.—Easter Sunday will be memorable as the coldest in the memory of the oldest inhabitant. The mercury was near zero. Many flowers with which the churches were decorated were frosted during the night. Fruit buds suffered severely.

Buffalo, Wy.—Last week's blizzard, continuing seventy hours, has never been approached in severity by any other storm in this locality. Traffic is entirely suspended, and communication by wire with the outside world has only just been restored. Snow is drifted from ten to twenty feet deep in every direction. The loss of stock is terrible.

St. Paul, Minn.—The temperature reached the vicinity of six degrees below zero, which was the lowest record for the month.

DENOUNCE BRECKINRIDGE.

Social Purity League of New York Wants Congress to Expel Him.

The fourth annual business meeting and election of officers of the National Christian League for the Protect on of Social Purity was held in New York at the headquarters of the league, 33 East 22d street. One cause of the long continuance of the meeting was the animated discussion concerning Congressman Breckinridge, in which the ladies became involved. They finally decided to send a memorial to Congress protesting against allowing Congressman Breckinridge to retain his seat. They also decided to send a communication to Mrs. Breckinridge calling upon her in the name of womanhood to renounce her husband and to refuse to live with him longer. In addition to this they voted to call upon the presbytery with which Col. Breckinridge is connected, asking to have the Congressman expelled. These actions were taken upon the motion of Mrs. Clarke Bell, President of the Woman's Health Protective Association.

A WAGON load of fine fish were sold in Goshen, the other day, at four cents a pound. They had the appearance of having been seined, and the owner said they had been taken out of the St. Joe river in two hauls.

FIRE originating from the smoke stack of a neighboring sawmill destroyed the barn of John Oswalt, four miles north of Wabash, together with three horses, a quantity of grain, hay, agricultural implements, and three horses will have to be shot. Loss, $2,000; no insurance.

JOHN MARTIN of St. Paul, an old German, aged 70, jumped seventy-two feet from the Big Four bridge across Flatrock Creek, near St. Paul, and was killed instantly. The old man was deaf, and had no known relatives in the world. The other day he placed himself in front of a train to be killed, but was saved, only to take his life as above.

WILLIAM STAMPER, Sr., of New Albany, was killed in a wreck on the Kentucky Union Railroad on which he was employed as conductor. Mr. Stamper was 50 years old, and leaves a wife and two children. He was employed on the Pennsylvania Railroad for over thirty years, being yardmaster in New Albany for nearly ten years. Two years ago he was transferred to Louisville, but resigned and went with the Kentucky Union.

An atrocious murder was committed at Tolleston recently. The victims are James Conroy and William Cleary, who were employed as watchmen in the Tolleston Shooting Club grounds. The men in some way became involved in a quarrel with Albert Tooker; and were getting the best of the argument when the latter drew a big navy pistol and fired six shots, killing both men. After the murder Tooker took to the woods. A vigilance committee was immediately organized, and ten minutes later about seventy-five farmers, armed with shotguns, rifles, clubs, and hayforks, began scouring the woods and swamps.

H. O. HUFFER, a young schoolteacher of Farmland, has invented a new machine for the prevention of thieves entering and destroying watermelon patches. The machine is a piece of gas pipe, with string attachments running in each direction through the melon patch, so that when the strings are touched a lever is thrown and a heavy discharge of whatever the pipe may be loaded with is scattered in all directions for a hundred yards. It will throw shot hard enough to go through a half-inch board. He has sold a machine to Hamilton Pursley, who is a large melon raiser in that section, and who has been greatly annoyed heretofore in this manner.

THE mystery surrounding the many incendiary fires in Peru the past month was solved the other night by the arrest of two young men, William Koob, aged 22, and John Gould, aged 20. Both are sons of well-known people. About 10 o'clock another fire occurred, by which the barn of Joseph Buffert was destroyed. The pent-up indignation burst forth and 500 people started out to discover the incendiaries. They were caught about midnight by two special policemen. The boys showed fight, and, flourishing large revolvers, eluded the officers for a time, but were found several hours afterward hiding among the freight cars. Both confessed to setting fire to all the buildings burned. Dime novels and excitement are given as the incentives. Thousands of dollars have been destroyed and the city has been in a ferment for the past month. As high as two and three alarms in one night have been sent in, while owners of property nightly patroled their premises.

JOHN H. PERKINS of Lebanon, received a letter the other day containing $26 and a note, saying, "I send this for Jesus Christ's sake." There was no signature to the note. About eight years ago Mr. Perkin's store was robbed and about twenty dollars worth of goods taken. The supposition is that the money he received was sent by the robber, who has probably been converted since. The letter bears the Chicago postmark.

THE NATION'S SOLONS.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed, and Acted Upon.

Doings of Congress.

The House Monday devoted the entire day to the consideration of the sundry civil bill. There was no important business transacted in the Senate, the entire day being consumed in the consideration of bills on the calendar. Most of these were measures of small importance, among them being several of immediate interest to the people of the District of Columbia. A number of bills were taken from the calendar and passed, among them a bill to regulate the making of property returns by officers of the government and an act authorizing the Texarkana and Fort Smith Railway Company to bridge the Calcasieu and Sabine rivers in the States of Louisiana and Texas. The Senate received from the President a message in regard to the occupation of Bluefields, Nicaragua, and also a message relative to Hawaiian affairs.

The sundry civil appropriation bill was passed by the House Tuesday without division. The amendment of the appropriation for the General Land Office, amending the provision of the act of 1891, repealing the timber culture and preemption acts, which was adopted in the committee at the suggestion of Mr. Holman and which was bitterly opposed by the western members, was defeated in the House. The clauses which sought to require an accounting by the disbursing officers of soldiers' homes to the Treasury Department and annual reports by the boards to the Secretary of War fell under Mr. Black's point of order. The bill as passed carries $217,000 more than it did as reported from the committee on appropriations. The four appropriation bills passed by the House (District of Columbia, pension, fortification and sundry civil) carry a net reduction of $24,315,958 as compared with the same bills for the current fiscal year.

The Senate bill for the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River at Pittsburg passed the House Thursday, and the balance of the time was spent in filibustering over the O'Neil-Joy contested election case from the St. Louis district. The report of the committee is in favor of unseating Mr. Joy (Rep.). For five hours they filibustered and kept the House deadlocked. The highest number of Democratic votes cast during the day was 166, thirteen short of a quorum. An unsuccessful attempt was made to adjourn over Friday. The Senate's principal business was the confirmation of a lot of postmasters and consideration of the tariff bill.

The House met at noon Friday. Mr. Sayers presented for immediate consideration a joint resolution appropriating $10,000 for the salaries and expenses of additional deputy collectors of internal revenue to carry out the provisions of the Chinese exclusion act as amended by the joint resolution passed Dec. 7 last. It was agreed to. The struggle over the O'Neil-Joy contested election case from Missouri was postponed until next week. In the case of Whatley vs. Cobb, from the Fifth Alabama District, the report of the committee unanimously confirmed Cobb's title to the seat, and was adopted. The House went into committee of the whole to consider the military academy appropriation bill. The amount carried by the bill was $400,488, against $432,546 for the current year. The original estimates for the next fiscal year aggregated $599,463. They were reduced by the Secretary of War to $465,149, and the bill was passed. Several private pension bills were passed at the night session, the House adjourning at 10:30 o'clock. The Senate did nothing.

Lessing's Forgetfulness.

The celebrated Lessing, having missed money at different times without being able to discover who took it, determined to put the honesty of his servant to the test, and left a handful of gold on the table. "Of course you counted it," said one of his friends. "Count it?" said Lessing, somewhat embarrassed; "no, I forgot that." At a public sale there was a book which Lessing was very desirous of possessing. He gave three of his friends at different times a commission to buy it at any price. They accordingly bid against each other till they had got as far as ninety crowns. Happily, one of them thought it best to speak to the others, when it appeared they had all been bidding for Lessing, whose forgetfulness on this occasion cost him eighty crowns.

Helped Morse with the Telegraph.

The recent death in Hartford, Conn., of Mrs. Albert Vail calls attention to the fact that her husband, who died in Morristown, N. J., in 1859, aided Morse in inventing the electric telegraph. In fact, Mrs. Vail for thirty years exerted herself to secure for him proper credit for share in that great work. At the World's Fair he received recognition by having his name displayed in letters of light among those of eminent electricians.

Incubation.

Diphtheria, two to seven days; oftenest two.

Typhoid fever, eight to fourteen days; sometimes twenty-three.

Influenza, one to four days; oftenest three to four.

Measles, seven to eighteen days; oftenest fourteen.

Mumps, two or three weeks; oftenest three weeks.

A Monster Naval Review.

The greatest naval review of modern times was by Queen Victoria in 1854 at the beginning of the Crimean war. The fleet extended in an unbroken line for five miles, and comprised 300 men-of-war, with twice that number of store and supply ships. The fleet was manned by 40,000 seamen.

Queens Who Died Miserably.

Of sixty-seven Queens of France only thirteen have lived without leaving their histories a record of misery. Eleven were divorced, two executed, nine died young, seven were widowed, three cruelly treated, three exiled; the poisoned and broken-hearted make up the rest.

Personal Paragraphs.

MISS F

AT WAR WITH HERSELF.

The Story of a Woman's Atonement, by Charlotte M. Braeme.

CHAPTER XLVI.

Six months had passed since Leonie Rayner placed the will of Lord Charnleigh in Paul Flemyng's hands. They had not brought much happiness to him. True, he was an earl now, a man of high rank and great resources, a man of distinguished position, with unbounded wealth and every luxury; but he was not so happy as when he was a poor soldier, blessed only with Leonie's love. He did not care for the earldom; he did not value money; he wanted her, and nothing in the world besides.

Yet he knew that she would never be his; she had told him so, frankly and honestly. She did not love him; she loved some one else. He knew that, live as long as he might, his life would never be crowned or blessed by Leonie's love.

He did not love her less because of her grievous sin. In his eyes the ample reparation she had made atoned for it. He said to himself that she was the bravest, the noblest and best of women; but she was not for him.

The world, so ready to worship Mammon, received him with open arms. He was sought after by half the fashionable mothers in London. But for Paul there was no peace, no happiness, where Leonie was not. It would take him long years to learn to think less of his love.

* * * * *

Six months had brought back health and strength to Leonie Rayner. She was still at Reims, with the General and Ethel.

She had visited the friends of her fair young mother; she had done her best to forget all that was painful and to regain her lost health. Surrounded by friends, she was somewhat herself again; her face had lost its radiance, but over those most beautiful features there was an expression of perfect rest, and a faint color had returned to the lovely face, and the beautiful lips had reacquired their former smile.

One morning Ethel, with a bundle of papers under her arm, entered the room where Leonie sat.

"I told you," she said, "that you should hear what the world thought of you, Leonie. Read these."

Leonie opened one of the principal morning papers first.

"I feel quite nervous," she said. "It is a terrible thing, after all, to be in print."

Ethel silently pointed out the following paragraph to her:

"Romance in High Life.—Some time since we announced to our readers the succession of a young lady to the estates of Crown Leighton and the title of Countess Charnleigh. The particulars of that succession will be remembered as interesting and novel. Lady Charnleigh, by her brilliant beauty, her gracious manners, and queenly generosity, made herself one of the most popular of the fashionable world. She has recently met with a reverse of fortune quite as sudden as her unexpected elevation. It may be remembered that she succeeded to the Crown Leighton's estates as next of kin in consequence of the late earl's having died, as it was supposed, without a will. Lady Charnleigh was the nearest of kin, and as such took possession of the title and the estates. After enjoying them for two years, she accidentally discovered the will of the late earl, by which he left all that he had to Captain Paul Flemyng. The lady, with a noble sense of honor and loyalty—unfortunately but too rare—immediately placed the will in the hands of the true heir, and then retired from the brilliant scenes of which she had been so great an ornament. Miss Rayner may never again possess a patent of nobility such as the world confers, but she has one much higher, which no one can take from her—she is a noble, generous, loyal lady—a title which no earthly distinction can give. The new Lord Charnleigh has taken possession of Crown Leighton, and has also taken his seat in the House of Lords."

"You wondered what the world said of you, Leonie. Now you know. Could any praise be higher than that?"

"I did not deserve it," sobbed the girl. "Let me tell you all the truth, Ethel."

But Miss Dacre kissed the sweet face, and refused to hear another word.

"If there is any secret," she said, "it rests between Paul and yourself. There is no need for you to tell it, as he has not done so."

For Paul had kept her secret most loyally. When she had left him with the will in his hands, he went at once to Mr. Clements, the lawyer, and told him that Lady Charnleigh had discovered it. He never uttered a word about the terrible temptation, the deadly crime, and the most sincere repentance. The story was never known. Every one believed that the will was given to him in the same hour that it was found.

The paragraph above was copied into all the papers; many of them added remarks of their own, all being in praise of her who was no longer Lady Charnleigh. The scrap of news went, as many startling scraps do, the round of the world, and it was read by Sir Bertram Gordon in the Holy Land.

He had gone thither, vowing that never while he lived would he return to England. He did not care how his life was spent—how it passed; he was utterly reckless and despairing. He went to the Holy Land. There, he thought to himself, it would not be likely that he should ever meet people who knew him.

He had been there for some time, leading a most hopeless and miserable life, when, in one of a numerous batch of papers sent to him from England, he read this paragraph, telling of Leonie's change of fortune; and in another he read that Miss Rayner was staying with General Sir Huntley Dacre and his daughter at Reims, in France. A third repeated some on dit as to the probable marriage of the Earl of Charnleigh with the daughter of a Scotch peer.

Then Sir Bertram Gordon, with a low cry, started to his feet. If it were true, the engagement with Leonie must have been broken. Perhaps she had repented of her cruelty to him; perhaps she wanted him back, and yet did not know to what address to write. He would not lose an hour in going to her—he would start at once.

How he was tortured on that homeward journey none knew but himself. One minute all was hope, another all despair; one minute he was thinking that there must be some chance for him, and the next that he was on a wild-goose chase.

People wondered what restless spirit possessed this handsome nobleman, this man with the face and head of a Saxon king. He never appeared to rest; he seemed unable to eat or drink as ordinary beings did. The question ever on his lips, whether on steamboat, or rail, or road, was—

"How long will it be before the journey is accomplished?"

Periods of hope came over him, when he would say to himself that she loved him, and that his dismissal was but a caprice; and then he would picture to himself a long happy life blessed with Leonie's love. Again a period of despair would succeed, when he would feel sure that his errand must prove fruitless. Were such the result, he decided he would go and lose himself in the depths of an African desert.

So time passed, until one day, in the early spring-time, he reached the picturesque old city of Reims, in the fair land of France.

The sun was shining, the birds were beginning to sing, pale blossoms were peeping, summer buds growing green on the trees. Leonie Rayner, feeling strong and almost well, sat in the pretty salon of the little villa alone. Sir Huntley, who was a most devoted "squire of dames," had sent a magnificent bouquet of pale hyacinths and violets, and many other fragrant flowers, that brought such sweet, sad memories to her mind. As she sat there admiring them, Ethel entered the salon; her face wore an expression of sudden, startled joy. She went up to Leonie and took some of the flowers in her hand.

"I ought to be jealous," she said; "papa has sent me no bouquet."

"Perhaps he thought you did not deserve one," remarked Leonie, with a little laugh.

"Leonie," said Ethel, suddenly bending over her, "could you bear a great joy?"

"I might try," replied the girl, with a sad smile; "I do not think life holds many more joys for me."

"Some one is here, and waiting to see you."

"Is it Lord Charnleigh?" asked Leonie, with a sudden shrinking of pain.

"No, it is not Paul," replied Ethel. "Guess again. It is someone you liked better than you have ever liked Paul."

The beautiful face grew white, the violet eyes opened wide—fear, hope, expectation, sorrow, all appeared in that wistful glance.

"Is it—it it Bertram?" she whispered, and the faint whisper died on her lips.

"Yes, it is Sir Bertram. Here he is to speak for himself," and Ethel turned away, while Sir Bertram clasped her in his arms.

"My darling," he cried, "you will not send me from you again?"

She tried to resist, to cry out to him that she was not worthy of his love; but he would not listen to her. The might of his love swept away all obstacles, as the whirl of the stream sweeps away dead leaves.

"You will not send me away again, Leonie, my love, my wife that must be. I have tried life without you, and I prefer death."

It was useless to resist. If her pale lips opened to utter a word of remonstrance, he closed them with passionate kisses; if she tried to withdraw herself from those loving arms, he only repeated over and over again that he would not leave her, that he would not even release her, until she had promised to be his wife.

"You know you love me, Leonie; if you did not you would not let me kiss your face. You know you love me—why be so cruel, why try to deprive me of all hope and pleasure in life? Leonie, will you be my wife? You did not love Paul Flemyng—you loved me. Say one word and I will release you."

He told her that he would not, could not release her, until she did so; and then he looked at her with such longing, loving eyes that her heart almost ached with the excess of her happiness, so she whispered the one word he wanted.

"You are more lovely than ever, Leonie," he said, "my pearl among women!"

"Bertram," she asked, gently, "how did you know that I was——"

"That you were no longer a countess, and were free for me to win?" he interrupted. "Bless all newspapers, Leonie—they told me all about it, and through them it is that I am here."

CHAPTER XLVII.

"I will never speak falsely again—never while I live," Leonie had declared; and now, as she stood in the pretty garden of the villa, the words returned to her with cruel force.

Bertram had praised her so warmly, Bertram admired her so truly; he thought her so loyal, so honorable; he believed her to be almost perfect; he had no idea of her sin—not the faintest notion of the fraud, the deceit that she had practiced: he believed her fair and pure as a spotless lily. She knew herself to be fair only in the light of repentance.

No one knew of her sin but Paul, and tortures would not drag the story of it from him. Was there any need to tell Sir Bertram? It would part them forever, she felt sure. She remembered what he had once said, that he could pardon anything but dishonor, but that never. The revelation of her sin would surely part them. He loved her, considering her loyal and true, but would he love her when he knew that in plain words she had been a thief? Why not marry him and say nothing to him about the past? He would never know; and he would believe in her until the last day of his life.

So once more Leonie Rayner stood in the sunlight, and held as it were the balance of her life in her hands; once more she was at war with herself. Why not be happy now that the choice had been given to her? Why not marry Sir Bertram, and enjoy his love and homage, without telling him the story that would make such love impossible?

Then her own words returned to her with double force.

"I will never speak falsely again," she had said—"never while I live."

No—she never would. She raised her face to the smiling heavens, and the sunlight seemed to fall like a halo around her.

"I will tell him the whole truth," she said, "and leave the result in Heaven's hands. There shall be no more falseness, no more deceit, no more untruth for me."

She sent for Sir Bertram there and then, lest her resolution should fail her. She did not hide a single detail of her many faults from him. He listened in speechless wonder.

"You, Leonie—you did this?" was all he could say.

"Yes, I did it, Bertram. The temptation was a great one, and I fell. I was so proud of my fortune, so proud—foolish child that I was—of being a countess. I fancied to be called 'My lady,' and to hold high rank, the grandest things in the world. I was so blind, so foolish. I know you can never forgive me, dear—I do not expect it; but I said to myself that I would never be false again. I need not have told you. I might have married you, and have kept my secret; but I would not deceive you."

"You did this, Leonie?" he repeated. "It cannot be."

"On looking back, it seems to me, as it seems to you, impossible. But I did it, Bertram. You remember the night when I sought for the silver buckles? That was the night that I found the will. I have never had one happy moment since then. I thought that if I married Paul it would be the same as giving him the will; thus I was false to you, for I loved you, and false to him, for I did not love him. But I will never be false again. I have told you all, Bertram. I know you cannot forgive me—I remember what you once said—that you could never pardon a woman who acted dishonorably. It will be just that you should leave me now, knowing what I have done."

He had listened to her in almost speechless wonder; he had felt sorrow almost beyond mortal sorrow; but, when he saw that fair head bent so humbly before him, the beautiful face wearing the simple, wistful look of a child, for all answer he opened his arms and took her to his breast.

"My darling," he whispered, "nothing shall part us."

"Not even my past dishonor, Bertram?" she whispered, clinging to him with happy tears.

"My darling," he said, "the very fact of your having made this confession to me proves you to be the noblest of women. You need not have told me your faults, yet you have done so; and I say that you are now nobler in your repentance, in your voluntary humiliation, than are thousands of women who have never known temptation, and so have never fallen. If that is the only barrier between us, my darling, let it exist no longer. We need never mention the horrible past again—it is over and done with for ever and ever. Oh, my darling, do not look at me with those humbled, grateful eyes. It is I who am unworthy of you, sweet; your truth and goodness are so far above mine."

"Then you quite forgive me, Bertram?" she whispered.

"Yes, and I say this atonement has been more noble than the sin was dishonorable. Do not mention it again, sweet. I shall remember it only when I wish to realize how good and true women are by nature—so good that, if they yield to a terrible temptation, they rise again even more noble for the fall. Will you be my wife when the summer flowers are blooming, Leonie?"

The sun was shining over them, the birds sang on the green boughs, and the breeze brought a fragrance of the pale spring flowers. A sunbeam, which Leonie thought was a smile from heaven, fell over them, and she looked in her lover's face without a cloud on the brightness of her own.

There were two "sensations" that year in the great world. One arose from the marriage of Sir Bertram Gordon and Miss Rayner, the other from the sudden wealth that unexpectedly became his portion. Large coal-beds were found on his estate in Scotland—beds that made him in the end a millionaire.

Lady Fanshawe was made happy at last. She could not live away from Leonie, and Sir Bertram asked her to live with them at Glen Brae.

Five years after their marriage they were at the very climax of human prosperity. The immense wealth that came to Sir Bertram from the mines, added to the income of his estates, made him one of the wealthiest men in England.

Lady Gordon once more reigns a queen of society. She is one of the most beautiful and popular women in London. The world is at her feet again; but she is wiser than she was in the days when she considered riches the greatest good.

She is honored among women for her truth, her generosity, her charity; and, if there is one quality in her more beautiful than another, it is her pity and sympathy for the erring and unfortunate. How many she has reclaimed and kept from utter ruin—how many she has cheered, comforted and consoled—how many she has made better by her noble words, will never be known on earth. There are hundreds of men and women who, when they hear her name, say, "Heaven bless Lady Gordon."

At the Academy Exhibition a few years back there were three portraits that were very much admired. One was of a child—Rayner Gordon, the son and heir of Sir Bertram Gordon of Glen Brae Castle, a lovely child with a charming Saxon face. The second was of Paul, Lord Charnleigh, a very handsome man with a slight tinge of melancholy on his face; and the third of Ethel, Lady Charnleigh, whose noble features formed one of the great charms of the exhibition.

From this it may be gathered that Paul recovered from his disappointment, and in the after years married the girl who had loved him and no other all her life.

[THE END.]

HE WANTED A MULE.

But Wouldn't Accept One Because It Wouldn't Kick.

A placid man, with an innocent guilelessness that was as beautiful to look at as it seemed easy to have fun with, stepped timidly into a livery and sale stable the other morning and asked for the proprietor, says a Detroit exchange. That gentleman came forward promptly.

"Anything I can do for you to-day, sir?" he asked with the courtesy of a courtier.

"Um-er," hesitated the visitor, "I want to buy a mule.

"I'm sure we can suit you; just got in a lot last week. Step this way, please," and the proprietor ambled out toward the rear of the stable.

"What kind of a mule do you want?" he asked when they had reached the mule counter.

"I rather like the looks of that large and portly one over there by the wall," ventured the visitor, in a hesitating manner.

"Here, John," called the proprietor to a stable boy, "bring out that large and portly mule," and he chuckled low down as the boy led out the beast.

"There," he went on, "that is a mule fit to work anywhere; good eyes, good legs, broad shoulders, mealy nose, paint-brush tail, all the modern improvements, and you can have him for $175 cash; just what he cost to get him here."

The mild-faced man walked around him, carefully not to say cautiously.

"Fine animal," he murmured, as if afraid to speak.

"Fine as silk," corroborated the dealer.

"Will he kick?" asked the visitor, softly.

The dealer's face showed a long streak of pain, his bosom heaved, and he threw up his hands in deprecation.

"My dear friend," he almost wept, "what do you take me for? Of course the mule won't kick."

The placid man turned away disappointedly.

"I don't want a freak," he said sadly. "I'm not running a dime museum," and as he disappeared from the stable the dealer backed up close to the mule and begged the stable boy to tickle its heels for about a minute.

No Profit in Retailing Sugars.

Grocers everywhere assert that there is little or no profit in retailing sugars, and housekeepers confirm this by saying that there is small economy in buying sugar by the keg. The tradition touching the small profit in handling sugars at retail is certainly more than 100 years old, for a writer in the middle of the last century affirmed that London grocers of that day were often cut £60 or £70 a year for paper and pack thread used in wrapping up sugar, and some grocers would not sell sugar to a customer who did not at the same time purchase some other article. It is not unusual for merchants in New York at this time to sell far below regular retail rates certain articles not properly belonging to their trade.—New York Sun.

LIGHTNING COOKERY.

HOW ELECTRICITY OPERATES IN THE KITCHEN.

Cooking Utensils and Paraphernalia—Frying, Baking, Broiling and Heating by Electricity—Enormous Waste in the Use of Old Style Fuel.

No Dirt or Ashes.

The application of electricity to affairs domestic is a subject that demands the attention of all mankind. For some time past electricity has been used in a limited way by the demonstrators at various "food show" cooking schools. It required the World's Fair to bring the subject before the public in all its prominence.

C. B. copper bottom; S. C. silicate cement; S. W. specially drawn copper wires. SECTION AND BOTTOM OF KETTLE.

What does electric cooking mean? It means the absence of the old-fashioned range and more—no coal! no smoke! no ashes! It means no building of kitchen fires on hot summer mornings; it means the emancipation of fire builders.

The workings of the electric current are less understood by the general public than any other subject connected with our mercantile and domestic life. The current may be likened to running water, and with this idea one has the best illustration. If water be run through a pipe two inches in diameter, into a smaller pipe, say one inch in diameter, the result attained is pressure in the smaller pipe. Run electricity through a wire one-quarter inch in diameter, and it gives no apparent result, but turn this same current into a smaller wire and the result is heat, as shown in the ordinary incandescent lamp. The small wire cannot handle the current fast enough; therefore it gets hot. This is the fact that governs electric cooking. The reader may say, "This is plain so far, but the electric light globe has practically no heat about it." The explanation is this: The wire in the electric light globe is in a vacuum and is on this account surrounded to a certain extent by a non-conductor, hence the heat radiation is very small.

If it were possible to surround a red hot stove with a glass case and to pump all the air from the case, the heat would not be felt to any great degree. Imagine an ordinary frying pan with a veil of fine wire beneath it, this wire surrounded with a packing which would retain and convey the heat, the wire and packing covered with a metal case as shown by the dark ring on the bottom of the pan in the illustration. The pan with the electrical arrangement does not differ from the ordinary pan, except for the fact that it is slightly heavier and has a wire attached. By connecting this wire with the socket board and turning a button, similar to that on the electric light, the pan is heated almost as quickly as the explanation is made. The broiler, oven, coffee pot, tea kettle and hot water tank are all operated in the same manner.

ELECTRICAL STEWPAN.

The advantages of using electricity are so great and so numerous that it would be impossible to convey the facts on paper. Suffice it to say that there is none of the disagreeable dust or heat, no smoke nor danger of fire. In the ordinary stove the heat generated is 100 per cent. Of this heat 80 per cent. goes up the chimney, 15 per cent. warms the air in the room and incidentally the cook; the remaining 5 per cent. is all that can be used for cooking. With the new appliances nearly all the heat is utilized in cooking, and the radiation is scarcely perceptible; hence the economy.

For example, take the flat iron. Ironing day in summer it dreaded by all who have to do with it. By using the electric iron the work seems a pleasure compared with the old way. The iron is attached to the socket, and in one minute it is hot, and its heat is all on the under side. It remains at an even temperature all day, and one iron is all that is required. The cost of running an iron is about two cents per hour. The electric iron may be attached to an ordinary incandescent lamp socket by removing the globe and screwing the iron wire in place. The oven may be run for five cents an hour and the broiler for the same figure. The oven heat may be graduated by means of a switch. Pans and pots can be run at about the same cost. The fact that the current is used only for the time of cooking makes the cost somewhat less than when coal is used.

There are a number of kitchens in practical use in New York and Brooklyn, says a New York paper, and the most desirable results are obtained.

An Electrical Kitchen.

In the kitchens of these houses the coal stove has no place; and the gas-jet for lighting or heating is unknown. All cooking and water-heating is done by the electrical current, which the cook switches on from the wires in the kitchen wall as she requires it. Against the wall stands a table, or rather a small bureau, fitted with drawers and doors, and with a top of solid, blue slate. This is the stove, but it has no direct connection with the heating or cooking. It merely serves as a table on which to place the electrical cooking utensils, which are all thus highly insulated. To the left stands the boiler, in which the water is kept at a gentle heat.

On the same side, on an iron stand, is the electric oven, divided into several compartments, the upper of which is the plate-warmer. Pipes are led from the boiler to the sink faucets on the other side of the bureau. Hung over a hook in the wall are a number of twisted cords, with a glass screw-plug at one end and a push-plug at the other. These cords are made of very fine copper threads twisted together and insulated by rubber and cotton. Each cord has two strands, each of which is a conductor, one for the negative and one for the positive. In early days these were distinguished by making them of different colors, but this practice has been abandoned since it was discovered that it did not matter which course the current took. Upon other hooks, or shelves, are the cooking utensils—teapots, coffee-pots, saucepans, frying-pans, water-kettles, stew-pans, etc. An entire outfit is there, and each utensil is within easy reach of the cook. There is also ranged on the shelves a series of flatirons. Above the table, or bureau, are a number of receptacles to receive the screw-plugs, which are attached to the ends of the cords, and above each is a small switch, of which all that can be seen is a small projecting key similar to that used in the gas-cocks of chandeliers.

The mode of operation is extremely simple, and the densest greenhorn could familiarize herself with it in less than five minutes. If an order comes to the kitchen for some coffee, Mary takes down the coffee-pot, charges it with the fragrant berry and the due amount of water, and stands it upon the slate bureau top. She then unhooks one of the cords and screws the glass plug into its receptacle on the wall; the other end of the cord has two small plugs. These she pushes into receptacles in the base of the pot, and turns the switch. In a few minutes the water is boiling, and in a few more the stimulating liquid ascends to the epicures upstairs. The process is just as simple for all the other utensils. All are operated in the same way. Nothing could be simpler and nothing in the cooking way cleaner.

The process of stewing, however, requires different conditions. Here it is necessary to regulate the amount of heat so that the stew may be kept at the right temperature. The regulation is effected by wiring the circuits in a special manner, so that the various necessary temperatures can be obtained.

Perfection in the system was not obtained without much thought and considerable experiment. Resistance wires—that is, wires which are not good conductors, and which offer resistance to the passage of the electrical current and become heated in the process—were first wrapped in asbestos. This was too crude, and the wires were then imbedded in enamel. Here the fun began. Enamel after enamel was tried, but almost as soon as the current was turned onto the wires, crack would go the enamel, and the task had to be renewed. Finally an enamel of silicate, or, rather, a cement, was discovered, and electric-cooking became a fact. Its application to the utensil may be seen from the illustration.

Electric Ovens and Utensils.

Electric ovens are usually provided with several circuits, placed at the top or sides. It is divided into several compartments, each of which can be supplied with heat at a different temperature, so that meat may be cooking in the lower and the plates kept mildly warm in the upper. The oven is air-jacketed and has bright interior surfaces, so that all the heat is retained. A small incandescent lamp suspended in the interior permits of the cook watching the cooking process through a small window of thick, transparent mica.

These ovens, when heated for a quarter of an hour, carry on most cooking operations without further heating. They act like bakers' ovens, where the fire is applied for a certain time and then raked out, after which the oven has to carry on the baking for the rest of the day with the heat contained in itself. These ovens will, probably, be brought into more common use by the companies supplying current, which will push their use as the gas companies are pushing the gas stoves.

The electric griddle is just an iron plate, upon the bottom of which are set the wires in a bed of enamel; and during the World's Fair a skillful colored cook was kept pretty busy during the day turning out buckwheat and griddle cakes to an admiring throng, composed mostly of women. The gridiron is perhaps the only kitchen utensil which cannot be directly heated. But an electric fire to grill things over is obtained by running the bare wires closely together in and out over a small asbestos mat. As soon as the current is switched on the wires become incandescent, and a strong heat is thrown upward toward the meat or fish set over it on the gridiron. The fumes are carried off up a special chimney.

The rapid adaptation of electricity to the heating of flatirons and the general work of a laundry is proved by a case in England, where a large building, formerly a flourmill, was turned into a steam laundry. The old mill waterwheel was turned to account in driving an eighty-light dynamo, and not only is the whole building lighted by electricity, but all the linen is smoothed and glossed by the electrically heated irons. The outlay was small; the satisfaction complete.

Electricity is an excellent servant, and it is slowly being trained to new duties. Its uses are manifold, and its benefits innumerable. The only obstacle to its general use for household purpose is the high price of both utensils and current. The utensils are undergoing a process of cheapening, and we may shortly see electrical cooking and heating a matter of as everyday occurrence as the gas stove.

How a Rubber Forest Looks.

According to recent accounts of the reckless manner in which forests of rubber trees are destroyed, india-rubber will soon be much more scarce and costly than it now is, and when that happens it is probable that somebody will invent a substitute. At present, however, it is interesting to know what a recent traveler says of the india-rubber forests of Nicaragua.

"A forest of them may be detected without the eyes of an expert, for they are scored and dying from the wounds of the machete, the big knife used by the natives. The ordinary specimen of Nicaragua is from fifty to one hundred feet high, and about two feet in diameter.

"The bark is white and the leaves oval, with a slight inclination downwards. The cuts are made about two feet apart, and usually extend from the ground to the first branch, channels being scored in the sides to lead the juice into a bag. The average yield of a tree is from five to seven gallons of milky fluid.

"This is mixed with the juice of the 'wisth,' which hastens congelation. After this operation the crude rubber is baled up and shipped north to be refined and further prepared for commerce. Another tree, very similar to the rubber tree, and often mistaken for it, is the cow-tree. This yields a liquid very much like milk in taste and appearance."

Uncle Sam's Tropical Islands.

Capt. John Ross, in speaking of something recently published in regard to the undesirability of the United States owning islands so far away as the Hawaiian Islands, says that it does not appear to be generally known that the United States owns seventy-five islands in the North and South Pacific. They are nearly all within twelve degrees of the equator, north or south, and are principally guano islands of small size, which have been taken possession of by Americans. The American coasting laws apply to them, and foreign vessels are restricted from carrying the guano from them to the United States. Many of these islands are farther from the coast than the Hawaiian Islands, so Capt. Ross thinks there could be no objection to the United States owning the latter also.

Preserving Timber from Insects.

Experiments made in France have shown that the reason the sap-wood in timber is worm-eaten is because of the existence of starch in it. It is the starch that the insects are after, and they do not attack the hard wood because it contains no starch.

The experimenters have devised a method of preserving timber from such attacks. In the spring they cut a ring through the bark around the upper end of the trunk, and suppress all buds that are developed there. By autumn the starch has disappeared from the sap-wood and the tree is ready to be felled. Timber thus prepared, it is said, does not become worm-eaten.

Large "Gobblers."

The American bronze is the largest of all turkeys. Some of the weights attained by it are almost fabulous. Birds have been known to reach more than fifty pounds, and a "gobbler" was imported some time ago by the secretary of the Turkey Breeders' Club of Peterborough which weighed forty-five pounds and was a magnificent specimen of his race. The records of the great Birmingham show tell of old turkey cocks exhibited there weighing nearly forty pounds, of hens thirty pounds, of young cocks twenty-nine pounds, and of young hens nineteen pounds; but these are birds fed up for the purpose, and are exceptional.

THURSDAY.....MARCH 29, 1894.

Court.

Last week we left the court at work on the case against Wes. Harris for assault with intent to kill, as he had struck Wm. Derthick on the head with a riveting hammer. The jury sent him to Michigan City for two years. His attorney, Gen. Blair, is moving for a new trial.

Friday, Nellie Wonderly got a divorce from Jackson Wonderly, as he had deserted her. She is a bright looking woman and Jackson evidently deserved punishment for leaving her. His honor, Judge Emanuel, did not hesitate long in setting their "original contract" aside.

Then came on the case against Ollie Robbins. Wm. Fisher, who had a hand in looting Green's lunch room at the Wabash depot, had told the grand jury that "Smoke" had been present and took a share of the plunder. On the trial he was a witness and stated that he and "The" Robbins and Ollie met on the evening of December 11th, the night the Church Furniture Factory was burned and went down Main street together, and staid at the Wabash waiting room till near 10 o'clock. He and The Robbins, while standing at the south side of the building, he says, concluded to get something to eat by going over to Green's lunch room. They told Ollie to watch while they went over, and see if anyone came. He says Ollie stood out on the north side and watched while they were gone. He says he himself raised a window with a stick and got in and handed the goods out to "The." They then went back and found Ollie waiting where they had left him. All went into the waiting room and divided the booty into four parts, the fourth man being a tramp they had met there. He says they got two boxes and a half of cigars, several plugs of tobacco, some bottles of pop, a lot of candy, sardines, pies, etc. Green had testified to missing about that much of each, and that he had locked up and gone home early that evening. Fisher said that after dividing the goods, Ollie staid about fifteen minutes and then went home. He and "The" and the tramp staid till morning, except what time they were up at the fire. He was subjected to a rigid cross examination by Mr. Baxter, but stuck to his story pretty well, so that those who didn't know him might have believed it. The next witness was Timmerman, the man who has been sentenced to the pen for three years for burglary of a clothing store at Waterloo. He had been before the grand jury and had told that he had talked with Fisher and Ollie Robbins as to breaking into Green's store. But now, he claimed to have no recollection of what he said at that time, and flatly denied that either "Smoke" or Fisher had ever mentioned the matter to him. Seeing there was no proof of the orignal charge, which was for "burglary," the state asked that the case be dropped. Whether the testimony of Fisher was true or false, there are few who would believe him, and that killed the case. Robbins will do a wise thing if he takes warning by this and keeps away from that tough crowd. He has run with them too long already for his own good. Now is a good time to break off. P. D. West and E. D. Hartman represented the state in this case and Baxter & Brown were for the defendant.

Mary was divorced from J. S. Baker. Wes. Harris was refused a new trial, and will have to go over the road. Morehouse is on trial for being in with those who looted the cars at Garrett, and there are several others waiting for the same trouble. Arnold is brought back from Michigan City and is giving the others away.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court, in a cause wherein Louisa R. Cowan is plaintiff and Lewis Walters, Jennie B. Walters, James Provines, Helen Provines, John W. Bell, Thomas Barner, C. Altman & Co., Sarah Jones, the unknown heirs and descendants of Sarah Jones, deceased, are defendants requiring me to make the sum of six hundred fifty-eight dollars and eight cents, with interest on said decree and cost, I will expose at public sale to the highest bidder, on between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m., and 4 o'clock p. m. of said day, at the door of the court house of DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years of the following real estate, to-wit:

Saturday, March 31, 1894,

The northeast quarter (¼) of the southwest quarter of section three (3) in township thirty-three (33) north, of range thirteen (13) east, in DeKalb county, state of Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place, expose at public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs.

Sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

GEORGE C. RALSTON,
Sheriff of DeKalb County, by E. Blum, Dep.
Auburn, Indiana, March 6, A. D. 1894.
E. D. Hartman, Attorney for Plaintiff.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 2 1894,

at 2 p. m. All delegates to the judicial convention are earnestly requested to be present.

BEEKS ERICK, JOHN W. SOMERLOTT, } Chairmen.

Judicial Caucuses.

The committeeman in each precinct is requested to call the democratic voters of the several precincts at such hour and place as they may find most expedient, on Saturday, April 7, 1894, to elect a delegate to the judicial convention that meets in Waterloo, May 2.

JOHN F. SHUMAN.

City Caucus.

The democratic voters of Auburn will hold their caucus for the nomination of candidates for the various town offices, at the court room on Tuesday April 10, at 7 p. m. Don't fail to come. F. A. Bors t, J. F. Aber, and W. B. Brown, committee.

County Committee Meeting.

The committeemen from the various precincts of the county met in Auburn March 24, 1894, at 2 p. m., in the band room in the Farmers Bank building. They were rapped to order by M. Boland, who stated that Chairman Beeks Erick had sent him word to do so, as Erick could not leave his store. John Koons, of Waterloo, was made chairman pro tem, and M. E. Gardner, of the Butler Review, was made secretary. The call was read, and when the townships were called to see if all were present, every township responded. Nominations for chairman were then declared in order. Charles Rugman of Keyser announced the name of W. J. Frederick of that township, and Ab. Kelley, of Waterloo, announced John F. Shuman, of Waterloo. It was decided that the votes should be taken as was done two years ago, by calling on each township for its vote, when the vote would be given in by some delegate from that township. The ballots were prepared, and when the tellers, J. M. Hook and D. D. Moody, were just starting out to collect the votes, some one objected and thought there should be a secret ballot so all could cast a vote without fear of having it known. This plan was finally adopted after a good deal of talk for and against. Once more the ballots were prepared and the tellers received them. It resulted in 25 votes for Shuman and 13 for Frederick; total 38 votes, when there were only 36 to be cast. Owing to this error, the vote was not announced, but a second vote was taken, resulting in 25 for Shuman and 11 for Frederick. This gave it to Shuman. Mr. Frederick, in a forcible speech, moved to make it unanimous, which was done. Ab. Kelley, of Waterloo, was made vice-chairman and John Koons of the same place was elected treasurer. After a good deal of debate, it was decided that the chairman select his own secretary and an executive committee of five. Then came a discussion as to the time of holding the county convention, and after several dates were considered, it was decided that an early convention would get in the way of farm work, and on motion of Ted Keiham, John Picker's original motion for the second Saturday in May was changed to the second Saturday in June, and that date was settled. Then came a long struggle as to the place. The first vote, which was by ballot, showed: Auburn, 17; Waterloo, 13; Garrett, 5. No choice. The second ballot stood: Auburn, 16; Waterloo, 17; Garrett, 2. Here A. P. Foltz withdrew Garrett, and the final vote was: Auburn, 17; Waterloo, 18. So it goes to Waterloo. The meeting then adjourned. The call for caucuses to select the delegates to the various conventions will probably be made at an early date. There was quite a large attendance besides delegates, about 100 being present, and the room was crowded full all the time.

GOLD is reported in the Mesaba Range of hills in Minnesota. They were looking for iron, but will be just as well suited with gold.

ANOTHER cold wave swept over the country Saturday. In some places they report a fall of fifty degrees in a few hours. In Illinois where peaches and cherries were in bloom, much damage will be done to fruit.

SPENCER is now in full control of the pension office in Indianapolis. He will keep many of the old clerks for a time, until new ones can be broke into the work. Then as often as a change is made the place will go to a democrat.

WAR in Brazil is ended and the rebels have surrendered. This was partly brought about by the prompt measures of the American war vessels in defending our trading vessels, and partly by the recent election of a new president who will take office next fall.

GEN. A. V. RICE has been appointed state pension agent of Ohio. He will be remembered by many Waterloo people as a brother-in-law of W. C. Langan who was for some time cashier of the DeKalb County Bank at that place. Gen. Rice visited Langan several times.

HEAVY rainstorms all over the south last week, and terrible snow storms in the west and northwest, at the time we were having such fine warm weather here. In some sections snow was two or three feet deep, and trains were blockaded. It is believed large numbers of cattle perished, as they had strayed away during the fair weather.

COXEY, who was loudly advertised to start from Massillon, Ohio, Easter Sunday, with a vast army of the "unemployed," could only muster less than 200, when the hour for starting came. He had advertised that he would have a young lady riding a white horse as the goddess of liberty, but he failed to get any girl to go, so he got a darkey, who enjoyed it greatly. They reached Canton the first day, and as it was cold, both Coxey and his second in command, Brown, went to a hotel, while the "peace army," now numbering about 170, were locked up by the police. The whole thing is a disgraceful farce. He claimed he would take an army of 100,000 or more, and camp on the grounds before the capitol at Washington, and demand that the government issue 500 millions of paper money to be expended in making roads and other improvements where men could be employed. Of course congress would do no such a thing. Coxey's army was a fraud, for it was made up, not of the worthy unemployed, but a lot of tramps who would not work if they had a chance, but took this way to beat their way across the country under the pretense that they wanted work. Tramps from all over the country were on the way to join Coxey. At Indianapolis fourteen were arrested in a freight car, where they had got several kegs of beer and were making things lively.

A Pleasant Surprise.

A pleasant surprise was given Wilson McClellan, living 2½ miles west of Auburn, Thursday evening, March 15. Those present were: Frank and George Campbell, Wilson, Oscar, Ira and Clyde Grogg, Walter ——, John Miser, Wes. Eckhart, John Muson, Theo Gerke, Michael Olinger, Rust Loveland, Will Buss, Ott Clark of Garrett, George Rugman, Will McCombs, Henry Fak straw and Garrett Link.

The A. O. U. W. First Anniversary.

The social given by the members of Lodge No. 12 Ancient order of United Workmen was a grand success, the literary part being held in the "Armory" Hall and lunching or lap supper in the the G. A. R. Hall. The literary part consisted of speeches made by Grand Master Workman T. D. Neal of Frankton, members of the Garrett and Waterloo lodges, and members of our own lodge, interspersed with quartet music and Borst's Orchestra. We have heard nothing but praise for both speeches and music. In addition to those from town there were present, thirteen members of the order from Ft. Wayne, about twenty with their wives from Waterloo, and several couples from Garrett, making the total number present over 300 persons. The lodge is to be congratulated on the success with which they handled such a large gathering especially as regards the ease with which they served the lap supper, which consisted of cold baked chicken several kinds of cake and pie. We have been told the pie was especially prepared for the Ft. Wayne brethern, cream-bread, ham-sandwiches, pickles, fruit, and coffee.

Obituary.

The death of Dr. W. S. Allen, on Saturday, March 17, was a great shock to our people, especially to those who have resided in Auburn for many years, for he has long been a prominent figure here. His increasing feebleness and failing health had somewhat prepared our people for this. Yet at last it came as a sad blow to the community.

Dr. Allen was born in Harrison county, in eastern Ohio, March 20, 1822. He was united in marriage to Margaret Carson in 1847. In 1873 they moved to this county, and located in Auburn, where he has since practiced his profession, that of medicine, till failing health and the weight of years, gradually compelled him to retire from active life. He was a man of great force and of wide information and liberal mind. His medical education was received at the Cleveland Medical College, where he graduated in 1850. But both himself and wife had received a careful literary education and were highly cultured people. No children had come to bless their home, but their tastes and spirits were congenial and their lives of more than ordinary content and happiness. His death at the ripe age of nearly seventy-two, brings to a close, this happy union of nearly half a century's duration. His venerable companion has our people's deepest sympathy.

Dr. Allen, we may almost say, was always a Presbyterian. He united with that branch of God's people at the early age of fourteen, and was made an Elder at the age of twenty, an honor very rarely bestowed on one so young by any church, especially by a church so conservative as this. And no matter whether filling a position or not, he was a prominent figure in the church of his choice till death came to sever all his earthly relations. Church going people will miss his presence in the congregation, and his ever ready voice in worship. Truly a good man has departed.

The funeral services were at the residence on Monday, March 19, and he was laid to rest in a beautiful location, he and his wife had selected and consecrated with sacred hymns, in beautiful Woodlawn. The funeral discourse by Rev. F. C. Colvin, was very eloquent and appropriate, and touched a chord of sympathy in hundreds fo mourning hearts.

Twelfth Annual of the L. L. C.

It is always a pleasure to attend the "annuals" of the L. L. C.—the Ladies' Literary Club, of Auburn. For twelve years they have been an organized and working club, always progressive, always active, and highly appreciated by the fortunate ones who are afforded an opportunity to attend any of their meetings. True, the "annuals" are about the only meetings to which their friends are bidden, though in one or two instances, other public meetings have been held. Tuesday evening was their twelfth annual reunion and it was held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. McIntyre, on West Seventh street, the place that had witnessed their first meeting so many years ago. The rooms were handsomely decorated and Mr. and Mrs. McIntyre, with their well known hospitality, vied with the ladies of the club, in the hearty welcome given to the guests. About 100 were present and the spacious rooms were full. The exercises were, as usual, literary and musical. The first was an instrumental solo on the piano, by Miss McTighe, followed by a vocal solo by Mrs. F. J. Yesbera. Then came roll call, when each member of the club responded to her name by giving some important fact in American history. These responses began before Columbus and ended with the latest important events of recent years. Their past year's work has been in this line. Following this was an instrumental solo by Miss Flora Hoffman. Then came the welcoming address of the Club's president, Mrs. T. C. Ford. This was an original and very able address, finely composed and delivered in a very scholarly manner. Her speech ranked well with the many fine ones given by her predecessors in this office. Then came another musical number by Miss McTighe, then another solo by Mrs. Yesbera, and these were succeeded by the comedy, "The Husbands of the Company," a most laughable piece given by Mrs. Schaab, Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Barns, Mrs. Robbins and Mrs. Ehrlich. After another piano solo by Miss Hoffman, came the refreshments, which were all dainty and most enjoyable. The "frappee" stand was presided over by Mrs. Robbins, Mrs. Barns and Mrs. Wilson, and the tables by Mrs. Brown, Mrs. McCord, Mrs. Mollie Rose and Mrs. Ehrlich. But one opinion can be held of this entire entertainment. It was superb—the music, both vocal and instrumental, the speech, the comedy, and the refreshments. And we should not omit the finely decorated rooms, in which the club colors, yellow and green, were prominent, nor the amiable and enjoyable hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. McIntyre.

Found After Forty Years.

Another old land mark is being removed from our midst. The old log house that has stood on Elder Wards lot on the corner of Main and Fifth street, is being pulled down to make room for a new brick building. No one seems to know how long this old building has been there or who built it. But as soon as A. J. Ralston heard it was to be removed he called on John Cool who was doing the work and told him to look carefully in the floor of the second story, to see if he could find a silver half dollar that Mr. Ralston had lost there over forty years before. It appears that when he was a lad, his uncle John Ralston sent him to the shoemaker who worked in the second floor of the house, with a pair of shoes to be mended, and gave him a silver half dollar to pay for it. When he took out the coin to pay for the job it slipped from his fingers and rolled into a crack and could not be found. In tearing up the old building Mr. Cool found the coin among the logs at one side of the room. It was black, but on being cleaned is as good as ever. It is an American coin of date 1826. Mr. Ralston gave the finder $1 for it.

The Doctor's Trial.

The trial began Feb. 12. Last week and so far this week, the several attorneys, have been speaking. J. F. Shuman, Prosecutor Butler, and A. J. Baxter, for the state, came first. Then came those for defendant, F. M. Powers, W. G. Croxton and Mr. Barr, the last concluding Monday evening. Mr. Penfield followed on Tuesday, and then the last speech is that for the state, Judge McClellan's, which is now going on we presume. Then the judge will charge the jury, and they will likely be sent out to consider on Saturday. They may bring in a verdict in a short time or not. All the speeches have been able, and the fight has been a hard one.

A Surprise.

On the evening of March 13, there was a nice little surprise party at the home of Mr. Griffin in McIntyre's Addition. It was for a surprise on Mr. Griffin before they move to their new home at Fremont. It was a success. Among the friends who got together there were the following and their wives: Messrs Otto, F. H. Kring, R. Blum, Bailey, Platter, Ober, Wise, Phillips, Cutter, Baker, John Baird, Stonebreaker, Sherman Craig; Mesdames May, Hoisington, Fretz and Craig, with their daughters; Mr. Stoudacher and sister, Mrs. Myers, Mrs. Myers, Mrs. Thomas, Mrs. Ryan, Mrs. Gall, a sister of Mrs. Griffin from Pleasant Lake and others. Mrs. Griffin received a fine gold ring and Mr. Griffin a bible. Then there was an elegant supper which was highly enjoyed.

Obituary.

Little Nellie Mabel, daughter of Andrew and Elizabeth McClellan was born May 5th, 1893 and died March 20th 1894 age 10 months and 15 days.

As a bright star that shines for a night then is made invisible because of the greater light. So this beautiful little child gladdened the home for a short time then passed to that "Greater Light" Who said "Suiffer little children to come unto Me and forbid them not for such is the Kingdon of Heaven."

The funeral services were held at the home in Jackson township at 10 o'clock Thursday conducted by Rev. N. P. Barton Pastor of Grove Bethel church. The grief stricken parents have the sympathy of the entire community in this their first bereavement.

Cold Days in March.

The cold snap that caught us on Sunday and Monday, March 25 and 26, is not the first one that March has given us, by way of a surprise. In March 1864, the first days were warm and nice, and so on up to the 23rd, when it suddenly turned cold and next morning the mercury was down about to zero. We were then at Wolf Lake in Noble county. The heavy ice in the lake had partly melted in the warm sun and the body of it had floated out to the middle. But on the morning of the 24th there was a new sheet of ice strong enough to hold skaters and extending from the shores to the old ice in the middle. On this thin ice, in company with C. V. Inks, and a number of others, we skated until about ten in the forenoon when the warm sun began to weaken it so much that we were obliged to "scoot" for the shore, the ice being so thin that no two could go together. We went faster and faster as the ice got thinner and thinner till with a "thud" our steel skates struck the frozen sand at the margin and we sprawled out in the wet roadway that wound around the margin of the lake. In the course of the day the newly formed ice had mostly melted. A few years later we remember another cold snap in March. There had been a warm spell and all the snow had gone off, when suddenly on the morning of the 18th, the mercury was several degrees below zero. This was the time that wheat on exposed places, was killed out bodily simply by the severe cold and not by the usual process of alternately freezing and thawing and heaving out. It simply froze to death at one freezing. These March snaps remind us that we can't tie up to the weather in March, no matter what the weather sharps may say.

Mrs. W. L. Meese.

Margaret L. Norton was born March 6, 1830 at Cleveland, Ohio, and died March 17, 1894 at her home in Auburn, Ind, her age being 64 years and 11 days. She was united in marriage to W. L. Meese at Canal Fulton, Ohio, Feb. 21 1850. In 1855 they moved to DeKalb county, Ind., where they have since made their home, residing at first in the country, and later at Waterloo. But in 1872, on the election of Mr. Meese as sheriff they moved to Auburn, where they have since resided. In 1864 she united with the M. E church and remained a faithful member till her death. To Mr. and Mrs. Meese were born four children, Mrs. L. J. Hopkins of Cassopolis Mich., Mrs. Ira L. Eaton of Chicago, Orrin and Lettie all of whom with the venerable father remain to mourn her loss. The funeral was at the M. E. church March 19, 1894 at 2 p. m., interment being in Evergreen Cemetery. Services were by her pastor Rev. A. S. Wooton, in the presence of a large company of mourning friends. Mrs. Meese was a lady of the highest and best type of womanhood, and whether in the family circle, the church or in socials circles, she was always the same unaffected friend, kind mother and most exemplary christian.

Card of Thanks.

Rev. W. L. Meese desires to thank the many friends and neighbors who were so kind and thoughtful during the long sickness and suffering of his dear wife. With a heart full of gratitude these neighborly acts will be ever remembered.

PROFESSIONAL sluggers and prize fighters had better keep away from Iowa in the future. The anti-prize fight bill passed by the Legislature provides a maximum penalty of a year's imprisonment or a fine of $1,000 for the principals, and a fine of $500 for the accessories.

VIENNA is having its girl Anarchists of the Emma Goldman type, just as New York had. Fraulein Glass, a pretty girl still in her teens, with dark and windblown hair, has just led a successful strike there, and Amelia Riba, whose pretty head holds all the wisdom of 17 years, is talking anarchy two ours a day to immense audiences.

THE World's Fair attracted to it the best people of the world, but unfortunately it also attracted the very worst elements that live. Multitudes of these remained, and this fact accounts for the crowded condition of the Chicago jail to-day with its 600 prisoners awaiting trials for their crimes. Fifty-two of the number are charged with murder. The courts of justice will for some time be taxed by such echoes from the great fair.

JUDGE EDGAR ALDRICH of Littleton, N. H., made a strong argument in favor of the present jury system at the recent annual reunion of the Grafton and Cous Counties Bar Association, urging that it is the fairest trial for the accused and the safest for the public. He did not favor the abolition of the unanimity requirement, saying that he had tried nearly 100 cases, civil and criminal, since he left the bar, and could recall but three disagreements.

THE Suez Canal last year paid a dividend of 18 per cent. on its cost. This vindicates the judgment of De Lesseps, who always claimed that the enterprise would pay. Its cost was ninety million dollars. The Manchester Ship Canal cost seventy-five million dollars, and the revenue from it will pay dividends of 3 to 5 per cent. This for European investments is considered a good return. There is a growing interest in various American ship canals. One of these is through Cape Cod, to shorten the line for the growing coast trade along the New England seaboard. Railroad construction is declining. Perhaps now the time for more ship canals has come.

A BILL has been introduced into the Massachusetts Legislature providing for free employment offices for such cities as shall accept the plan. This has been done in Ohio, where a free employment bureau is attached to the department of labor. There are five cities which have bureaus of employment where books are kept for registering the names and addresses of those seeking employment, and also of those desiring help. The first office went into effect June 26, 1890. Since that time 1,507 persons registered seeking employment and 63,564 calls for help were made by employers. The number who secured work was 38,538. The five offices in Ohio have cost the state less than $10,000.

THE Los Angeles Express recently contained an exhaustive statement of the fruit product of California during the last year. Riverside now is claimed to be the most famous orange-producing locality in the world. Last year the shipments amounted to over 2,700 car loads, and this year it is estimated there will be over 3,000 car loads. There are now 7,000 acres of bearing orange and lemon orchards in Riverside, with an assessed valuation of $6,000,000 and an actual valuation of $18,000,000. The raisin crop of last year is estimated at 225 car loads. The last year also has been a notable one for Riverside in another direction, as the county of Riverside has been joined, with the county seat at that place, by a division of San Bernardino county. The new county is forty miles in extent from north to south and 180 miles east and west—an area large as that of Massachusetts. Everything grows big in California.

OLD old Connecticut, which has long been content to furnish the world with nothing more startling than wooden nutmegs and cheap tin-clocks, has turned out a "strong man." Not one of the paltry, everyday strong men, who support pianos on their sub-maxillary ligaments, but one who can smite a wild, dashing horse with his good right arm and send it to grass without visible effort. Middletown claims the man—big and brawn. At that historic spot a runaway horse attached to a sleigh dashed down a hill to a school-house loaded with people. As the animal rushed upon the boat, filling the passengers in all directions, the hero stepped forward with easy grace, swung his right, and laid it on the forehead of the surging horse. "The blow was dealt with such force that the animal fell as if struck with a sledge-hammer," says the report. There is a future before the man with the sledge-hammer arm and fist. He should be made to induce him to join the prize-ring and the governors would have no need of the militia to suppress prize-fights, as there would be no more "mills." Connecticut has a treasure which it should make the most of.

AN invention has been made in France by M. Hermite which promises to revolutionize the methods of disinfecting sewage water and flushing streets and sewers. The new disinfectant is simply electrolyzed sea water—sea water decomposed by the direct action of electricity. The worst and most malodorous portion of Paris was the St. Francis quarter. The quarter was "the hotbed of infectious disease." Its streets and sewers were flushed with the electrolyzed sea water. In some cases tanks were built upon the roofs of the worst tenement houses, and the new disinfectant was poured down through all the pipes and closets of the filthy dens. The effect was like magic. Every poisonous microbe was slain, and the locality became as sweet smelling as any in Paris. Undoubtedly this marvelous new fluid will soon be in common use in every seaboard city in Europe and in this country. Great mains pass from the harbor or sea adjacent to the central portions of a town where the electrolyzing plant is. It has been found that by passing the fluid through sewer pipe discharges they are thoroughly disinfected and made innocuous. By its means it is thought to be quite possible for sewerage pipes to discharge into rivers near a city without polluting the water. The chlorine still remaining in the sea water performs the office of disinfecting.

HERE are a few plain considerations for the minds of plain people. In case of an individual who fails in business, he fails when he becomes so deeply involved in debt that he can no longer stave off payment. He was not obliged to go in debt in the first place. But he wanted to enlarge his business. He put a mortgage on his farm because if he had larger barns he could store more grain and feed more stock and thus get more money. Perhaps the family needed a larger, handsomer house to live in or clothing that there was not money to pay for. At any rate, all of the people who fail—manufacturer, farmer, merchant, or business man—go in debt trusting to future gains to be able not only to wipe off the indebtedness, but even to make them richer. The farmer owes the merchant, the merchant owes the manufacturer, the manufacturer owes the capitalist who lent him money to enlarge his plant. In times which seem prosperous there is almost a fatal temptation to glide down hill into debt. It seems so easy to pay up. By and by somebody wants his money. All have run into debt together, and somehow nobody quite understands how all must pay about the same time. They cannot do it. Then there is a panic. All the world must wait till it can pay its debts. When that is done, off it goes, headlong, pellmell, and repeats the process over again. Now, if nobody went into debt, but used only the actual capital that he has in hand, no matter what the temptation, how often would there be panics?

Too Attentive.

"Politeness is a good thing, but sometimes it's wearin'—ralely," said Mr. Brown. "Seems so it almost borders on sarse to foller any one up so, an' pester 'em with kindness, as they do at these big hotels." "What are you objecting about now?" asked Mrs. Brown.

"Well, I was only thinkin' how them porters follerin you up like a parcel of detectives. When I sot my foot in one of them hotels up to New York a feller looked at me, jest as pryin', an' says, 'Can't I curry up your baggage?' It seemed jest as though he knew all I hed was my paper collars rolled up in the top of my hat. His manners was kind of twittin' like, seems ef."

"Well, I said you oughter' carried a change," began Mrs Brown in her most corrective manner.

"Now that aint the point," said her husband. "I'm jest sayin' I don't like to be spied on an' follered up. I got the best of 'em once, though.

"When I got on one of them ferry-boats a little chap in brass buttons come up an' asked me if my baggage was aboard. I said very dignified that it was right in front of him.

"'Whereabouts?' he up an' asks."

"'Well, I'm standin' right in the middle of it, namely my clo's,' says I; and that settled him."

It Was the Wrong Family.

The weary wanderer's eyes gleamed with confidence as he stepped up to the back door and knocked.

"I see there's horseshoes over this door and the barn door, mum," he said to the hard-featured woman who came to the door.

"Well, she said, with a strong stare.

"I've noticed that where there's horseshoes nailed up you always find warm hearts and a generous welcome," said the traveler, with a winning smile.

"You don't say?"

"Yes, mum, you people may be a little superstitious, but you are very kind to the poor."

"Well," we didn't put them hossshoes up," said the woman, drily. "The folks that did lives about ten miles from here now. It's a straight road—you can't miss it," and bang went the door.

The weary wanderer felt an electric chill down his spine as he started up the road.

"Say, you!" he heard her call. He turned to go back—she must have relented. "You might rip them shoes down an' take 'em along with yer, if you think them folk 'll want 'em," and bang went the door again.—Boston Journal.

THE SUGAR TRUST.

The Head and Center of Corruption in Congress.

The New York Herald recently contained an exhaustive article on the sugar trust—its past history; its methods of corrupting Congress; its enormous profits; its big dividends on watered stock; its slavish treatment of labor, mostly imported Huns and Poles; its defiance of anti-trust laws; its impudent demand for protection; its many false statements, etc.

The following is a part of the introduction and of the conclusion of this interesting article:

Ugly rumors of scandalous proceedings at Washington have been altogether too numerous of late. Worst of all, they seem to be well founded.

When the corrupting influences are exposed to the public, as they are now partly exposed to many at Washington, it will be seen that one great source of poison is the sugar trust.

Back of the combine of "conservatives"—Democrats for revenue—is the sugar trust.

Back of the protection to coal, iron ore, raw sugar, collars and cuffs and other local industries will be found the skillful hand of the greedy, powerful and unscrupulous sugar trust.

Back of the move to defeat the income tax—the most popular feature of the Wilson bill—is the cunning hand of the sugar trust.

It may be true some of the so-called "conservatives" would have made a fair and honest effort to secure increased duties on articles in their particular States; but without a more potent cause they would not have formed a Senatorial combine or pool ostensibly in the interests of certain of their protected constituents, but virtually to intrigue in the interests of the sugar trust:

1. To defeat, if possible, all tariff legislation, and thus leave the trust in possession of its protection of one-half cent. per pound duty on refined sugar—worth about $20,000,000 a year.

2. To delay action as long as possible—every month's delay being worth more than $1,000,000 to the trust.

3. To substitute a protective duty on sugar, like that now before the full Senate Committee, instead of the free sugar of the Wilson bill.

It is evident that a tariff bill must be passed, and this substitute—worth from $6,000,000 to $10,000,000 a year to the trust—is to be forced through, if possible. The "conservatives" are bound together for these purposes. Their leaders have had understandings with Havemeyer, Searles, and other sugar trust magnates, who have established temporary headquarters at Washington. Not only are the funds of the trust at the disposal of these leaders, but unusual opportunities for investments in sugar trust stocks are open to the leaders and their friends. If one of these Senators has a half million to invest, and wants to see it grow in a few days to a million, he can obtain a tip from those able and willing to make it a "sure thing."

It was asserted by prominent members of the House, before the bill had emerged from the Ways and Means Committee, that the sugar trust owned at least one of the committee, and that its interests would not suffer greatly. This proved true; the duty on refined sugar—all unnecessary for protective and ineffectual for revenue purposes—was reduced only from ¼ to ⅛ cents per pound. But so great was the popular demand for free sugar and so generally hated was the trust that Warner's amendment, making all sugar free, went through the House like greased lightning. While this amendment was pending Dick Croker went to Washington.

During this time Congressmen were flooded by telegrams from wholesale grocers (subsidized by rebates from the sugar trust), asking for a duty on refined sugars.

The clever officers of the Sugar Trust discerned several days before the final vote was taken in the House that they would lose their case there, and they turned their attention to the Senate, where a few hold the balance of power and where the field of investment was much more promising. They were not deceived.

They found both men and conditions favorable. By uniting with the lesser protected trusts and monopolies, in which most of the susceptible Senators were interested, they found it easy to bargain for the services of the "conservatives." It is said to be a fact that these Senators have been so zealous and faithful they have neglected their own local interests to do work for the trust.

Out of these conditions have come the ugly rumors of Senate tips, of Senators speculating in sugar stocks, of calls for investigation in the Senate, and of corruption never equaled in our national halls—except, of course, in 1890, when McKinley permitted the trusts to walk up and help themselves at the public trough.

* * * * * *

We have seen that the sugar trust can refine sugar more cheaply than it is refined anywhere else; that it has by far the largest and best equipped refineries in the world; that it pays less for labor per product than refiners in any other country; that it employs chiefly imported Huns and Poles, and treats them in a most degraded, slavish manner; that it is paying enormous dividends on highly watered capital; that there is no justification for protecting it because of export bounties in Europe or for any other reason; that it has been a chief source of bribery and corruption in our legislative, executive and judicial halls; that it has a complete monopoly in this country, and is most greedy and exacting in its demands; and that it is a constant violator of Federal and State anti-trust laws.

The corrupt Senate combine may force the present Democratic administration to accommodate this great robber, but an outraged people will soon have their say in the matter. "Conservatives," stand from under!

Claim Their Share.

The striking Trenton potters have put forth a reply to the statements recently made by the employers in regard to wages. It consists mainly of a denial, with specifications, that wages could actually be earned to the amount asserted by the manufacturers. Which party to the controversy is right on this point we cannot profess to say, but we do say that the strikers are proceeding strictly in accordance with the latest theory of protection when they say:

"The bosses make a complete somersault and jump right out of the potting business, and say our wages would compare favorably with the earnings of men in other trades. Gentlemen, we are potters, and we propose to mind our own business. The Government gives to the potting industry a high protective tariff, and we claim a right to a full share of that protection."

That is precisely in conformity with the doctrine of protection and wages as laid down by Thomas B. Reed in his debate with Mr. Cockran. The tariff is to give extra profits to manufacturers. It would give higher wages directly to workingmen if it could, but as it cannot it deposits with manufacturers a sum for the workingman's benefit, which the latter can get hold of in just one way, and that is by getting up a strong labor union and going on strike. The old theory was that the manufacturer would, out of pure patriotism and benevolence, turn over his extra profits to the laboring man; but a wider experience has convinced Mr. Reed, and apparently the Trenton operatives, that the manufacturer will not give up a cent on his tariff subsidy unless driven to it by strikes and boycotts.—New York Evening Post.

"Increase in Business."

Our neighbor, the Tribune, having pointed out the proofs of an "increase in business," hastens to assure its readers that the facts reported—which, it admits, are "encouraging"—are strictly in accordance with its theory that universal calamity is impending. "The expectation prevails," says our neighbor, "that the tariff bill will pass in any case, and will be followed by disastrous consequences, but business men and manufacturers are hastening all the more for that reason to get what business they can completed before the reverse arrives." Some of them, we notice, are enlarging their works in order that they may have more to lose in the coming crash. The Tribune of the same date announces that a steel plant in Johnstown, Pa., is to be removed at once to Cleveland, where the investment is to be increased to $3,000,000 by enlargements and the addition of new departments. This is one of the manufacturing companies that are "hastening to get what business they can completed before the reverse arrives."—New York Times.

An Anarchistic Suggestion.

The course of the tariff discussion in the Senate during the past week does not tend to increase popular respect or affection for our upper house. The selfishness, dissensions, and apparent disregard of public needs which this august body is exhibiting are irritating and humiliating. If a keg of dynamite were placed under the Senate wing with a one-hour fuse attached, and these noble Solons locked into their chamber with a notification that they would be let out when they voted on a tariff bill, and not before, there would be harmony and action with great promptness. But a little thing like the injury to commerce resulting from uncertainty and delay is entirely inadequate to quicken their gait.—Dry Goods Economist.

Growing Sensitive.

Senators are growing very sensitive all of a sudden to newspaper criticism. We wish we could believe that this was a healthy sign. But when the gentlemen get so excited at being denounced as "obstructionists"—which they are—and rest so quietly under the charge of having made money in Wall street out of their positions, the country will not, we think, be much impressed with their show of virtue.—Indianapolis News.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

A COLUMN OF PARTICULAR INTEREST TO THEM.

Something that Will Interest the Juvenile Members of Every Household—Quaint Actions and Bright Sayings of Many Cute and Cunning Children.

The Four Sunbeams.

Four little sunbeams came earthward one day,
Shining and dancing along on their way,
Resolved that their course should be blest.
"Let us try," they all whispered, "some kindness to do;
Not seek our own pleasuring all the day through,
Then meet in the eve at the west."

One sunbeam ran in at a low cottage door,
And played "hide and seek" with a child on the floor,
Till baby laughed loud in his glee,
And chased with delight his strange playmate so bright,
The little hands grasping in vain for the light
That ever before them would flee.

One crept to a couch where an invalid lay,
And brought him a dream of the sweet summer day,
Its bird song, and beauty, and bloom,
Till pain was forgotten and weary unrest,
And in fancy he roamed through the scenes he loved best,
Far from the dim, darkened room.

One stole to the heart of a girl that was sad,
And loved and caressed her until she was glad,
And lifted her white face again.
For love brings content to the lowliest lot,
And finds something sweet in the dreariest spot,
And lightens all labor and pain.

And one, where a little blind girl sat alone,
Not sharing the mirth of her play-fellows, shone
On hands that were folded and pale,
And kissed the poor eyes that had never known sight,
That never would gaze on the beautiful light,
Till angels had lifted the veil.

At last, when the shadows of evening were falling,
And the sun, their great father, his children was calling,
Four sunbeams sped into the west.
All said, "We have found that in seeking the pleasure
Of others we fill to the full of our own measure,"
Then softly they sank to their rest.

Holiday Cottage of the Little Aberdeens.

Probably the most unique and interesting playhouse in the world is Holiday Cottage, which Lord and Lady Aberdeen had built for the amusement and instruction of their four children, Lady Gordon, Lord Haddo and the Honorables Dudley and Archie Gordon. The cottage stands about half a mile from Haddo House, on the borders of a wood. In order that their children might be better able to appreciate the difficulties and delights of housekeeping, Lord and Lady Aberdeen had this cottage fitted up with all the goods and chattels of a humble home, except that there is no sleeping accommodations in it. You walk across the field and turn into the wicket gate of a small cottage garden, where Lord Haddo and the Honorables Dudley and Archie Gordon grow potatoes, cabbages and strawberries, and where the three brothers dig and delve, fetch water from the pump in the neighboring field, mend fences, polish door-knockers, chop wood and make themselves otherwise useful. Lady Marjorie grows roses and other flowers in the garden, and all the four owners of Holiday Cottage are intensely interested in a tiny rockery close to their door. In this kitchen Lady Marjorie practices all the details of housekeeping. If the floor is dirty, she scrubs it; when the grate is cold she kneels in front of it and cleans it, and lays the fire; the brightness of the cutlery and crockery depends on her handiwork, and if the owners of Holiday Cottage invite guests to tea or luncheon she must prepare whatever refreshments she offers to them.

A Doll's House.

A fascinating dollhouse that was a wooden box a month ago is about 3 feet long and 1½ feet wide, says an exchange. It cost a quarter of a dollar. The lid was put on hinges, and when the box is stood upon end it forms the door or side of the house that can be set wide open. Two shelves are fitted in for floors, and four holes were cut for windows on each floor. These are filled in with window glass found about the house. The outside of the house is painted a warm yellow, with white around the windows. The walls are covered with old blue cartridge paper, with a frieze of pale-yellow roses and olive pattern on the second story. The wall paper was found in the house, too, but books and samples are often given away by dealers in wall paper. If paper is not to be had without an outlay, cover the walls with pale tinted silesia or cambric, with a little frill at the top. Fasten to the wall with tacks. Then add little curtains of lace or cheesecloth and make rugs or carpets of bits of old carpet or heavy cloth. A piece of plush of olive or cardinal, with a wide border of another darker color, would make a rich looking carpet.—Exchange.

Swamp-Root Cured Him

After all Other Medicines and Doctors Failed.

"My clothes hung to my bony frame like a bag"

MR. SILAS GALIMORE, OF SPENCER, OWEN COUNTY, INDIANA,

As he appeared before using Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.

Almost every person is familiar with the hardships to which a Farmer's life is exposed. Mr. Galimore was a man of iron constitution and stalwart frame, but hard work and a series of colds, brought on by repeated exposure, developed into

A Very Bad Case of Kidney Trouble

and a general derangement of the urinary organs, which finally broke him down, and from a giant in strength he became in less than a year a weak, trembling and almost a helpless man. Mr. Galimore tells the interesting story in his own way. Pausing a moment, he said: "My whole trouble seemed to have settled on my kidneys and in my urinary organs, and continued to distress me more or less for about eight years. I went to a number of different doctors of good repute, but kept getting worse all the time; my appetite became very bad and my strength all deserted me. I got so weak that I could walk but a few rods without resting. I used to be a big, heavy, strong man, weighing was weak and pale, my clothing hung to my bony form like bag and looked as if they were twice too large for me. After having been treated by the best physicians, receiving only temporary relief, I lost all hope and thought there was no cure. One day my son was in Frank Lawson's Drug Store, your agent at Spencer, when I was feeling more dead than alive. He persuaded him to have me try a bottle of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root Kidney, Liver and Bladder Remedy. I did so and soon began to get relief, and steadily improved in every way, gaining in strength and weight until

200 Pounds, but I Ran Down to 133 Pounds,

Now I Tip the Scales at 202 Pounds.

I am at the present time a vigorous old man of 74 years, and feel that I have a new lease of life. I can only say to those who have lost all hopes on account of the failure of physicians and medicines, that they will not have performed every duty they owe to themselves and those who may be dependent upon them, until they have made one more effort and tried Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.

Jan. 15th, 1894. Sincerely yours, SILAS GALIMORE.

Slaves in New England.

In the sixteenth century the system of slavery was fast disappearing from Western Europe as being inconsistent with their duty for Christians to hold Christians as slaves. But this charity did not extend to heathens and infidels! In the latter part of the seventeenth century the African slave trade was considered the most profitable part of British commerce. New England naturally followed the lead of older countries, and her exchange, for humanity, of rum, molasses, and other commodities acceptable on Guinea and Gold coasts began.

In 1638 Samuel Maverack of Massachusetts bought African slaves, and in 1650 "a neager maybe 25£" appears in an inventory in Hartford. Ere long every well-to-do family had its quota of negroes for necessary domestic service and labor on the "plantation" of the Northern agriculturist, not in large numbers, as later, on the cotton plantations of the South, but one or two, or even seven or eight in a family.

The slaves imported were of various colors, tribes, and physiognomies. Some were jet black, with features approaching those of the European; some were of a tawny yellow, with flat noses and projecting jaws. These latter, coming from the delta of the Niger, were noted for an indomitable capacity for endurance, and therefore esteemed the best slaves. A few were Mohammedans, among whom were occasionally found persons of some education who knew Arabic and could read the Koran. But the great mass were pagans, in a condition of gross barbarism.—Harper's Magazine.

The Japanese Currency.

An interesting report from the British Legation in Japan, just issued, deals with Japanese currency, past and present. The gold coins now in circulation range from $1 to $20, while the silver coinage includes $1, and the subsidary coins down to 5c. During the last fiscal year, which ended on March 31, 1893, the importation of silver bullion was unusually large, and the coinage of $1 pieces was exceptionably heavy. In August last 100 silver dollars purchased sixty-one and one-quarter gold dollars. The sketch of the history of the paper currency of Japan given in the report is of special interest, for it explains the measures by which the depreciated paper of 1880 was brought up to par value without resort to a foreign loan. Between 1871 and 1878 the gold dollar was the unit and was legal tender to any amount. In 1878 this simple gold standard was abolished, and the silver dollar of 416 grains and 900 fineness was made universally current in all public and private transactions without limit. Over two-thirds of the gold coins struck in the Japanese mint since 1871 have been exported, and "it is plain that if the present rate of depletion continues there will be soon very little gold left in the country," while the value of silver coin and bullion has largely increased. The amount of each in circulation in August last was officially estimated as follows: Gold, $5,837,892; silver, $20,481,307. These amounts, of course, do not include the Treasury reserve, of which there is about $22,000,000 in gold and $64,000,000 in silver.—London Times.

Shelf-Forgetting Love.

We make a great mistake in treating the affections and emotions of human nature as if they were goods to be bought and sold on equal terms of exchange. No one of course admits this in words; yet, when we selfishly complain of or secretly harbor the thought that we have received less than we gave in love or service, in sympathy or good-will, what other construction can it bear? To reproach another, even in thought, with giving us less confidence or sympathy or love than we have given to him is simply to show that we know nothing of the nature of these sweet affections. Their freedom is their life. We may injure them, we may destroy them, but never by pressure or compulsion can we force them to flow in any channel but their own. It is very true that love begets love, but that is not the selfish love that is ever grasping, but the generous and self-forgetting love which pours itself forth gladly and abundantly without a thought of return. That is the love which wins love from every one, not consciously or intentionally, but naturally and freely, because no one can help it.

Origin of a Familiar Phrase.

The phrase "mad as a hatter" has no reference to that respectable artist who designs the crowning article of civilized male attire, but relates back to the Anglo-Saxon word "atter" (an adder or viper.) "Mad" was formerly used as a synonym for violent or venomous, and is still used in that sense in some parts of England as well as in this country. The phrase, therefore, strictly means as "venomous as a viper," the old form, "mad as an atter," or adder, having been corrupted to "mad as a hatter." "In that direction," the cat said, waiving its right paw round, "lives a hatter, and in that direction," waving the other paw, "lives a March hare. Visit either you like; they're both mad."—Brooklyn Eagle.

A Stepping-Stone to High Rank.

Dublin Castle has been the official residence of the Chief Governor of Ireland since the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's reign; that is for more than 330 years. Nearly eighty different Vicories have ruled within its walls during that time, and not many with conspicuous success, except so far as advancing their own personal interests went, the Irish Viceregal throne being generally a stepping-stone to higher rank for its occupant. In late times Lord Wodehouse was created an earl, Lord Abercorn a duke, and Lord Zetland a marquis. Lord Spencer refused a marquisate, and Lord Londonderry accepted the garter, though he might possibly have preferred a dukedom.—London Truth.

Plating Aluminum.

A process of plating aluminum has been devised by Prof. Neesen, a German chemist, which shows very good results. The aluminum is first dipped in a solution of caustic potash or soda, or in muriatic acid, until bubbles of gas begin to appear, then into corrosive sublimate, then a second time into the caustic or acid, and finally in a solution of a salt of the desired metal. A film of the metal is rapidly formed, and adheres so firmly that, it the case of gold, silver, or copper, the plate may be rolled out or polished.—London Engineering News.

A Joke Tried by Jury.

A North Carolina paper tells the following: At Hartnett County Superior Court a few years since, Judge Snipp presiding, the trial of a cause had been protracted until midnight. The jury were tired and sleepy, and showed flagging attention. Willie Murchison, who was addressing the jury, thought to arouse them, so he said: "Gentlemen, I will tell you an anecdote." Instantly the judge, the jury, and the few spectators pricked up their ears and were all attention, as Murchison was admirable in that line, had a fund of anecdotes, and no one could tell them better. But he soon proceeded to tell one of the dullest, prosiest, and most pointless jokes possible. Everybody looked disappointed. The judge, leaning over, said in an unmistakable tone of disappointment, "Mr. Murchison, I don't see the point of that joke." "Nor I either," responded the witty counsel. "But your Honor told it to me, on our way down here, and as I thought the lack of appreciation must be due to my obtuseness I concluded to give the joke a jury trial."

The Grocer's Trick.

Said Senator Calvin S. Brice recently: "The remark in the Bible about not muzzling the ox that treadeth out the grain always appeals to me. It reminds me of one of the first tasks I ever did. I was hired by a baker at 50 cents a day to pick the stems and stones from a quantity of dried currants. Now, that is labor which, under ordinary circumstances, would appeal to a boy, but, do you mind, the man made me whistle 'Yankee Doodle' every minute of the time I was at work."

Hot Water.

A medical authority says that the most potent and most perfect remedy for sleeplessness is to drink hot water. If one wakes in the night and becomes hopelessly wide awake, an invariable remedy is a glass of perfectly hot—not warm—water. It can be heated over the gas or over a spirit-lamp, and sipped while very hot; and one who takes it will find himself going off to sleep like an infant, and getting too the most restful and peaceful sleep imaginable.

HE KNEW HIS BUSINESS.

A Smart Boy Knows How to Run an Engine and Bother a Parson.

The writer paid a visit to the Mechanics' Fair in Boston, and stood for a moment near an engine in the basement. The engineer in charge possessed a bright little son whom he had taught the method of stopping and starting the machine. The little boy, who did not seem to be over 10 years of age, was standing by the engine when a gentleman came up to him and said:

"You seem to be a pretty small boy to run such a big engine."

"I suppose I am pretty small," replied the boy, "but I can do it all right."

"You think you understand your business?" continued the visitor.

"Yes, sir, I do."

"Can you start the engine?"

"I can."

"Let's see you start it."

The boy opened the valve and the flywheel slowly started to resolve.

"You really can do it, can't you?" said the visitor.

"Yes, sir," modestly answered the boy.

"Can you make it go backward?" asked the man.

"Backward or forward, it doesn't make any difference to me," replied the young engineer.

"Let me see you run it backward."

The boy stopped the engine and quickly reversed it, so it ran in an opposite direction.

"Well, I declare, my boy, you seem to understand your business perfectly."

The boy said nothing for a moment, but eyed the stranger suspiciously. Suddenly an idea appeared to strike him, and he said:

"May I ask what your business is?"

"Why, certainly; I am a minister of the gospel."

"Where do you reside?"

"Oh, right across the river here, in Cambridge."

"Do you understand your business?" further questioned the youngster.

"I believe I do," replied the minister, good-naturedly.

"Can you repeat the Lord's Prayer?"

"Why, certainly."

"Say it for me," requested the boy.

The clergyman did so.

"You really do know how, don't you?" laughingly said the little engineer.

"Why, of course, I do; I repeat it several times a day."

"Well, now, say it backward; you know I ran the engine backward for you."

The clergyman, after a moment's hesitation, said he could not do it.

"You can't do it?" said the little fellow. "Well, you see, I understand my business a great deal better than you do yours."

The clergyman appeared to think so, and retired.—Cassell's Magazine.

Some of his remarkable feats are as follows: Jump over twenty chairs, jump over six chairs in one jump, jump over two chairs 18 feet apart, jump over a horse 15 hands high, jump backward over two chairs. These are only a few of Darby's feats, there being many others equally astonishing.

About Introductions.

Gentlemen do not ask for introductions to one another because they do not generally wish to become acquained, or if one desires to do so, he very properly hesitates to force himself on the attention of another person who may be unwilling to know him. Ladies do not under ordinary circumstances ask for introductions to one another for reasons which will be very readily understood. If one lady does ask, however, the person to whom she applies should find out before making the introduction whether it will be agreeable to the other lady. An exception to this rule, both for ladies and gentlemen, is found in the case where they are invited especially to meet some person. One not only has a right to ask to be presented to the guest of the evening, but not to do so would often show a lack of courtesy. At a very large gathering, or where the honored guest is a person of distinction, one should not be too forward about pressing one's claims, especially if the guest be already talking with those who might be more agreeable to him. Modesty is usually a safe virtue to cultivate. Another exception to the rule is found in cases were it is evident from the circumstances that the hostess has omitted the introduction, either from thoughtlessness or because she supposes that the ladies already knew each other. In this case the lady might ask the hostess to make the introduction.—Philadelphia Times.

A Famous Bareback Rider.

James Robinson, who for a long time held the title of champion bareback rider of the world, is spending his declining years on his farm in Missouri. He is by no means an old man, but has retired from the circus arena. He still has many of the valuable gifts that he received in many parts of the world, including those from Queen Victoria and the old Emperor William of Germany. Mr. Robinson is the same little wiry man that he always was, and, except for his hair, has not the appearance of being more than 40 years old.

The Sting of the Nettle.

The leaf and stem of a nettle are literally clothed with erect hollow hairs. If one of these hairs is viewed under a microscope it will be seen that its free end, after tapering to a very fine degree of slimness, finishes as a little knob, while in the other direction, after gradually becoming more robust, it suddenly expands into a large bulb corresponding with the poison gland of the adder.

The point of the hair is very brittle, and contact with our skin causes the end to snap off, leaving a hollow needle point which readily pierces our cuticle, and, pressing upon the bulb at the other end, the poison is forced through the central channel and inflames our blood. The tender-handed who stroke the nettle are stung for their pains, because their gentleness has only served to break the brittle points and render them fit for piercing, but the rough-handed break the hairs at their thickest parts, where they are too stout to prick.

Our common nettles, though they are capable of inflicting considerable annoyance upon many persons, are too insignificant, nevertheless, to be included among vegetable monsters, and we have only referred to them for the sake of making clear the enormities of some big cousins—giants of the nettle family. These are, first, the Urtica stimulans and Urtica crenulata of the East Indies, species whose attack upon one's hand is sufficient to cause the arm to swell with a most frightful pain, which lasts for weeks. But even these are milk-and-water nettles by comparison with the Urtica urentissima, which grows in Timor, where it bears the significant title of Daoun setan, or devil's leaf. The effects of its sting last for a year, and have often produced death.—Good Words.

The Cigarette Vice.

The use of cigarettes is not merely the use of tobacco, it is a vice by itself. In reformatories where the cure of the opium, alcohol, and cigarette habits is a business, cigarette patients are not restricted from smoking cigars and pipes, which are regarded as comparatively harmless. The cigarette works a special evil of its own which tobacco in other forms does not affect. This evil result may be due to drugs, or to the paper wrappers, or to the fact that the smoke of cigarettes is almost always inhaled into the lungs, while cigar smoke is not. As to that, let the experts decide: about the fact of the effect there is no doubt, and no dearth of evidence. No other form of tobacco eats into the will as cigarettes do. It is the infernal cheapness of the cigarette and its adaptability for concealment that tempt this school-boy's callow intelligence.—Harper's Weekly.

A Spring That Turns Things to Stone.

The local geologists of Lawrence County, Pennsylvania, say that there is a spring in Beaver Township, in that county, which has wonderful lapidescent qualities, its petrifying powers being sufficient to transform moss, sticks, leaves, and even animal flesh into solid stone in a surprising brief period. This rill of wonderful water is located on the farm of one W. S. McGinnis, and is less than two miles from the little village of West Moravia. Its singular properties were first noted by William Allsworth away back in 1837. At that time there was a stone lying near where the spring bursts forth that was not much larger than a common wooden water bucket. At the present time that stone will weigh, according to estimates made by reliable citizens, not less than fifty tons. St. Louis Republic.

THE TRUST AFTER NO-TO-BAC.

Estimated That Half a Million Tobacco Users Will Be Cured in '94 by the Use of No-To-Bac, Causing a Loss of Many Millions of Dollars to Tobacco Manufacturers.

CHICAGO, March 24.—[Special.]—It was reported to-day that a large sum of money had been offered the proprietors of the cure for the tobacco habit called "no-to-bac," which is famous all over the country for its wonderful effect. This offer, it was said, was made by parties who desire to take it off the market and stop its sale, because of its injury to the tobacco business. Mr. H. L. Kramer, general manager of the no-to-bac business, was interviewed at his office, 45 Randolph street, and when questioned, promptly said:

"No, sir; no-to-bac is not for sale to the tobacco trust. We just refused a half million from other parties for our business: Certainly no-to-bac affects the tobacco business. It will cure over a half million people in 1894, at an average saving of $50 which each would otherwise expend for tobacco, amounting in round figures to $25,000,000. Of course tobacco manufacturers and dealers' loss is the gain of the party taking no-to-bac. Does no-to-bac benefit physically? Yes, sir. The majority of our patients report an immediate gain in flesh, and their nicotine saturated systems are cleansed and made vigorous. How is no-to-bac sold? Principally through our traveling agents. We employ over a thousand. It is also sold by druggists, wholesale and retail, throughout the United States and Canada. How are patients assured that no-to-bac will effect a cure in their case? We absolutely guarantee three boxes, costing $2.50, to cure any case. Failure to cure means the money back. Of course there are failures, but they are few, and we can better afford to have the good will of an occasional failure than his money. We publish a little book called 'Don't Tobacco Spit or Smoke Your Life Away,' that tells all about no-to-bac, which will be mailed free to any one desiring it by addressing the Sterling Remedy Co., 45-49 Randolph street, Chicago."

When He Quit.

In a civil action on money matters, the plaintiff had stated that his financial position was always satisfactory. In cross examination he was asked if he had ever been bankrupt.

"No," was the answer.

Next question:

"Now, be careful; did you ever stop payment?"

"Yes," was the reply.

"Ah," exclaimed the council, "I thought we should get at it at last. When did that happen?"

"After I paid all I owed," was the answer.

Has His Throne in the Kitchen.

Otto Ehlers, the famous German traveler, tells of the easy-going Chinese prince whom he visited in the Laos states while on his way from Siam to Tonquin. The present ruler leaves the care of affairs chiefly to his wife. He has had his throne placed in the palace kitchen, so that he can receive visitors and watch the preparation of his meals at the same time. The subjects seem to be content with his manner of administration and admire the democratic spirit manifested in his choice of a throne room.—New York Telegram.

The Moujik Czar.

Alexander III seems determined to live up to his sobriquet of "The Moujik Czar." He has just affixed his signature to a project of law now being elaborated by the Council of the Empire, which is destined to render inalienable the landed allotments of the peasants. The object of this measure is of course to prevent the seizure of the land for debt by the money lenders, whom he regards as the principal cause of the present distress and agricultural depression in his dominions. For the peasants, when once deprived of their lands, lose every interest in the welfare of their "mir," or community, and drift away to the towns in search of work, where they help to swell the ranks of the unemployed, who constitute a permanent source of embarassment to the authorities.

Austere.

James Payn tells of an English gentleman who objected to Christmas "waits." On one occasion, on being called upon the next day by the persons who had awakened him with carols on the previous night, he inquired their business.

"Well, sir," was the modest rejoinder, "we are the waits."

"I am not surprised," was the unexpected reply.

"We are come," they continued, "for the usual gratuity."

"I did hope," he said, with quiet dignity, and a pity of human nature in his tone, "that you had come to apologize."

Crossing the Atlantic

Usually involves seasickness. When the waves play pitch and toss with you, strong indeed must be the stomach that can stand it without revolting. Tourists, commercial travelers, yachtsmen, mariners, all testify that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the best remedy for the nausea experienced in rough weather on the water. Nervous and weakly travelers by land often suffer from something akin to this, and find in the Bitters its surest remedy. No disorder of the stomach, liver or bowels is so obstinate that it may not be overcome by the prompt and thorough remedy. Equally efficacious is it for chills and fever, kidney and rheumatic trouble and nervousness. Emigrants to the frontier should provide themselves with this fine medicinal safeguard against the effects of vicissitudes of climate, hardship, exposure and fatigue.

The Talismanic Moonstone.

The remarkable peculiarity of the moonstone is, that while in all other gems internal seams are called flaws, and detract from their value, in the moonstone they are called "magic mirrors" because those favored mortals who are gifted with the illumination of the astral light can, by its aid, read on those surfaces of milky white the reflections of the past and the promise of the future.

Could Hold His Tongue.

General P. G. T. Beauregard was noted for his secretiveness. At Manassas Junction, in 1861, one of the men who did not clearly understand his position asked General Beauregard about certain big guns that had just arrived from Richmond. Beauregard replied: "Young man, if the coat on my back knew the secrets of my heart, I would cut it in pieces."

A House in a Fret.

Let the mother become sick and helpless, and the house is all in disorder. When both father and mother are down, you may as well close the shutters. Order is brought out of chaos often very easily, and Mrs. John Malin, of South Butte, Mont., Feb. 17, 1883, found an easy way out of her difficulties, as she writes thus: "My husband and I took very bad rheumatism from severe colds, and my arms were so lame I could not raise them to help myself. I sent at once for a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, and before the bottle was half empty I could go about my work. My husband became so lame he could not get out of bed. Two and a half bottles completely cured him. I will always praise St. Jacobs Oil, and you may use this as you see fit."

After reading the following letters can any one longer doubt that a trustworthy remedy for that terribly fatal malady, consumption, has at last been found? If these letters had been written by your best known and most esteemed neighbors they could be no more worthy of your confidence than they now are, coming, as they do, from well known, intelligent and trustworthy citizens, who, in their several neighborhoods, enjoy the fullest confidence and respect of all who know them.

K. C. McLin, Esq., of Kempsville, Princess Anne Co., Va., whose portrait heads this article, writes: "When I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery I was very low with a cough and at times spit up much blood. I was not able to do the least work, but most of the time was in bed. I was all run-down, very weak, my head was dizzy and I was extremely despondent. The first bottle I took did not seem to do me much good, but I had faith in it and continued using it until I had taken fifteen bottles and now I do not look nor feel like the same man I was one year ago. People are astonished and say, 'well, last year this time I would not have thought that you would be living now.' I can thankfully say I am entirely cured of a disease which, but for your wonderful 'Discovery' would have resulted in my death."

Even when the predisposition to consumption is inherited, it may be cured, as verified by the following from a most truthful and much respected Canadian lady, Mrs. Thomas Vansicklin, of Brighton, Ont. She writes: "I have long felt it my duty to acknowledge to you what Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and his 'Pleasant Pellets' have done for me. They almost raised me from the grave. I had three brothers and one sister die of consumption and I was speedily following after them. I had severe cough, pain, copious expectoration and other alarming symptoms and my friends all thought I had but a few months to live. At that time I was persuaded to try the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and the first bottle acted like magic. Of course, I continued on with the medicine and as a result I gained rapidly in strength. My friends were astonished. When I commenced the use of your medicines, six years ago, I weighed but 120 pounds and was sinking rapidly. I now weigh 135, and my health continues perfect."

Mrs. Thos. Vansicklin

"Golden Medical Discovery" cures consumption (which is scrofula of the lungs), by its wonderful blood-purifying, invigorating and nutritive properties. For weak lungs, spitting of blood, shortness of breath, nasal catarrh, bronchitis, severe coughs, asthma, and kindred affections, it is a sovereign remedy. While it promptly cures the severest coughs, it strengthens the system and purifies the blood.

"Golden Medical Discovery" does not make fat people more corpulent, but for thin, pale, puny children, as well as for adults reduced in flesh, from any cause, it is the greatest flesh-builder known to medical science. Nasty cod liver oil and its "emulsions," are not to be compared with it in efficacy. It rapidly builds up the system, and increases the solid flesh and weight of those reduced below the usual standard of health by "wasting diseases."

To brace up the entire system after the grip, pneumonia, fevers, and other prostrating acute diseases; to build up needed flesh and strength, and to restore health and vigor when you feel "run-down" and "used-up" the best thing in the world is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It promotes all the bodily functions, rouses every organ into healthful action, purifies and enriches the blood, and through it cleanses, repairs, and invigorates the entire system.

A Treatise on Consumption, giving numerous testimonials with phototype, or half-tone, portraits of those cured, numerous references, also containing successful Home Treatment for chronic nasal catarrh, bronchitis, asthma, and kindred diseases, will be mailed by the World's Dispensary Medical Association of Buffalo, N. Y., on receipt of six cents in stamps, to pay postage. Or The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser, 1,000 pages, 300 illustrations, mailed for $1.50.

There are a large number of democrats anxious to serve the "dear people" as city marshal. The names of G F. Metcalf, J. J. Schreiners, Frank Mounts, W. F Hathaway, E. Van Fleit and D. W. After our letter had been sent to the COURIER last week, there occurred in Garrett one of the biggest sensations that has happened for a long time. A lady, who formerly lived at Auburn, and whose parents live north of this city, but who married a prosperous farmer and now lives in Lagrange county, was caught in the act of shop-lifting at "The Fair," J. Wm. Wagner's large variety store. She was visiting her parents and relatives here and came up town to do some shopping and went into the above named establishment to buy some gloves. Miss Clara Wagner waited on her and when she happened to turn her back a moment the woman slipped a pair under her waist. When the clerk turned around again the lady informed her that there was nothing in the lot that suited her and guessed she would take nothing at present. When Miss Wagner put the gloves away she discovered that one pair was missing and looking at the woman, she saw the gloves extending from under her waist. She was informed of the fact, but denied it and started on a brisk walk toward the door. Miss Clara followed her and took hold of her when she was going out, but the woman shook off her hold and started toward the depot Miss Fannie Wagner and Miss Bottsford were standing in front of the store and were informed of the transaction. They followed the woman and when in front of Isaac Whirledge's saloon she drew out the gloves and threw them at the young ladies No prosecution followed and for that reason, together with her social standing in the community where she lives and in the county, we will not mention her name, but if ever repeated she will be shown up in her full light.

MOSES GONSER.
Foreman.

When the verdict was read the defendant, Deeters, was unusually pale but apparently never moved a muscle or changed expression in the slightest degree.

The court room was crowded with spectators when the verdict was returned but all had the good taste to abstain from any demonstration of either approval or disapproval

The verdict of the jury regarding Samuel Deeters was that he was guilty of murder in the first degree, and the verdict of the people regarding the jury is, well done thou good and faithful servants.

The jury in the murder case went out at half past six o'clock last night to deliberate on their verdict and returned their verdict into court at twenty minutes past ten o'clock this morning, being out about sixteen hours.

After the verdict was read by the court, Mr. Barr, of counsel for the defendant, stepped forward and polled the jury, asking each individual juror whether the verdict was his verdict. Each one responded in the affirmative. The attorneys for the defendant then notified the court that there would be a motion for a new trial and asked that no judgment be rendered on the verdict until the proper motion could be prepared.

Four gentlemen who were present during the entire trial and who were entirely disinterested, at the close of the evidence and before the argument commenced, agreed to guess on what the verdict of the jury would be in the case. Each one wrote down on a slip of paper the verdict he thought would be rendered and put it into an envelope which was sealed until after the jury came in today. On opening the envelope, it was found that three had guessed on a life sentence and the other one had put the sentence at 99 years in the penitentiary.

A representative of the Republican called on the defendant, Deeters, in his cell at the jail this afternoon and interviewed him regarding the decision of the jury. The defendant said he was not much surprised at the result after hearing Judge McClellan's speech, which he claimed misrepresented him. He said that McClellan talked about his having a grudge against Laura Lowe, but it wasn't so. He did not have much fear any of the time, he said, that the jury should find that he should be hung, but after McClellan spoke he thought if jury believed McClellan they would send him to penitentiary for life. Being asked what his reason was for killing Mrs. Lowe, if he had no grudge against her, he said if he had been at himself he wouldn't have done it, that his back and head was hurting him and he didn't know just what he was doing. He said he did not build the new house to get a wife, but to live in. He had a good farm and money enough to build a house on it and he thought that the best investment he could make. If his head had been right he said he would not have been fool enough to do what he did. When asked about Miss Maxwell he said that he knew a long time ago that she was engaged to Jim Baxter. He did take her home once and called to ask her to go with him at another time but [illegible] refused. If he had wanted a wife he said, as McClellan claimed, he could have got one easy enough. Regarding the penitentiary he said he had heard that they didn't doctor one much there and that if he could have gone to the insane asylum possibly he might have been cured.

EXPENSES.

The jurors which tried the Deeter's murder case drew for their services the following amounts:

Moses Gonser	$87 20
E. J. Hackett	89 50
J. H. Elliot	89 00
Alex Halstead	94 50
Elias Kinsey	88 90
John Willmer	92 80
Ira Reed	94 70
Mort Lords	89 30
Geo. H. Deller	88 80
Wesley Showalter	94 40
Wm. Sherwood	90 30
C. J. Helmer	83 60
Total	1083 00

During the trial the State swore forty-eight witnesses who have claimed fees for 194 days attendance and 1,976 miles necessarily traveled in attending court, amounting in all to $341.30. Defendants swore forty-one witnesses who have claimed fees for 322 days, and charged mileage for 1,760 miles, amounting in all to $490.50. So that the cost of witnesses in the case amounts to $831.80. This estimate does not include the compensation of the experts who attended and testified on behalf of defendant. The State never pays any witness fees, so that unless these fees can be collected from the defendant, which is not probable, the witnesses will get nothing for either their services or expenses.

B. F. Moody.

The death of this venerable and esteemed man March 28th, and the solemn interest attending his funeral of Friday afternoon in Cedar Chapel, awakened reflection in the minds of many that have long been observant of his active upright, eventful life. As these links of the past generation are broken, and the old home ties are severed, it "leaves an aching void the world can never fill."

Mr. Moody has been a resident of DeKalb Co. for 58 years. He was born in Morrow Co Ohio, Jan. 25, 1826. When ten years of age he came to DeKalb Co. Ind, with his parents, and settled on the farm where he has since lived till called from his home on earth to that Golden City prepared for all who love and serve the Lord. He was one of a family of thirteen children, of whom four sisters and two brothers survive him.

He was united in marriage to Margaret Feagler, Jan. 18. 1849. To this union four daughters were born. Rose Ann, Mary A., Miranda M., and Eva Lida, all of whom with the venerable mother survive him. He was a loving husband, an indulgent father and a kind neighbor, and was held in high esteem by all who knew him, as was attested by the large concourse of people assembled to pay their last tribute of respect to his memory. His life was full of good works, and remarkably free from selfishness and hypocrisy. He was tenderly cared for by his aged wife, daughters, other relatives, and kind neighbors during a painful illness of ten days. Especially will I speak of the devotion of his daughter Mary whose life has been devoted to the care of her parents since age has made it necessary for them to have a staff to lean upon. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. D. Brosy of the Lutheran church. The remains were laid away to rest in the Cedar Chapel cemetery.

Death severs to unite,
Unchains to bind;

And although we may not receive his friendly greeting or listen to his words of kindly counsel, we hope to meet on the golden Strand.

Card of Thanks.

Mrs. Moody and family desire to thank the many friends and neighbors who were so kind during the sickness and death of Mr. Moody, also Miss Maggie Snyder and the choir for their excellent services.

Card of Thanks.

Mrs. Hattie Campbell desires to express her sincere thanks to the friends and neighbors who so kindly assisted during the sickness and death of her husband. All these friends will ever be held in grateful remembrance.

Sons of Veterans Reunion.

The sixth annual reunion of the Sons of Veterans of Samuel Ford Camp of Auburn was held in their hall, the G. A. R. hall, last Thursday evening. The first part of the program was at the hall, where the Captain, E. M. Hilkey, called them to order in a brief speech of welcome, and this was followed by instrumental music by Miss Maggie Snyder, of DeKalb. Rev. J. N. Wilson then made the opening prayer, which was very appropriate. Then came a song by Elza Housel, Frank Batdorff, and Maggie and Sadie Snyder, all of DeKalb. A. L. Kuhlman then made a very scholarly and sensible address, in which he reviewed in brief form the history of "Samuel Ford Camp No. 114," and won golden opinions of all his hearers by the ease and effectiveness of his address. The DeKalb Quartet then followed with another song which was fine and well rendered. "Relations of S. O. V. to G. A. R." was a very eloquent and feeling address by Capt. E. D. Hartman, in which he spoke of the relations the young order must necessarily hold to the old order that will soon pass away. Then the Quartet sang "Rally 'Round the Flag."

The company then adjourned to the M. E. church, where the ladies of that church had prepared a fine banquet for the Sons and their guests. Here they were seated at the tables, and Capt. Hilkey again called to order, while Rev. Wilson offered a prayer. The company then "fell to" and enjoyed the banquet, at the close of which the Quartet sang "O, Comrades, Hail," after which came a most sensible and stirring speech by Rev. A. S. Wooton, "Principles of S. O. V. Compared with Other Orders." Miss Olive Elson recited "Watermillions," which received hearty cheers, and she was called back and gave another. C. M. Brown, of this place, gave a very effective address, which was full of good thoughts, well expressed, and which was well received. "Freedom's Banner" was sung by the Quartet as a closing piece, and this very pleasant affair closed. The S. O. V. boys ought to, and no doubt do, feel proud of the success of this reunion which was well managed and one of the most, pleasant we ever had the pleasure to enjoy. The ladies of the M. E. church should be congratulated on the success of their part of the entertainment, which was just right in every way.

We do not feel like closing without a good word to the DeKalb Quartet. It is really a double quartet, having eight members besides the pianist, Miss. Maggie Snyder. The singers are: Lillie Snyder, 1st, soprano; Sadie Snyder, 2nd, soprano; Florence Pence, 1st, alto; Emma Heitz, 2nd alto; F. D. Batdorff, 1st, tenor; Phil. Holman, 2nd tenor; Elza E. Housel, 1st bass; John Noel, 2nd bass. They are all residents of Butler township and show careful preparation and painstaking as singers, and their music was greatly enjoyed.

EVENTS OF INTEREST

THAT OCCURRED DURING THE PAST WEEK.

An Entire Family Roasted Alive Near Fort Wayne—Riotous Miners in Pennsylvania Resort to Dynamite—Ohio Municipal Elections—Row in a Church.

ROASTED ALIVE.

An Entire Family Caught in a Burning House.

A special from Fort Wayne, Ind., says: A horrible story comes to this city from the little town of Calumet, a station on the Nickel Plate Railroad a few miles west of the city. The house of John Price, the section foreman, caught fire near that village and burned to the ground before the neighbors could reach the scene.

The house stands near the Nickel Plate tracks, almost a mile from any other habitation, and the origin of the fire is unknown. The family had been in bed three hours before the conflagration started. Price and his wife, almost suffocated, managed to crawl out of the house before they were consumed. They have three young children who perished in the blaze and whose remains have not yet been found.

The mother and father are horribly burned, their flesh being literally cooked. They are suffering terrible agony, from which death will soon relieve them. Neither, it is thought, can recover.

Riotous Strikers.

Dispatches received from Uniontown, Pa., report rioting and the destruction of some property in the coke region by foreigners who are on strike. At the Oliver, Leissenig, Morrell & Wheeler, Humphrey & Anchor plants, the men started to work but they were driven off by armed bands of strikers. At Morrell's works, at Dunbar, a large quantity of dynamite was used and considerable property destroyed. Calls have been made upon the Sheriff and deputies are being sworn in. The dispatches report about two-thirds of the works now closed. A number of persons were injured in the rioting, but none seriously. Rioting is also reported at the Hill Farm mines at Dunbar.

Disgraceful Fight in a Jewish Synagogue.

At the Hungarian Polish Jewish Synagoge in McKeesport, Pa., the preaching of Rabbi Koplitz offended several of the female members of the congregation. They arose and marched in a body to the pulpit, and demanded that the minister cease his remarks and retract those he had already given utterance to. The rabbi did stop. At the request of his supporters he began again, and the women closed around him and began an assault. Men rushed to the aid of the rabbi. Others took the part of the objectors. A row involving all those present, fiercely waged until terminated in the street, without victory to either party.

A Little Heroine.

Two little girls, daughters of Farmer Collier, living two miles from Guilford, Ind., were crossing the railroad on their way to school, when one of them caught a foot fast in the switch. The other went to her assistance, but before she could extricate her foot, a train appeared around a curve. With self sacrificing heroism, the little girl bravely stood beside her helpless sister, suffering the loss of one foot while the other one had both legs crushed by the wheels. She will die. The little heroine may recover.

Spies Are Safe.

Charleston (S. C.) special: Nine spies who escaped out of the swamp have arrived here. Information received here is to the effect that the military now at Darlington have fraternized with the citizens.

Gen. Ruchburg has been ordered to place the Western Union Telegraph office at Darlington under military control and have inspectors examine all messages offered for transmission and received from other places.

Postoffice Thief Captured.

W. M. Durborrow, a railroad switchman, was arrested at St. Louis, charged with robbing the Butler, Mo., Postoffice on March 18 last. Stamps to the value of $300 were found upon his person. He also had a map giving the location of a number of interior postoffices.

Election at Grand Rapids.

Grand Rapids (Mich.) special: The Republicans made nearly a clean sweep in the city and town elections in Western Michigan. In this city they elected E. B. Fisher mayor and the entire ticket, and carried Kent County for Board of Supervisors.

Glass Factories Resume.

Anderson (Ind.) special: The Anderson Glass Company has started its third factory, and it will open the fourth in a few days. All of the eight factories will be in operation in this city then.

Ohio Elections.

In the municipal elections in Ohio the Republicans carried Cincinnati, Cleveland, Toledo, Alliance, Lima, Hamilton, and Mansfield, and the Democrats Dayton and Defiance.

Australia and Russia.

An imperial decree has been issued, announcing that henceforth Australia and Russia will accord each other the most favored national treatment.

Lakeside Nail Mills Closed.

The Lakeside Nail Mills at Hammond, Ind., closed on account of lack of orders. Over 200 men and boys are thrown out of employment. The works had been in operation five weeks after an idleness of six months.

Colquitt's Successor.

Atlanta (Ga.) special: Gov. Northern has appointed Patrick Walsh, editor of the Augusta Chronicle, as Senator to succeed Colquitt.

Pine Roasted.

When Watchman W. B. Wilt returned to his home at McKendree, W. Va., he found that his home had been burned down during his absence on duty. He at once began to investigate, assisted by neighbors called from a distance. To the horror of the searchers it was discovered that Wilt's eight children and the hired girl had perished in the flames.

One by one their charred and unrecognizable remains were dragged out of the debris until all the family except the mother had been accounted for. She was later found alive, wandering about at some distance, crazed with grief. How the terrible casualty occurred is a complete mystery, as nothing could be discovered throwing light on how the fire originated, and Wilt's wife is not in a condition to tell any coherent story of the disaster.

A WATER PIPE BURSTS.

A Young Boy Instantly Killed and Several Persons Badly Hurt.

Peoria (Ill.) special: The most appalling disaster Peoria has known since the wreck of the steamer Frankie Folsom three years ago, occurred the other day. An immense standpipe belonging to the Peoria Water Company suddenly burst, causing terrible damage. One boy was killed, at least ten other peasons were seriously injured and two employes of the Water Company are missing and are supposed to be under the wreck. In addition to this five houses and barns were crushed, several others were swept from their foundations and an immense amount of damage was done to surrounding property.

The standpipe was 120 feet high and 20 feet in diameter, built of steel plate three-quarters of an inch thick, and was supplied from a 30,000,000-gallon reservoir three miles back on the bluff, giving it a tremendous pressure. The recent cold snap and subsequent thaw had sprung some of the joints and workmen were engaged in repairing them. A number of schoolboys were watching the operation when, without any warning, the great steel plates suddenly burst asunder with a frightful roar of escaping water. The workmen were swept away on the awful flood.

The tower was torn in two near the base, and the immense structure toppled slowly and fell with a crash that was heard all over the city. When the crash was heard and the immense tower was seen to be gone telephone messages soon shut off the water at the reservoir and stopped the immense geyser that was boiling up from the earth in a column twenty feet thick and fully as high.

SITUATION IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

The Latest News Regarding the Dispensary Trouble.

A special from Darlington, S. C., says: The situation here remains about the same, and no further outbreak has occurred. The posse continues to scour the woods for the escaped Constables who were responsible for the killing of Darlington's citizens. The center of operations for the citizen soldiery seems to be Timmonsville, a small town about thirty miles from here, as the spies are supposed to be lurking around there in the swamp. The posses are guarding every railroad and it is believed that these spies are all in the county, except two, who boarded a work train on the C. S. & N. Railroad and made for North Carolina. The posse say they will kill any of them on sight. Telegrams were sent to Charleston asking for bloodhounds to aid in the search, but they could not be secured. The Governor has had a train out twenty-four hours trying to get men to assist him and protect his Constables.

Mobs have destroyed the dispensaries at Timmonsville, Florence, and in other places in the northern part of South Carolina near here, and the one in Darlington will share a like fate. Dispenser Floyd was ordered by Gov. Tillman to keep the place here closed. He wired the Governor about the threats made against the dispensary, and was instructed to get the names of as many parties making the threats as possible, but to offer no resistance. It is not likely he will offer any, as feeling against the State gin shop is high.

Gov. Tillman's proclamation declaring Darlington and Florence Counties in insurrection has been received here.

A SECOND TIME

The Town of Borden Is Almost Destroyed by Fire.

The town of Borden, fourteen miles from Jeffersonville, Ind., for the second time within a year was destroyed by fire recently, entailing a loss in excess of $100,000. The fire originated in a flouring mill operated by the Martin Bros., in the village. The flames communicated to the S. E. Jennings' dwelling, which is a total loss. Herman Shoemaker's general store next succumbed, together with his residence, which was also totally destroyed. The residence of L. McKinley and Mrs. Christina Burns, and the blacksmith shop of Amos H. Atkinson went up in smoke, with no insurance. There being no fire department in the town, the inhabitants were powerless to subdue the flames, and the entire north side of the principal street was doomed.

The fire was the work of an incendiary, and started for the purpose of robbery. Immediately after the breaking out of the flames a large number of tramps appeared on the scene. Borden is located on the line of the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago Railway, and is noted in Southern Indiana as an educational center, the Borden Institute being located at the place. Very little insurance was held upon the property destroyed.

SNOW SLIDES.

Property and Life Destroyed by an Avalanche of Snow.

Wallace (Idaho) special: Four immense snow slides and saveral smaller ones came down in Canon Creek the other day. One at the Black Bear mine, near Gem, covered up or swept away five cabins, killing five persons and possibly more. Several hundred men have been shoveling since the disaster, and so far three bodies have been recovered. The snow is forty feet deep and almost as solid as ice. The Gem, Frisco, and Poorman mines turned out their whole force of miners to work for the recovery of bodies. Arthur Swayne was taken out alive, but very seriously injured. Owing to the intense excitement it is impossible to give full details and the names of the killed, some of whom are Italians. The bodies of a man, woman, and a little girl have been found within a mile and a half. Above Gem are three other slides, one of them covering both railroads to a depth of considerably over 100 feet. This is Deming Cannon Creek, and fears are entertained of a flood. Some of the slides have been very destructive to flumes and railway property, but the full damage will not be known for many days.

Coxey at Columbiana.

Columbiana (Ohio) special: Coxey has rejoined his cohorts. The army is amongst the Populists and the Commonweal is enjoying a big boom. The farmers at Alliance provided three wagon loads of provisions and two of wood. At Leetonia twenty-three coopers joined the ranks, and in a speech Carl Brown said he had been misrepresented by forty argus-eyed demons of hell who followed him around. He meant the reporters and has given orders to keep newspaper men out of camp. Three hundred people welcomed 168 soldiers to Columbiana and the citizens provided Johnson's foundry as a camp. Straw beds were provided. Thirty-six recruits from East Liverpool joined. This town has a Coxey Club with fifty-three members, of which John Harold is Chairman. After seeing the army, Harold said that while he sympathizes with Coxey's principles, he could not countenance such an array of tramps to enforce legislation.

FOUR KILLED

And Three Fatally Wounded in a Gas Explosion.

There was a terrific gas explosion at Alaxandria, Ind., in which four people were killed and three injured. The explosion was in the rear of the Whiteside business block, the ground floor of which is occupied by Harrell & Pyle's barber shop. The location is in the heart of the city. In the barber shop were the seven men, Jesse Harrell, William Pyle, James Scott, Harry Bowyer, Charles Hesoer, Ora Ball, and Henry Heard. Without a moment's warning there was an explosion, presumably of leaking natural gas in some part of the building, and the structure collapsed, burying the men. Fire added to the horrors. The department succeeded in extricating Heard, Scott, and Pyle from the ruins. Firemen were unable to reach the others on account of the flames, and they were burned to death.

Hopeful Indications.

Bradstreet's Financial Review says: The revival of interest and activity in the American Department of the London market is regarded as one of the most hopeful indications which has yet appeared. Symptoms of such developments have been noted for some time past, the plethora of money at London and continental financial centers, combined with a dearth of acceptable investments making such a result inevitable. The impression abroad has been that American bonds and railroad stocks of the better class have been undoubtedly depressed, while among them were to be found many issues which afford a substantial basis for profitable investment and speculation. The failure of our own public or professional operators to respond to this movement in foreign markets, however, has been noteworthy.

Seal Fisheries Question.

The agreement relative to the seal fisheries has not been perfected. It is understood the main difference arises from the insistence of the British that warning be served on Canadian sealers who go into the forbidden zone before the agreement is ratified, as preliminary to seizure. Secretary Gresham has taken the ground that these vessels have already had sufficient warning in the publication of the decision of the arbitrators. The vessels selected as a patrol fleet are the Mohican, Yorkton, Alert, Bennington, Ranger, Adams, Concord, Petrel, and the revenue cutters, Bear, Rush, and Corwin, and the fish commission vessel, Albatross. The fleet will probably all be ready to assume their places by the 1st of May and follow the seal herds north from the California boundary line as soon as they appear.

British Steamship Sinks.

The British steamship Yezzo, Captain Strachan, which sailed from Baltimore March 1, for Bristol, arriving there March 18, was sunk seven miles northeast of Ilfracombe by coming in collision with the schooner Lizzie R. Wilce. Captain Strachan, two of the crew, and a stowaway are missing. The remainder on board the Yezzo, twenty-three of the crew and a stowaway succeeded in getting ashore in the ship's boats. The Lizzie R. Wilce was towed to Ilfracombe. Her stem is seriously damaged, and she is leaking badly. The weather at time of the collison was clear.

Desperate Battle.

The other day a desperate encounter occurred at Young's Crossing, I. T., forty-five miles northwest of Gainesville, Texas, between United States Marshals and a gang of desperate horse thieves. Fully 100 shots were fired from Winchesters on both sides. A running fight continued for nearly an hour and resulted in the wounding and subsequent capture of Dick Warren, a cousin of the Dalton boys, and Will Fletcher, an all-round desperado. This gang is said to number sixteen. Another raid is expected shortly and it is thought the entire gang will be apprehended.

Terribly Mangled.

Yardmaster A. M. Ellis, aged 40, of the Norfolk and Western, met with a horrible death at Kenova, W. Va. He was making a running switch when he slipped and fell in front of a car, and his body was mangled in a terrible manner.

Shot While Drunk.

Henry McIntosh was shot and killed by Jim Henderson, near Oaktown, Ind. McIntosh was drinking and quarrelsome. Henderson resented the abuse by firing a ball into McIntosh's breast. Both men were single, and were farm laborers.

Dropped Dead from Grief.

At Pomeroy, Ohio, Mrs. Mary Hanner, a widow, dropped dead while her step-daughter was being removed to the Children's Home. Grief at parting with the child killed her.

Fell Into the Mixer.

Elderado Devoe, an employe in the Xenia, Ohio, pottery, fell into a clay mixer at the works. His injuries are serious but not fatal.

A LIQUOR LAW RIOT.

CITIZENS SHOT DOWN IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

Two Spies Also Killed—Others Pursued by an Angry Mob—Three Militia Companies Disband Rather than Support the Obnoxious Law.

Tillman Calls It Rebellion.

All South Carolina is in excitement over a bloody riot at Darlington Friday, as a result of an attempt to enforce the dispensary liquor law by constables, otherwise known as spies. Two citizens and two Constables were killed, and three citizens seriously wounded. Others were slightly hurt. After the fusillade the Constables took to the woods. The feeling of the people of the town is shown by the following telegram:

G. S. McCullough and all available are after the murderers, pursuing through country. Our efforts are to catch them.
DARGAN, Mayor.

This was received in answer to a telegram sent by citizens of Columbia inquiring if assistance was needed.

By the new law the State conducts bar rooms and forbids under severe penalties the sale of liquor by other than State dispensers. As a result places where liquor is illegally and secretly sold have sprung up in every nook and corner. To suppress these and render the State monopoly of the traffic complete a large army of spies is maintained, who scour the State from one end to the other. Whenever a place is suspected of being a blind tiger spies are congregated in the town and suddenly present themselves at the door and make a search. The cities to which the spies confine their operations regard the new liquor law as an inroad on their liberties. Gov. Tillman at Columbia was appealed to before the battle by the constables, and ordered three companies of State troops to the scene. But the militia refused to move, and one company disbanded, amid the cheers of the people of Columbia. But the Sumter light artillery responded to the Governor's orders, and a special train carried them to the scene. When they arrived everything was quiet, and they returned to Sumter. Meantime the constables were being closely watched, and resolute citizens, thoroughly aroused, were determined that they should not go forth to raid private houses. Resolutions were adopted to the effect that a man's house is his castle, and as such the citizens declared they would defend theirs. Squads of men had been sent from Florence and Sumter to assist the citizens, if need be, and the first movement of the spies was likely to be the signal for an outbreak.

GOV. TILLMAN.

These spies had been re-enforced at the time the military company had been conveyed to Darlington, and numbered twenty-five, armed with Winchester rifles. What was the spark that fired the magazine does not clearly appear, but near nightfall in Columbia the exciting news was received by telegraph that bloody fighting was in progress.

When Gov. Tillman heard of the trouble and was told that the spies had taken to the woods, he said he could not blame them when there were four or five hundred men after them. The Governor blames the Columbia and Charleston newspapers for the outbreak, as they have persistently advised citizens to resist any attempt at search of private residences.

Florence Dispensary Looted.

A mob entered the State dispensary at Florence, S. C., and destroyed the entire stock of liquors.

Three companies of State troops have disbanded under the general pressure brought to bear on them rather than obey the Governor's order to go to Darlington. The excitement in consequence of this action is at fever heat.

WATER TOWER BURSTS.

A Huge Stand-Pipe at Peoria Collapses with Terrible Effect.

One killed, fifteen injured, at least three of them fatally, and the destruction of $40,000 worth of property, is the terrible sequence of the collapse of the West Bluff tower of the Peoria (Ill.) Water Company. It was at 10:20 Friday morning that the accident happened and its exact manner is perfectly inexplicable.

In 1889 the city disposed of its waterworks plant and granted a franchise to the Moffitt, Hodgkins & Clark Company, which afterward disposed of its holdings to the reorganized Peoria Water Company. Four years ago, according to one of the provisions of its franchise, the company erected two stand-pipes, each of a capacity of 1,500,000 gallons. The one that fell was 1:0 feet high, with a diameter of 20 feet. It was constructed of steel plates ⅝ of an inch thick at the base and tapering to ¼ at the top. A few days ago it was discovered that there was a slight leak about half-way to the top, and a force of five men was set at work to repair the damage. They were still at it, when the great structure toppled over. There was a succession of reports as of pistol shots, followed by a general collapse, the water rushing in torrents in all directions.

The neighborhood is densely populated, and when the cracking noise was heard the residents, who surmised what was happening, rushed to the doors only to be met by a solid wave of water several feet high. The scene which followed was horrible in the extreme. Death and destruction was on every hand, and it would be hard to conceive more complete desolation. Houses were crushed to pieces as if constructed of pasteboard, big trees were torn up by the roots, sidewalks were washed away, and big steel plates—portion of the stand-pipe—were hurled a hundred feet away.

Boy Killed by a Falling Plate.

The report of the falling structure was heard for blocks away, and within an incredibly short time the neighborhood was thronged with an excited crowd bent on rendering aid to the many who had been killed or injured. Poor Frank Hagan, a son of Barney Hagan, for many years a member of the paid fire department, was the only one to suffer death outright. He was 14 years of age, and with a number of companions, all school boys about his own age, was engaged in playing base-ball within a few feet of the base of the tower. One of the large plates, hurled with terrific force, caught him and pinioned him to the ground. It was fully half an hour before his body was dug out and removed to his home, less than a block away.

All his companions were injured, but their escape from instant death is little short of miraculous. The employes of the company who were at work on the tower were all badly hurt, and many persons residing in the immediate vicinity were seriously injured by falling debris.

DECLINES THE HONOR.

Speaker Crisp Declines Promotion to a Senatorship.

Speaker Crisp has decided not to accept the offer of the Senatorship tendered to him by Gov. Northen, of Georgia. This decision was reached late Friday night, and the Speaker sets forth his reasons for declining in a letter which he has written to the Governor.

A Washington dispatch says: It is seldom in the history of the country that a public man has felt called upon to decline a position in the United States Senate, but the reasons which have impelled Speaker Crisp to do so are extraordinary. He does not express all of them in his letter of declination, for the reason, perhaps, that it would not be politic to do so. It may be stated, first of all, that Speaker Crisp well realizes the desperate situation of affairs in the House and the effect which his retirement at this time would perhaps have upon the fortunes of the party. In his telegram Speaker Crisp says a very large majority of the Democratic members of the House have united in the request that he continue to serve as Speaker for the remainder of the session, and although deeply grateful to the Governor, and although sacrificing a cherished ambition, a sense of duty impels him to decline the appointment.

SPEAKER CRISP.

The present senatorial term expires on the fourth of next March, and the Senator for the long term must be elected by the Legislature which meets the coming winter. Mr. Crisp will undoubtedly be a candidate at that election.

VILLA FABBRICOTTI.

Where Queen Victoria Will Spend Her Spring Vacation.

The Villa Fabbricotti, which will be occupied by Queen Victoria on her continental tour during the early spring, is a large and well-arranged palace situated in a most romantic region, a short distance from Florence, Italy. The villa was built many years ago by a nobleman in the days of Florence's greatness, but was sold some years afterward to a wealthy family, Fabbricotti, to repair the broken fortunes of the nobleman. The grounds were extended and beautified, and valuable pictures and works of art were procured to adorn the interior of the building.

In the days when lectures were so popular in the United States, a quarter of a century ago the highest priced man on the platform was Professor Agassiz, who was paid $500 a night. Sumner, Gough, Beecher, Emerson, and Curtis commanded $200. Of late years the big card was Stanley, who received $1,000 a night. At the present time the pre eminent success on the rostrum is Stoddard, with his stereopticon.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed, and Acted Upon.

Doings of Congress.

The House adjourned Monday after a brief session on account of the death of Senator Colquitt. Mr. Turner, of Georgia, who had been chosen by the Georgia delegation to announce the death of Senator Colquitt to the House, sent to the clerk's desk the usual resolutions of regret and for attending the funeral. The Speaker then appointed the following committee to accompany the remains to Georgia: Messrs. Livingstone, Holman, Bunn, Cabaniss, Maddox, McDonald, W. A. Stone, Cogswell and Grout. The death of Senator Colquitt was announced in the Senate by Mr. Gordon, the colleague of the dead statesman. In a few touching words he briefly recounted the services of the dead Senator in the field of politics and in his domestic life. The customary resolution of regret was adopted and a committee of ten Senators appointed to accompany the remains to Macon, Ga. The following committee was appointed by the Vice President: Senators Gordon, Morgan, Butler, Ransom, Gray, Hoar, Proctor, Carey, Perkins, and Allen. Prayer was offered at the convening of the Senate by Mr. Colquitt's pastor, Rev. Isaac W. Canter, of the Mount Vernon Place M. E. Church, and at 12:15 o'clock the Senate adjourned.

The House did but little business Tuesday. Representative Boen, of Minnesota, introduced a bill for the reduction of compensation of persons in the government service. It provides that salaries from $1,000 to $5,000 be reduced 25 per cent, and that those from $5,000 to $20,000 be reduced 33⅓ per cent; all above $20,000 reduced 50 per cent. The Senate met at 9:45 and immediately adjourned.

Wednesday, the House was engaged with contested election cases, the seat of Mr. Joy (Rep.), of Missouri, being at stake. The majority report of the committee had gone against Mr. Joy. The vote on the substitute for the report of the majority of the committee, presented by the minority, declaring Mr. Joy entitled to his seat, resulted: Yeas, 102; nays, 146. The substitute was rejected. Mr. Burrows of Michigan moved to reconsider, and Mr. Springer, of Illinois, moved to lay that motion on the table. Friends of Mr. Joy then precipitated another filibuster by making the point of no quorum on the division, and the roll call was taken. No quorum. On motion of Mr. Patterson the House at 5:45 adjourned. In the Senate Senator Berry, of Arkansas, called up the resolution authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to receive at the subtreasury in New York from R. T. Wilson & Co. or assigns, the money, amounting to $6,740,000, to be paid to the Cherokee Nation, and to place the same to the credit of the Cherokee Nation. It was agreed to. Then the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business, and when the doors were again reopened took up the McGarrahan bill. Senator Morrill of Vermont speaking in opposition to the claim. Mr. Hunt of Virginia followed Mr. Morrill, and argued in favor of the bill. At 4 o'clock Mr. Hunton concluded his speech, and Senator Vilas rose to address the Senate, but yielded to a motion for an executive session made by Mr. Pugh, which was carried. At 4:05 the Senate adjourned.

The House Thursday renewed consideration of the Joy-O'Neill contest, but it is still unsettled. In order to get a quorum to transact business, the Sergeant-at-arms was directed to arrest all absentees, and the Speaker counted a quorum, as was done in the days of the Fifty-first Congress by ex-Speaker Reed. Scenes of the wildest confusion prevailed. In the Senate, The bill prescribing limitations of time for the completion of title to certain lands disposed of under the act of Congress known as the "donation act," and for the protection of purchasers and occupants of the lands, which are situated in the States of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho, was passed by a vote of 49 to 7. The House joint resolution appropriating $100,000 additional to carry out the provisions of the Chinese exclusion act was passed. The McGarrahan bill was passed without division. It refers the claim of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panocho Grande to the Court of Private Land Claims, which shall report its findings to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall issue a patent to McGarrahan if this decision shall be in his favor.

In recognition of the personal sacrifice Speaker Crisp made in declining the Senatorship there was a burst of applause again Saturday morning when he ascended the rostrum to call the House to order. Immediately after the reading of the journal, Mr. Payne, of New York, arose to a question of personal privilege and made an explanation of the incident which occurred late Thursday afternoon when the Speaker had stated in reply to a scorning defiance of the Chair by Mr. Payne, when the latter was ordered to take his seat, that he would recognize a motion to bring the contumacious member to the bar of the House. Mr. Payne stated that on that occasion the reply which he made—that he would take his seat when he got ready—was in response to something said by Mr. Outhwaite, not to the Chair. Mr. Payne's statement led to mutual explanations from Mr.

An Entire Family Roasted Alive Near Fort Wayne—Riotous Miners in Pennsylvania Resort to Dynamite—Ohio Municipal Elections—Row in a Church.

ROASTED ALIVE.

An Entire Family Caught in a Burning House.

A special from Fort Wayne, Ind., says: A horrible story comes to this city from the little town of Calumet, a station on the Nickel Plate Railroad a few miles west of the city. The house of John Price, the section foreman, caught fire near that village and burned to the ground before the neighbors could reach the scene.

The house stands near the Nickel Plate tracks, almost a mile from any other habitation, and the origin of the fire is unknown. The family had been in bed three hours before the conflagration started. Price and his wife, almost suffocated, managed to crawl out of the house before they were consumed. They have three young children who perished in the blaze and whose remains have not yet been found.

The mother and father are horribly burned, their flesh being literally cooked. They are suffering terrible agony, from which death will soon relieve them. Neither, it is thought, can recover.

Riotous Strikers.

Dispatches received from Uniontown, Pa., report rioting and the destruction of some property in the coke region by foreigners who are on strike. At the Oliver, Leissenig, Morrell & Wheeler, Humphrey & Anchor plants, the men started to work but they were driven off by armed bands of strikers. At Morrell's works, at Dunbar, a large quantity of dynamite was used and considerable property destroyed. Calls have been made upon the Sheriff and deputies are being sworn in. The dispatches report about two-thirds of the works now closed. A number of persons were injured in the rioting, but none seriously. Rioting is also reported at the Hill Farm mines at Dunbar.

Disgraceful Fight in a Jewish Synagoge.

At the Hungarian Polish Jewish Synagoge in McKeesport, Pa., the preaching of Rabbi Koplitz offended several of the female members of the congregation. They arose and marched in a body to the pulpit, and demanded that the minister cease his remarks and retract those he had already given utterance to. The rabbi did stop. At the request of his supporters he began again, and the women closed around him and began an assault. Men rushed to the aid of the rabbi. Others took the part of the objectors. A row involving all those present, fiercely waged until terminated in the street, without victory to either party.

A Little Heroine.

Two little girls, daughters of Farmer Collier, living two miles from Guilford, Ind., were crossing the railroad on their way to school, when one of them caught a foot fast in the switch. The other went to her assistance, but before she could extricate her foot, a train appeared around a curve. With self sacrificing heroism, the little girl bravely stood beside her helpless sister, suffering the loss of one foot while the other one had both legs crushed by the wheels. She will die. The little heroine may recover.

Mine Roasted.

When Watchman W. B. Wilt returned to his home at McKendree, W. Va., he found that his home had been burned down during his absence on duty. Heat once began to investigate, assisted by neighbors called from a distance. To the horror of the searchers it was discovered that Wilt's eight children and the hired girl had perished in the flames.

One by one their charred and unrecognizable remains were dragged from the debris until all the family except the mother had been accounted for. She was later found alive, wandering about at some distance, crazed with grief. How the terrible casualty occurred is a complete mystery, as nothing could be discovered throwing light on how the fire originated, and Wilt's wife is not in a condition to tell any coherent story of the disaster.

A WATER PIPE BURSTS.

A Young Boy Instantly Killed and Several Persons Badly Hurt.

Peoria (Ill.) special: The most appalling disaster Peoria has known since the wreck of the steamer Frankie Folsom three years ago, occurred the other day. An immense standpipe belonging to the Peoria Water Company suddenly burst, causing terrible damage. One boy was killed, at least ten other peasons were seriously injured and two employes of the Water Company are missing and are supposed to be under the wreck. In addition to this five houses and barns were crushed, several others were swept from their foundations and an immense amount of damage was done to surrounding property.

The standpipe was 120 feet high and 20 feet in diameter, built of steel plate three-quarters of an inch thick, and was supplied from a 30,000,000-gallon reservoir three miles back on the bluff, giving it a tremendous pressure. The recent cold snap and subsequent thaw had sprung some of the joints and workmen were engaged in repairing them. A number of schoolboys were watching the operation when, without any warning, the great steel plates suddenly burst asunder with a frightful roar of escaping water. The workmen were swept away on the awful flood.

The tower was torn in two near the base, and the immense structure toppled slowly and fell with a crash that was heard all over the city. When the crash was heard and the immense tower was seen to be gone telephone messages soon shut off the water at the reservoir and stopped the immense geyser that was boiling up from the earth in a column twenty feet thick and fully as high.

SITUATION IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

The Latest News Regarding the Dispensary Trouble.

A special from Darlington, S. C., says: The situation here remains about the same, and no further outbreak has occurred. The posse continues to scour the woods for the escaped Constables who were responsible for the killing of Darlington's citizens. The center of operations for the citizen soldiery seems to be Timmonsville, a small town about thirty miles from here, as the spies are supposed to be lurking around there in the swamp. The posses are guarding every railroad and it is believed that these spies are all in the county, except two, who boarded a work train on the C. S. & N. Railroad and made for North Carolina. The posse say they will kill any of them on sight. Telegrams were sent to Charleston asking for bloodhounds to aid in the search, but they could not be secured. The Governor has had a train out twenty-four hours trying to get men to assist him and protect his Constables.

Mobs have destroyed the dispensaries at Timmonsville, Florence, and in other places in the northern part of South Carolina near here, and the one in Darlington will share a like fate. Dispenser Floyd was ordered by Gov. Tillman to keep the place here closed. He wired the Governor about the threats made against the dispensary, and was instructed to get the names of as many parties making the threats as possible, but to offer no resistance. It is not likely he will offer any, as feeling against the State gin shop is high.

Gov. Tillman's proclamation declaring Darlington and Florence Counties in insurrection has been received here.

A SECOND TIME

The Town of Borden Is Almost Destroyed by Fire.

The town of Borden, fourteen miles from Jeffersonville, Ind., for the second time within a year was destroyed by fire recently, entailing a loss in excess of $100,000. The fire originated in a flouring mill operated by the Martin Bros., in the village. The flames communicated to the S. E. Jennings' dwelling, which is a total loss. Herman Shoemaker's general store next succumbed, together with his residence, which was also totally destroyed. The residence of L. McKinley and Mrs. Christina Burns, and the blacksmith shop of Amos H. Atkinson went up in smoke, with no insurance. There being no fire department in the town, the inhabitants were powerless to subdue the flames, and the entire north side of the principal street was doomed.

The fire was the work of an incendiary, and started for the purpose of robbery. Immediately after the breaking out of the flames a large number of tramps appeared on the scene. Borden is located on the line of the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago Railway, and is noted in Southern Indiana as an educational center, the Borden Institute being located at the place. Very little insurance was held upon the property destroyed.

SNOW SLIDES.

Property and Life Destroyed by an Avalanche of Snow.

Wallace (Idaho) special: Four immense snow slides and saveral smaller ones came down in Canon Creek the other day. One at the Black Bear mine, near Gem, covered up or swept away five cabins, killing five persons and possibly more. Several hundred men have been shoveling since the disaster, and so far three bodies have been recovered. The snow is forty feet deep and almost as solid as ice. The Gem, Frisco, and Poorman mines turned out their whole force of miners to work for the recovery of bodies. Arthur Swayne was taken out alive, but very seriously injured. Owing to the intense excitement it is impossible to give full details and the names of the killed, some of whom are Italians. The bodies of a man, woman, and a little girl have been found within a mile and a half. Above Gem are three other slides, one of them covering both railroads to a depth of considerably over 100 feet. This is Deming Cannon Creek, and fears are entertained of a flood. Some of the slides have been very destructive to flumes and railway property, but the full damage will not be known for many days.

Coxey at Columbiana.

Columbiana (Ohio) special: Coxey has rejoined his cohorts. The army is amongst the Populists and the Commonweal is enjoying a big boom. The farmers at Alliance provided three wagon loads of provisions and two of wood. At Leetonia twenty-three coopers joined the ranks, and in a speech Cart Brown said he had been misrepresented by forty argus-eyed demons of hell who followed him around. He meant the reporters and has given orders to keep newspaper men out of camp. Three hundred people welcomed 168 soldiers to Columbiana and the citizens provided Johnson's foundry as a camp. Straw beds were provided. Thirty-six recruits from East Liverpool joined. This town has a Coxey Club with fifty-three members, of which John Harold is Chairman. After seeing the army, Harold said that while he sympathized with Coxey's principles, he could not countenance such an array of tramps to enforce legislation.

FOUR KILLED

And Three Fatally Wounded in a Gas Explosion.

There was a terrific gas explosion at Alaxandria, Ind., in which four people were killed and three injured. The explosion was in the rear of the Whiteside business block, the ground floor of which is occupied by Harrell & Pyle's barber shop. The location is in the heart of the city. In the barber shop were the seven men, Jesse Harrell, William Pyle, James Scott, Harry Bowyer, Charles Hesoer, Ora Ball, and Henry Heard. Without a moment's warning there was an explosion, presumably of leaking natural gas in some part of the building, and the structure collapsed, burying the men. Fire added to the horrors. The department succeeded in extricating Heard, Scott, and Pyle from the ruins. Firemen were unable to reach the others on account of the flames, and they were burned to death.

Hopeful Indications.

Bradstreet's Financial Review says: The revival of interest and activity in the American Department of the London market is regarded as one of the most hopeful indications which has yet appeared. Symptoms of such developments have been noted for some time past, the plethora of money at London and continental financial centers, combined with a dearth of acceptable investments making such a result inevitable. The impression abroad has been that American bonds and railroad stocks of the better class have been undoubtedly depressed, while among them were to be found many issues which afford a substantial basis for profitable investment and speculation. The failure of our own public or professional operators to respond to this movement in foreign markets, however, has been noteworthy.

Seal Fisheries Question.

The agreement relative to the seal fisheries has not been perfected. It is understood the main difference arises from the insistence of the British that warning be served on Canadian sealers who go into the forbidden zone before the agreement is ratified, as preliminary to seizure. Secretary Gresham has taken the ground that these vessels have already had sufficient warning in the publication of the decision of the arbitrators. The vessels selected as a patrol fleet are the Mohican, Yorkton, Alert, Bennington, Ranger, Adams, Concord, Petrel, and the revenue cutters, Bear, Rush, and Corwin, and the fish commission vessel, Albatross. The fleet will probably all be ready to assume their places by the 1st of May and follow the seal herds north from the California boundary line as soon as they appear.

British Steamship Sinks.

The British steamship Yezzo, Captain Strachan, which sailed from Baltimore March 1, for Bristol, arriving there March 18, was sunk seven miles northeast of Ilfracombe by coming in collision with the schooner Lizzie R. Wilce. Captain Strachan, two of the crew, and a stowaway are missing. The remainder on board the Yezzo, twenty-three of the crew and a stowaway succeeded in getting ashore in the ship's boats. The Lizzie R. Wilce was towed to Ilfracombe. Her stem is seriously damaged, and she is leaking badly. The weather at time of the collison was clear.

Desperate Battle.

The other day a desperate encounter occurred at Young's Crossing, I. T., forty-five miles northwest of Gainesville, Texas, between United States Marshals and a gang of desperate horse thieves. Fully 100 shots were fired from Winchesters on both sides. A running fight continued for nearly an hour and resulted in the wounding and subsequent capture of Dick Warren, a cousin of the Dalton boys, and Will Fletcher, an all-round desperado. This gang is said to number sixteen. Another raid is expected shortly and it is thought the entire gang will be apprehended.

Terribly Mangled.

Yardmaster A. M. Ellis, aged 40, of the Norfolk and Western, met with a horrible death at Kenova, W. Va. He was making a running switch when he slipped and fell in front of a car, and his body was mangled in a terrible manner.

Shot While Drunk.

Henry McIntosh was shot and killed by Jim Henderson, near Oaktown, Ind. McIntosh was drinking and quarrelsome. Henderson resented the abuse by firing a ball into McIntosh's breast. Both men were single, and were farm laborers.

Dropped Dead from Grief.

At Pomeroy, Ohio, Mrs. Mary Hanner, a widow, dropped dead while her step-daughter was being removed to the Children's Home. Grief at parting with the child killed her.

Fell Into the Mixer.

Elderado Devoe, an employe in the Xenia, Ohio, pottery, fell into a clay mixer at the works. His injuries are serious but not fatal.

A LIQUOR LAW RIOT.

CITIZENS SHOT DOWN IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

Two Spies Also Killed—Others Pursued by an Angry Mob—Three Militia Companies Disband Rather than Support the Obnoxious Law.

Tillman Calls It Rebellion.

All South Carolina is in excitement over a bloody riot at Darlington Friday, as a result of an attempt to enforce the dispensary liquor law by constables, otherwise known as spies. Two citizens and two Constables were killed, and three citizens seriously wounded. Others were slightly hurt. After the fusillade the Constables took to the woods. The feeling of the people of the town is shown by the following telegram:

C. R. McCullough and all available are after the murderers, pursuing through country. Our efforts are to catch them.

DARGAN, Mayor.

This was received in answer to a telegram sent by citizens of Columbia inquiring if assistance was needed.

By the new law the State conducts bar rooms and forbids under severe penalties the sale of liquor by other than State dispensers. As a result places where liquor is illegally and secretly sold have sprung up in every nook and corner. To suppress these and render the State monopoly of the traffic complete a large army of spies is maintained, who scour the State from one end to the other. Whenever a place is suspected of being a blind tiger spies are congregated in the town and suddenly present themselves at the door and make a search. The cities to which the spies confine their operations regard the new liquor law as an inroad on their liberties. Gov. Tillman at Columbia was appealed to before the battle by the constables, and ordered three companies of State troops to the scene. But the militia refused to move, and one company disbanded, amid the cheers of the people of Columbia. But the Sumter light artillery responded to the Governor's orders, and a special train carried them to the scene. When they arrived everything was quiet, and they returned to Sumter. Meantime the constables were being closely watched, and resolute citizens, thoroughly aroused, were determined that they should not go forth to raid private houses. Resolutions were adopted to the effect that a man's house is his castle, and as such the citizens declared they would defend theirs. Squads of men had been sent from Florence and Sumter to assist the citizens, if need be, and the first movement of the spies was likely to be the signal for an outbreak.

GOV. TILLMAN.

These spies had been re-enforced at the time the military company had been conveyed to Darlington, and numbered twenty-five, armed with Winchester rifles. What was the spark that fired the magazine does not clearly appear, but near nightfall in Columbia the exciting news was received by telegraph that bloody fighting was in progress.

When Gov. Tillman heard of the trouble and was told that the spies had taken to the woods, he said he could not blame them when there were four or five hundred men after them. The Governor blames the Columbia and Charleston newspapers for the outbreak, as they have persistently advised citizens to resist any attempt at search of private residences.

Florence Dispensary Looted.

A mob entered the State dispensary at Florence, S. C., and destroyed the entire stock of liquors.

Three companies of State troops have disbanded under the general pressure brought to bear on them rather than obey the Governor's order to go to Darlington. The excitement in consequence of this action is at fever heat.

WATER TOWER BURSTS.

A Huge Stand-Pipe at Peoria Collapses with Terrible Effect.

One killed, fifteen injured, at least three of them fatally, and the destruction of $40,000 worth of property, is the terrible sequence of the collapse of the West Bluff tower of the Peoria (Ill.) Water Company. It was at 10:20 Friday morning that the accident happened and its exact manner is perfectly inexplicable.

In 1889 the city disposed of its waterworks plant and granted a franchise to the Moffitt, Hodgkins & Clark Company, which afterward disposed of its holdings to the reorganized Peoria Water Company. Four years ago, according to one of the provisions of its franchise, the company erected two stand-pipes, each of a capacity of 1,500,000 gallons. The one that fell was 1:0 feet high, with a diameter of 20 feet. It was constructed of steel plates ¾ of an inch thick at the base and tapering to ¼ at the top. A few days ago it was discovered that there was a slight leak about half-way to the top, and a force of five men was set at work to repair the damage. They were still at it, when the great structure toppled over. There was a succession of reports as of pistol shots, followed by a general collapse, the water rushing in torrents in all directions.

The neighborhood is densely populated, and when the cracking noise was heard the residents, who surmised what was happening, rushed to the doors only to be met by a solid wave of water several feet high. The scene which followed was horrible in the extreme. Death and destruction was on every hand, and it would be hard to conceive more complete desolation. Houses were crushed to pieces as if constructed of pasteboard, big trees were torn up by the roots, sidewalks were washed away, and big steel plates—portion of the stand-pipe—were hurled a hundred feet away.

Boy Killed by a Falling Plate.

The report of the falling structure was heard for blocks away, and within an incredibly short time the neighborhood was thronged with an excited crowd bent on rendering aid to the many who had been killed or injured. Poor Frank Hagan, a son of Barney Hagan, for many years a member of the paid fire department, was the only one to suffer death outright. He was 14 years of age, and with a number of companions, all school boys about his own age, was engaged in playing base-ball within a few feet of the base of the tower. One of the large plates, hurled with terrific force, caught him and pinioned him to the ground. It was fully half an hour before his body was dug out and removed to his home, less than a block away.

All his companions were injured, but their escape from instant death is little short of miraculous. The employes of the company who were at work on the tower were all badly hurt, and many persons residing in the immediate vicinity were seriously injured by falling debris.

DECLINES THE HONOR.

Speaker Crisp Declines Promotion to a Senatorship.

Speaker Crisp has decided not to accept the offer of the Senatorship tendered to him by Gov. Northen, of Georgia. This decision was reached late Friday night, and the Speaker sets forth his reasons for declining in a letter which he has written to the Governor.

A Washington dispatch says: It is seldom in the history of the country that a public man has felt called upon to decline a position in the United States Senate, but the reasons which have impelled Speaker Crisp to do so are extraordinary. He does not express all of them in his letter of declination, for the reason, perhaps, that it would not be politic to do so. It may be stated, first of all, that Speaker Crisp well realizes the desperate situation of affairs in the House and the effect which his retirement at this time would perhaps have upon the fortunes of the party. In his telegram Speaker Crisp says a very large majority of the Democratic members of the House have united in the request that he continue to serve as Speaker for the remainder of the session, and although deeply grateful to the Governor, and although sacrificing a cherished ambition, a sense of duty impels him to decline the appointment.

SPEAKER CRISP.

The present senatorial term expires on the fourth of next March, and the Senator for the long term must be elected by the Legislature which meets the coming winter. Mr. Crisp will undoubtedly be a candidate at that election.

INTERESTING FIGURES.

Statistics as to the Aggregate Wealth of Seven Great States.

Special census bulletins have just been issued, giving the final statistical figures of the agriculture and wealth of the seven States Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Nebraska. VILLA FABBRICOTTI.

Where Queen Victoria Will Spend Her Spring Vacation.

The Villa Fabbricotti, which will be occupied by Queen Victoria on her continental tour during the early spring, is a large and well-arranged palace situated in a most romantic region, a short distance from Florence, Italy. The villa was built many years ago by a nobleman in the days of Florence's greatness, but was sold some years afterward to a wealthy family, Fabbricotti, to repair the broken fortunes of the nobleman. The grounds were extended and beautified, and valuable pictures and works of art were procured to adorn the interior of the building.

VILLA FABBRICOTTI.

IN the days when lectures were so popular in the United States, a quarter of a century ago the highest priced man on the platform was Professor Agassiz, who was paid $500 a night. Sumner, Gough, Beecher, Emerson, and Curtis commanded $200. Of late years the big card was Stanley, who received $1,000 a night. At the present time the pre-eminent success on the rostrum is Stoddard, with his stereopticon.

SEVEN HUNDRED recruits for Coxey's army seized and tied up several Southern Pacific trains at Findlay, Tex.

THE NATION'S SOLONS.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed and Acted Upon.

Doings of Congress.

The House adjourned Monday after a brief session on account of the death of Senator Colquit. Mr. Turner, of Georgia, who had been chosen by the Georgia delegation to announce the death of Senator Colquitt to the House, sent to the clerk's desk the usual resolutions of regret and for attending the funeral. The Speaker then appointed the following committee to accompany the remains to Georgia: Messrs. Livingstone, Holman, Bunn, Cabaniss, Maddox, McDonald, W. A. Stone, Cogswell and Grout. The death of Senator Colquitt was announced in the Senate by Mr. Gordon, the colleague of the dead statesman. In a few touching words he briefly recounted the services of the dead Senator in the field of politics and in his domestic life. The customary resolution of regret was adopted and a committee of ten Senators appointed to accompany the remains to Macon, Ga. The following committee was appointed by the Vice President: Senators Gordon, Morgan, Butler, Ransom, Gray, Hoar, Proctor, Carey, Perkins, and Allen. Prayer was offered at the convening of the Senate by Mr. Colquitt's pastor, Rev. Isaac W. Canter, of the Mount Vernon Place M. E. Church, and at 12:14 o'clock the Senate adjourned.

The House did but little business Tuesday. Representative Boen, of Minnesota, introduced a bill for the reduction of compensation of persons in the government service. It provides that salaries from $1,000 to $5,000 be reduced 25 per cent, and that those from $5,000 to $20,000 be reduced 33⅓ per cent; all above $20,000 reduced 50 per cent. The Senate met at 9:45 and immediately adjourned.

Wednesday, the House was engaged with contested election cases, the seat of Mr. Joy (Rep.), of Missouri, being at stake. The majority report of the committee had gone against Mr. Joy. The vote on the substitute for the report of the majority of the committee, presented by the minority, declaring Mr. Joy entitled to his seat, resulted: Yeas, 102; nays, 146. The substitute was rejected. Mr. Burrows of Michigan moved to reconsider, and Mr. Springer, of Illinois, moved to lay that motion on the table. Friends of Mr. Joy then precipitated another filibuster by making the point of no quorum on the division, and the roll call was taken. No quorum. On motion of Mr. Patterson the House at 5:45 adjourned. In the Senate Senator Berry, of Arkansas, called up the resolution authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to receive at the subtreasury in New York from R. T. Wilson & Co., or assigns, the money, amounting to $6,740,000, to be paid to the Cherokee Nation, and to place the same to the credit of the Cherokee Nation. It was agreed to. Then the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business, and when the doors were again reopened took up the McGarrahan bill. Senator Morrill of Vermont speaking in opposition to the claim. Mr. Hunt of Virginia followed Mr. Morrill, and argued in favor of the bill. At 4 o'clock Mr. Hunton concluded his speech, and Senator Vilas rose to address the Senate, but yielded to a motion for an executive session made by Mr. Puch, which was carried. At 4:05 the Senate adjourned.

The House Thursday renewed consideration of the Joy-O'Neill contest, but it is still unsettled. In order to get a quorum to transact business, the Sergeant-at-arms was directed to arrest all absentees, and the Speaker counted a quorum, as was done in the days of the Fifty-first Congress by ex-Speaker Reed. Scenes of the wildest confusion prevailed. In the Senate, the bill prescribing limitations of time for the completion of title to certain lands disposed of under the act of Congress known as the "donation act," and for the protection of purchasers and occupants of the lands, which are situated in the States of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho, was passed by a vote of 49 to 7. The House joint resolution appropriating $100,000 additional to carry out the provisions of the Chinese exclusion act was passed. The McGarrahan bill was passed without division. It refers the claim of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panocho Grande to the Court of Private Land Claims, which shall report its findings to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall issue a patent to McGarrahan if this decision shall be in his favor.

In recognition of the personal sacrifice Speaker Crisp made in declining the Senatorship there was a burst of applause again Saturday morning when he ascended the rostrum to call the House to order. Immediately after the reading of the journal, Mr. Payne, of New York, arose to a question of personal privilege and made an explanation of the incident which occurred late Thursday afternoon when the Speaker had stated in reply to a seeming defiance of the Chair by Mr. Payne, when the latter was ordered to take his seat, that he would recognize a motion to bring the contumacious member to the bar of the House. Mr. Payne stated that on that occasion the reply which he made—that he would take his seat when he got ready—was in response to something said by Mr. Outhwaite, not to

UNITED AT LAST

By Miss M. E. Braddon.

CHAPTER I.

AT THE STAR AND GARTER.

Glorious June weather, tender moonlight from a moon newly risen—a mystical light—silver-bright on far-off glimpses of the winding river, soft and mysterious where it falls upon the growing darkness of the woodland; a pensive light, by which men not altogether given up to the world are apt to ponder the deeper enigmas of this life, and to look backward, Heaven knows with what keen agonies of regret, to youth that has vanished and friends that are dead.

Two men who had been dining at the Star and Garter, and who have stolen away from the dessert to smoke their cigars under the midsummer moon, contemplate the familiar landscape in a lazy, meditative silence. One is sitting on the stone balustrade of the terrace, with his face turned to the distant curve of the river, watching the tender light with a very somber expression of countenance; the other stands with his elbows resting on the balustrade, smoking industriously, and looking every now and then with rather an uneasy glance at his companion.

The first is Sir Cyprian Davenant, the last scion of a good old Kentish family, and owner of one of the finest and oldest places in the county of Kent. The Davenants have been a wild, reckless set for the last hundred years, and there is not an acre of Davenant Park or a tree in Davenant Woods unencumbered by mortgage. How Sir Cyprian lives and contrives to keep out of a debtor's prison is a subject for the wonder of his numerous acquaintances. His intimate friends know that the man has few expensive habits and that he has a small income from an estate inherited from his mother.

Sir Cyprian's companion is a man approaching middle age, with a decidedly plain face, redeemed from ugliness by a certain brightness of expression about the mouth and eyes. This gentleman is James Morton Wyatt, a solicitor, with an excellent practice, and a decided taste for literature, which he is rich enough to be able to cultivate at his leisure, leaving the ordinary run of cases to the care of his junior partner, and only putting in an appearance at his office when an affair of some importance is on hand. James Wyatt is a bachelor and a great favorite with the fair sex, for whom his fashionable modern cynicism seems to possess an extraordinary charm. The cynic has a natural genius for the art of flattery and a certain subtle power of pleasing that surprises his male acquaintances, who wonder what the women can see in this fellow, with his long, mean-looking nose, and his small gray eyes, and his incessant flow of shallow talk.

"You're not very likely company to-night, Davenant," James Wyatt said, at last. "I've been waiting with exemplary patience for some kind of reply to the question I asked you about a quarter of an hour ago."

"You can scarcely expect much liveliness from a man who is going to start for Africa in four-and-twenty hours, with a very vague prospect of coming back again."

"Well, I don't know about that. It's a pleasure trip, isn't it, this African exploration business?"

"It is to be called pleasure, I believe. My share in it would never have come about but for a promise to an old friend. It is a point of honor with me to go. The promise was given five or six years ago, when I was hot upon the subject. I expect very little enjoyment from the business now, but I am bound to go."

He sighed as he said this, still looking far away at the winding river, with the same somber expression in his eyes.

James Wyatt heard the regretful sigh, and noted the despondence of his companion's tone.

"I should have thought there were not many people in England you would care about leaving, Davenant," he said, with a curious, watchful look at the other man's half averted face. "I have heard you boast of standing alone in the world."

"Rather a barren boast, isn't it?" said Sir Cyprian, with a brief and bitter laugh. "Yes, I am quite alone. Since my sister Marian's marriage, and complete absorption in nursery cares and nursery joys, there is no one to offer let or hindrance to my going yonder. I have friends, of course, a great many—such as you, Jim, for instance; jolly good fellows, who would smoke a cigar with me to-night in the bonds of friendship, and who would hear of my death a month hence without turning a hair."

"Don't talk platitudes about your friends, Cyprian. I have no doubt they are as good as other people's. I don't know a man going more popular than you are."

Cyprian Davenant took no notice of this remark.

"I'll tell you what it is, Davenant," continued the lawyer, "there is something deeper than you have owned to yet at the bottom of your reluctance to leave England. There is some one, at least—a woman."

The other turned his face full upon the speaker. "You're about right, Jim," he said, tossing the end of his cigar away as he spoke. "There is a woman—not a sudden caprice, either—but a woman I have loved truly and fondly for the last five years of my life. If I were a wise man, I should be very glad of this chance of curing my infatuation by putting a few thousand miles between myself and the loveliest face I ever saw."

"It's a hopeless case, then, I suppose," suggested James Wyatt.

"Quite hopeless. What have I to offer the woman I love? The income upon which I have managed to live since my ruin and subsequent reformation would be something worse than beggary for a wife such as the woman I love. Even if she were willing to share my poverty, could I be mean enough to drag her into such a slough of despond? No, Jim, it is a hopeless case. My pretty one and I must part. I to dreary old bachelorhood, she to fulfill her mission, and make one of the grand matches of the season."

"I think I know the lady," said James Wyatt, slowly. "Lord Clanyarde's youngest daughter; the new one, eh, Cyprian? The Clanyardes are neighbors of yours in Kent, I know."

"Of course I can trust you, Jim. Yes, you've hit it. But what made you fix upon Constance Clanyarde?"

"Have I not senses to understand, and eyes to see, and have I not seen you and Miss Clanyarde together at least three times? Why, Cyprian, the infatuation on both sides is patent to the most unsophisticated observer. It's a pity you've only four hundred a year. That would be rather a tight squeeze for a Clanyarde. They're a notoriously extravagant set, I know, and have been up to their eyes in debt for the last forty years. Yes, I have seen the lady, Cyprian, and she is very lovely. Upon my word, I'm sorry for you."

"Thanks, old fellow. I needn't ask you not to mention my name in conjunction with Miss Clanyarde's. And now I suppose we'd better go back to our friends."

"I think so. By the way, what do you think of the lady we were asked to meet?"

"Mrs. Walsingham? She is very handsome. A widow, I suppose?"

"She is rather silent on that point, and I have heard it hinted that Colonel Walsingham—he was Colonel in the Spanish Contingent, I believe, and Count of the Holy Roman Empire—still walks this earth, and that the lady owes her agreeable freedom to an American court of divorce. The antecedents are altogether doubtful, and Mrs. Walsingham's set is of the order fast and furious. Gilbert Sinclair likes that kind of thing."

"And I suppose Mrs. Walsingham likes Gilbert Sinclair."

"Or his money. Sinclair's about the biggest fish in the matrimonial waters, and she will be a happy angler who lands him. But I really believe Mrs. Walsingham has a weakness for the man himself, independent of his money. Strange, isn't it? Sinclair's the dearest fellow in the world, and as his friend of course I dote upon him; but I confess that if I were a woman I should regard him with unmitigated loathing."

"That's rather strong."

"Of course he's a most estimable creature; but such an unspeakable snob, such a pompous, purse-proud cad. Ah, there he is at the window looking for us. If I were a woman, you know, Cyprian, that man would be the object of my aversion; but I'm not, and he's my client, and it is the first duty of a solicitor to love his clients. Coming, Gilbert."

The two men crossed a little bit of lawn, and went in through the open window. The room was lighted with wax candles, and a merry party was crowded round a table, at one end of which a lady was dispensing tea in quite a homelike fashion. She was a very beautiful woman, of a showy type, dressed in white muslin half covered with lace; dressed just a little too youthfully for her five-and-thirty years. There were two other ladies present, one a fashionable actress, and the other her friend and confidante, also an aspirant to dramatic fame. The first was engaged in an agreeable flirtation with a cornet of dragoons, the second was listening with delight to the lively conversation of Mr. Bellingham, manager of the Phœnix Theater. A couple of gentlemen belonging to the stock-broking fraternity, and Gilbert Sinclair, the giver of the feast, made up the party.

Mr. Sinclair was a man whom many people admired, and who was in no obvious manner deserving James Wyatt's unflattering description. He affected a certain bluntness of style, which his friends accepted as evidence of a candid and open soul and a warm heart.

The chief claim which Mr. Sinclair possessed to notoriety was comprised in the fact of his wealth. He was the owner of a great estate in the north, an estate consisting of iron-works and coal-pits, the annual income from which was something stupendous, and he had shares in more railways and mines and foreign loans than his friends could calculate.

"I wish you would give me a little assistance with the teacups, Gilbert," Mrs. Walsingham said, rather impatiently. "It is all very well to talk of the pleasantness of having the tea made in the room in this way, but one requires some help. Thanks. Take that to Sir Cyprian Davenant, if you please, and bring me Sophy Morton's cup."

Mr. Sinclair obeyed, and when he came back with the empty cup Mrs. Walsingham motioned him to a vacant chair by her side and detained him there till the carriages were announced. She called him by his Christian name in the face of society, and this party of to-night was only one of many entertainments that had been given at different times for her gratification. It was scarcely strange, therefore, if rumor, especially loud on the part of the lady's friends, declared that Mr. Sinclair and Mrs. Walsingham were engaged to be married. But the acquaintance between them had continued for a long time, and those who knew most of Gilbert Sinclair shook their heads significantly when the matrimonial question was mooted.

Mrs. Walsingham detained Mr. Sinclair in conversation some time after the carriages had been announced. She was very bright and animated, and looked her best as she talked to him. It was nearly eleven o'clock when she was reminded of the lateness of the hour and the length of the drive before them by Miss Sophy Morton, who had lately transferred her attention from the callow cornet to Mr. Wyatt, much to the disgust of the youthful dragoon.

"Yes, Sophy, I am going to put on my shawl. Will you fetch our wraps from the next room, please, Mr. Wyatt? Will you take the back seat in the brougham, Gilbert, and wind up with a lobster salad in Half-Moon street? It is really early, you know."

"Thanks, no. I could scarcely trust my man to drive those chestnuts; so I think I'll go back in the phaeton; and I'm due at a hop in Eaton square."

"Indeed?" asked the lady curiously, and with a rather anxious look. "You used not to care for dancing parties."

"I don't care for them now, but one has to sacrifice inclination now and then, you know."

"Do I know the people?" asked Mrs. Walsingham.

Mr. Sinclair smiled as he replied: "I think not."

A cloud came over the lady's face, and when her shawl had been adjusted she took Gilbert Sinclair's hand in silence. Nor did she speak to him on the way to the porch of the hotel, where a mail phaeton and a couple of broughams were waiting. Her adieus to the rest of the party were brief and cold, and Gilbert himself she only honored by a stately inclination of her beautiful head, with its coronal of bright chestnut hair, and coquettish little curls dotted about a broad white forehead.

Mr. Sinclair stood bareheaded under the porch as the Walsingham brougham drove away, and then turned with a frown to perform his duties in other directions. Here, however, he found there was nothing left for him to do. Miss Morton and her companion had been escorted to their carriage by Sir Cyprian Davenant and Mr. Wyatt, and were waiting to bid their host good-by.

"And a thousand thanks for our delightful day, Mr. Sinclair, which we are not likely to forget for a long time, are we, Imogen?"

Miss Imogen Harlow, who had been born Watson and christened Mary Anne, shook her empty little head coquettishly, and declared that the memory of that Richmond dinner would remain with her to her dying day. And on the way home the two ladies discussed Mr. Sinclair and his income, and speculated as to the chances of his ultimately marrying Mrs. Walsingham.

DESPISED NO MORE.

Cotton Seed Has Now Deposed King Cotton from His Throne.

A few decades ago cotton held undisputed sway in the country; cotton seed was regarded as valueless. Even five years ago when the Southern planter gathered his cotton and sold it he paid little attention to the seed. He saved enough of it to raise his next year's crop, and, if convenient, kept a few bushels more to feed the milk cows around his farm. Sometimes he carted off a few wagon loads to dump on an old field as a fertilizer, and often he refused to haul it away from the gin at all. The amount that rotted around such places was immense. When any was sold, it commonly brought 5 cents a bushel, provided the farmer was not ashamed of taking anything for such a commodity. Even three years ago, in many sections of the South, 8 cents for a bushel of cotton seed was considered a good price. Last year the price was often as high as 25 cents and occasionally reached 32 cents. When cotton itself sells at 6 cents or 7 cents per pound and seed at the prices mentioned the farmers begin to feel as if they would like their cotton to be all seed. As it is, the seed not unfrequently constitutes one-fourth or even one-third the value of the whole crop. So important a matter has it become that to-day one single company has $40,000,000 invested in handling cotton seed products.

The uses to which cotton-seed products are put are almost innumerable. The oil itself is used in making soap, other oils, lard, butterine and countless other things. We ship immense quantities to Europe—especially Rotterdam—and bring it back again slightly refined under the names of olive oil and linseed oil. The Armours and other pork men use large amounts in putting up lard. Cottolene is the name of a new product now coming into use as a competitor of lard. Many housekeepers use the oil itself instead of lard and claim to like it. The meal remaining after the oil has been extracted is fed to cattle, and is said to produce excellent results. The hulls also are fed to cattle. Twenty pounds of hulls and ten of meal make a full daily feed for beef steers, and the cattle are ready for market in ninety days. The hulls, furthermore, are now being used in manufacturing paper.

A Miraculous Escape.

A miner by the name of Griffith had an extremely narrow escape from a horrible death in a mine in Washington State the other day. Griffith was at work on a slope when pieces of coal weighing about 1,500 pounds became detached above him and started down the slope toward Griffith, whose only escape lay in running down the slope ahead of the lump of coal. It soon became a race for life, with the coal increasing its speed at every bound and adding to the terrors of the flying Griffith. Half way down the slope the speed at which Griffith was going extinguished the lamp in his hat and left him in the dark. He continued his flight, in which lay his only safety, and, after running for what seemed an age, he stumbled on one of the side beams and fell, expecting to be instantly crushed to death. The coal came on, and, by a miracle, was checked by the timber, but in jamming caught one of poor Griffith's legs against the timber, breaking the bone in two places. Help soon came down to the man and he was carried out and cared for.

The German Empress' Other Self.

When the German Emperor was last in England, an order was sent to a well-known firm of modelers for a model to be made of the Empress' figure, with movable arms, complete, the upper part to be made of papier-mache, the lower part below the waist, like a telescope of wire framework. This unique fac simile of her majesty is to be used as a substitute on all occasions when the Empress cannot be personally present. For instance, all dresses are to be tried on this second self. When they are sent from the dressmaker finished, her majesty will inspect and criticise them from every point of view, and pronounce on their suitability for her figure, and so on—in fact, see her dresses as others see them. This double is also to be used for decorating evening dresses with flowers, etc., and taking creases out of trunk-crushed gowns. The model is made like a telescope, one part of it to fit inside the other, so as to take up little more space when traveling than a bonnet box.

The Terrible Beglia Monster.

They say that there is a beneficial use for every created thing, but I would like to discover some useful purpose that the beglia monster serves, says a traveler. I never saw but two or three of them, but they did not create any desire upon my part to see any more. They do not have to bite or sting, but can kill by simply blowing their poisonous breath upon a victim, and in this way they kill anything that comes within the reach of the effects of their poisonous breath. An Indian in Arizona will run for miles if he sees one of these reptiles, and hardly considers himself safe until in his own wigwam. They are found in but the one place, I believe, and why this locality should have been selected to produce such a monstrosity I can not imagine. Those I have seen have only been a very few inches in length, but I would rather take my chances with a boa-constrictor or even a python twenty feet long.

Natural Gas for Making Ice.

An ordinary gas well, furnishing 1,500,000 cubic feet per day, with a suitable refrigerating apparatus, is capable of making fifty-one tons of ice at an expense not to exceed 50 cents per ton; and then, by conducting it to furnaces or rolling mills, glass works, brick, lime, or pottery kilns, it will produce the same amount of heat as if it was delivered directly from the well. It will not be long before the natural gas fields will furnish all the ice we need for our comfort through the hot season as it does now fuel through the cold season.

Better the Other Way.

Curran said to Father O'Leary (the wittiest priest of his day): "I wish you were St. Peter." "Why?" asked O'Leary. "Because," said Curran, "you would have the keys of heaven and could let me in." "It would be better for you," said O'Leary, "that I had the keys of the other place, for then I could let you out."

ONLY A RAT.

But He Drew a Crowd and Had Lots of Fun.

A boy ten years old suddenly appeared on Monroe avenue, near Randolph street, the other forenoon with a rat-trap held high in his hand. The trap contained a rat—an old veteran—who had probably eaten twenty times his weight in Michigan cheese. For years and years he had been too fly for those who sought his destruction, but the pitcher had gone to the well once too often. He was squealing and squirming about, but there was no one to pity. The boy had scarcely gained the street when there was a rush for him, and men and boys were heard shouting:

"He's got a rat!"

"Lemme git my dog!"

"Good gracious, what a whopper!"

"Don't let him git away!"

The man who knows all about rats was there, of course. Also the man who has made the killing of rats a specialty all his life. They worked their way to the front.

"You don't want to fool with that rat," cautioned the first.

"I think I know my business," bluntly replied the second.

"So do I."

"Don't interfere with me."

Three or four dogs were brought into the crowd. The man who is always willing to boss the job also got off a street car and elbowed his way in to demand:

"What's all this fuss about? A rat, eh! Now, then, everybody stand back. Gimme that trap."

The boy demurred. It was his trap and his rat. He felt that he ought to be consulted.

"Let 'er go, Gallagher!" yelled one of the crowd.

"Where's your rat?"

"Somebody hit the man with a red necktie."

A policeman now appeared. He began to use his official elbows to open a path for his body, but the crowd resented the action, and began to hustle him until he threatened to collar some one. Meanwhile the two men who knew all about rats were jawing with the man who wanted to boss the job, and the boy was declaring that his brother would lick the man who stole his rodent.

"You're a liar!"

"Hit him one!"

"Look out for the cop!"

The crowd began to circle around, and the boy fell down and lost his trap. Some one picked it up and shook the rat out, and dogs and men and boys were all mixed up, and falling over each other. In the confusion the rat got away into the sewer, the policeman rapped three men on the back with his club, and the crowd dissolved, leaving about a dozen hats kicking around on the battleground. Then a lot of people shook their fists in the air, and another lot called somebody a liar, and everybody went away mad and threatening to get even if it took him a whole year.—Free Press.

The Wrong Card.

During his visit to Paris a distinguished German professor presented himself at the house of a well-known lady to whom he had sent letters of introduction for a dance. When the servant opened the door and received his card she conducted him to the boudoir and told him to be seated, saying:

"Madam will come immediately."

Presently the lady entered. She was in dishabille, and her feet were bare, covered only with slippers.

"Ah, good-morning," said she, bowing to him carelessly.

She threw herself on a chair, let fall a slipper, and extended her foot to the Professor.

He was naturally surprised, but he remembered that at his home in Germany it was the custom sometimes to kiss a lady's hand, and he supposed it was the Paris mode to kiss her foot. He therefore did not hesitate to imprint a kiss upon the fascinating foot before him.

The lady sprang from her chair, highly indignant.

"Who are you, sir, and what do you mean by such conduct?"

He gave his name.

"Then you are not the chiropodist for whom I sent?"

"I am charmed to say, dear madam, that I am not."

"But the servant brought me a chiropodist's card."

It was true. The Professor, in going out that morning, had picked up a chiropodist's card lying on his bureau and put it in his pocket. This, without glancing at it, he had given to the servant, who had taken it to her mistress. There was nothing to be done but to laugh over the joke.

His Use of Words.

The old man adjusted his glasses and looked at the pale-faced clerk.

"Absent yesterday," he said, shortly.

"Yes, sir," replied the clerk.

"Absent from sickness?"

"No, sir."

"Oho! you're honest, anyway. Most men would say they were."

"I haven't been absent from sickness for nearly a year."

"You haven't?"

The old man looked surprised.

"No, sir. It has been right with me all the time."

"What has?"

"Sickness of some sort."

"But you said that yesterday——"

"Yesterday I was absent on account of sickness, sir."

The old man thought the matter over for a minute or two, and then he said:

"Yes, yes; I see! You're rather particular in your use of words."

"Yes, sir. Study to use them correctly."

"Of course; and I'm a trifle careless. Now, please see if this sentence is correct. 'Hereafter you will be absent from my displeasure.'"

"Ye-es, sir."

"You will also be absent on account of my displeasure."

"Ye-es, sir."

"And because of my displeasure."

"Ye-es, sir."

"Quite right. I am glad that I have sufficient command of language to make you understand me. Good-day!"

"I am 20. At 12 I learned a bad habit which I continued till 19. I then became "one of the boys" and led a gay life. Exposure produced Syphilis. I became nervous and despondent; no ambition; memory poor; eyes red, sunken and blur; pimples on face; hair loose, bone pains; weak back; varicocele; dreams and losses at night; weak parts; deposits in urine, etc. I spent hundreds of dollars without help, and was contemplating suicide when a friend recommended Drs. Kennedy & Kergan's New Method Treatment. Thank God I tried it. In two months I was cured. This was six years ago, and never had a return. Was married two years ago and all happy. Boys, try Drs. Kennedy & Kergan before giving up hope."

JUDGE POWERS will probably be induced to make the race for congress. The Judge would be a great improvement. We hope to see him run.

THE appropriation bill for rivers and harbors, now before congress, gives Michigan City $15,000 for the outer harbor Calumet gets $1,000 and Chicago $80,000.

THE Press and Dispatch don't want a new bridge built at Waterloo. They can easily prevent the building by carrying a paper around among the people using that bridge and getting them to sign it, asking the commissioners to give up the job. If these editors are telling the truth they ought to have the courage to do this. By all means get up a remonstrance.

THE DISPATCH is still trying to wrestle with the question, as to how six cents interest for one year amounts to nine cents for one year and a half. Funny isn't it?

How will republican editors account for the fact that a democratic pension commissioner last week made a decision that puts more people on the pension list than a republican administration was willing to place there?

TOWNSHIP trustees will not likely be obliged to pay over their school funds after all the fuss. The COURIER asserted from the first that it would not be done, as the supreme court had not had the matter fully presented to them.

PEORIA, Ill., last week the big standpipe of the waterworks burst and flooded that part of the town. It killed two or three and hurt several. Peoria is the great whisky-manufacturing town, and will hereafter dislike water more than ever.

DALTON, at Philadelphia, one of the district U. S. judges, decides that Chinese cannot be naturalized, as the U. S. law of May 6, 1882, is still in force, and forbids it. This decision shows that Judge Powers was right in refusing Lee Foo Ton in court here last fall.

THE Press and Dispatch are respectfully informed that Commissioner Hoffelder writes his own articles and is not afraid to sign his own name to them. And we might add, they compare favorably in force and clearness to anything either of these editors ever wrote.

CRISP, Speaker of the House, was last week appointed by the governor of Georgia to the U. S. senate to succed Colquitt, who died. After thinking it over a day or two Crisp declined. There is so much depending on him as speaker, that he felt it his duty to remain where hei s.

THERE seems to be considerable concern among certain individuals, says the Ligonier Banner, as to the course that may be taken by this paper under certain contingencies. In the past the Banner has been supporting democratic candidates pretty regularly, while some of the fellows who are now talking so glibly of party loyalty and straight democracy were openly knifing the regular democratic nominees or insisting upon their price for party fealty.

THE populist paper at Laporte has winked out. People are fast finding out that there is not enough foundation in their doctrines, to make a new party successful and so refuse to support them. All the reasonable things the people ever asked, are advocated by the democratic party. All the laws on statute books, favorable to the people and calculated to better their condition, or that of society at large, have been passed by democrats, often against strong opposition. There is no excuse for any democrat to leave his party.

A Democratic Law.

[Indianapolis Sentinal.]

Yesterday the state of Indiana paid off $370,000 of its bonded debt. This is the second payment since the new tax law went into effect. The total reduction under that law has been $710,000, and the annual saving of interest $21,300. The total debt remaining, exclusive of the bonds to our universities, is $7,636,615,12. This year the sinking fund levy comes into effect and at least $350,000 more will be available for the reduction of the debt. The payments thus far have been made from the savings in the general fund. We would call the attention of our republican friends to the fact that the democrats of Indiana have shown their ability to handle a financial question and handle it well. The new tax law of Indiana is one of the greatest of democratic achievements.

Judge Powers Declines.

It has been generally conceded that Judge Powers could have a renomination if he wished it, but it seems he does not care for the office longer. He put the following card in last week's Angola Herald:

EDITOR HERALD: My friends are asking me whether my name will be presented for consideration as a candidate before the judicial convention to be held at Waterloo May 2d. Will you please say through your valuable paper, that while I fully appreciate what my many friends have done for me, and their desire for my future advancement, I think six years, at a time, is as long as any man should, in this state, have the same office. I am firmly of the opinion that a person should not succeed himself to an elective office, and with a desire to return to the independence of private life, I cannot consent to be a candidate before that convention. STEPHEN A. POWERS.
Angola, March 26, 1894.

And the Herald adds the following comments: "Judge Powers publishes a card elsewhere in to-day's Herald, in which he announces his desire to retire from the bench with the expiration of his present term of office, and in which he declares the opinion that six years is long enough for any man to hold an elective office. We remember that the Judge had expressed this view before his election, but, nowstanding his strict integrity, there were those among his friends who thought he might be prevailed upon to accede to their wishes to enter the race again."

This will leave the field open to the nomination of Cyrus Cline, of Angola, who is, as far as we know, the only democratic candidate now in the field for the judgeship. We have been acquainted with him for many years, and believe, if elected, he would make a fair judge.

THEY DID THEMSELVES PROUD

And Gave a Substantial Supper on the Strength of it.

The lodge that learns the art of making a candidate's ingress into it especially interesting, is blessed with a distinction not easily won. Auburn Lodge No 191, Knights of Pythias have the faculty of giving any candidate who intrudes upon their profound deliberations, a full value for his money. In fact he never forgets how warm the reception was.

But aside from these facts of a general nature, the lodge did itself proud on Friday night, March 30, in the matter of conferring the rank of Esquire. D. D. Moody, the genial clerk of the DeKalb circuit court was the victim. The "boys" had been "laying" for "Dave" a long time. It was thought by many, that his "antagonistic" disposition especially fitted him for learning the far reaching lessons taught in that rank. So it was with no little degree of interest that he was brought forth to meet the "royal bumper," and made to ride the "traditional goat."

Carefully was this "goat" fed for weeks on the diet calculated to develop life and sagacity, so that he might be in prime condition for so weighty a rider as Mr. Moody. At last the eventful night came. Dave strode forth to meet the fray, mid the mighty throng of Sir Knights from Corunna, Garrett, Spencerville and St. Joe, besides a goodly turnout from the membership here. The victim took his medicine in a manner that both surprised and gratified those who would bestow upon him the crowning honor of noble Knighthood. Dave is an exceptionally good equestrian and after performing several rare feats with "goaty," he with everybody else present to the number of 78 satisfied the cravings of a quickened appetite at the Restaurant de Hidy.

This was by far the most pleasant conferring of degrees, 191 has made for some months, and while there is much about it that would entertain the public, prudence demands that "Moody" must tell the tale himself. Among those present from other lodges, were: Spencerville—Henry and John Beams, Jacob Baltz, The. Crestly, C. Rhoades, Walt. Stewart, J. V. Stewart, Josh. Eberly, Jack. Beams, D. C. Butler, Stephen Silberg, W. O. Lake, Newt Donaldson, Alfred Kissler; Corunna—U. Graham, I. B. Goetschius; Garrett City No. 13—W. B. Satterfield, H. S. David, L. J. Gengler, D. C. Behler, J. C. Crow, W. Homerick, Stanley Van-Fleet, Geo. W. Lackey, Frank Loer, L B Hart, Andrew Wagner, Ed Gelhousen; St. Joe—F. Able, C. B. Walter, O. F. Saylor, Joe Herrod, Jus. Allen, Ed. Leighly, J. F. White, Will Curis, J. K. Stafford; G. E. Spake, No. 360, Monroeville; H. E. Dunkle, Florence Lodge, No. 502, Blakeslee, O.,

W. C. T. U. at St. Joe.

The semi-annual convention of the DeKalb county W. C. T. U. held a very interesting session last Wednesday at St. Joe in the Lutheran church. The devotional half-hours of the convention were conducted by Miss Laura Keeran, of Auburn, Mrs. Rebecca Beams, of Spencerville, and the president, Mrs. O. B. Jones, of Garrett. The words of welcome were given by Mrs. Maggie Stafford and responded to by Mrs. Bertha Olds, of Auburn. The forenoon was taken up by reports of various kinds and a noontide prayer service. A paper entitled "Woman's Suffrage" by Mrs. Barns, of Auburn, was followed by a spirited discussion. Select reading, Mrs. Baldwin, of Auburn, and vocal solo by Mrs. Gill, of Waterloo. Remarks by Rev. Mr. Nelson, of Ft. Wayne, with reports of superientendents, closed the afternoon session. The evening exercises were very enjoyable. After the devotional part, Miss Keeran gave a very enjoyable paper entitled "Women of the Bible." A vocal solo was given by Mrs. Bower, of Kendallville, who was an interested visitor. Mrs. Williams, of St. Joe, then read an interesting paper on the "Aims, Objects and Methods of the W. C. T. U." This was followed by a short paper on "Systematic Giving" by Mrs. Ellen Baltz, of Spencerville. Mrs. Alice Lewis, of Auburn, sang a delightful solo entitled "Ruth and Naomi," and followed this by a paper on the "The Hadley Industrial School" for girls. This closed the convention and those who attended enjoyed it very much, notwithstanding the stormy weather. The well known hospitality of the St. Joe people was as fully shown as ever. Those in attendance from Auburn were: Mrs. A. Lewis, Mrs. Baldwin, Miss Keeran, Mrs. McNabb, Mrs. Barns, Mrs. Ann Culbertson, Mrs. Prosser and Mrs. Elias Zimmerman.

We left the court at work on the car stealing case from Garrett. Arnold, who had been brought back from Michigan City in charge of one of the guards, swore that he and Morris stole from the cars and divided the spoil. There was no other evidence against Morris, while several others swore he was a man of good character. The jury went out Friday forenoon, but soon came in with a verdict of acquittal. They evidently did not believe Arnold. Then as the case against Charles Phelps rested alone on the testimony of Arnold, also, he too was discharged. The case of Moorehouse in the same matter of robbing cars, came on next. He was brought in and consulted with his attorney, Mr. Emanuel. Then he went back to jail and soon after came in before Judge E. D. Hartman and plead guilty. The judge gave him a year up at the big brick pen near Hoosier Slide. The case of Prosser against the Wabash railroad is put off to next term. Martin Fisher for larceny, got one day in jail.

The cases against Deeters for civil damages, brought by the Bechtel estate, the Laura Lowe estate and by Mr. Yates, have been put in course of settlement. The court decides, and the parties agree, that Mrs. Rebecca Emerick, who paid Deeters' attorneys, shall have her $2,500 out of Sam Deeters' estate first. So the property will be sold on her mortgage. The court gives a judgement in favor of each of the three parties named above, of $5,000, so that whatever is left after Mrs. Emerick is paid can be divided among the three. It is claimed that Sam's property was worth about $8,000, and if this is so, there will be something to divide after Mrs. Emerick is paid her mortgage and costs. The jury was dismissed Tuesday, and the rest of the work will be before the Judge, though it is possible they may be called in one day next week. Cline the news boy, or man, rather, who made the wrong change for a man, was called up. Gen. Blair defended him, and after a full trial he was acquitted as the jury could not agree on any other verdict, and did not want to put the county to the expense of a new trial. He had been in jail two months already.

Grace Watkins got a divorce from George Watkins.

The term closes next week. The effort for a new trial for Deeters is given up. It is now thought some of the expenses of the trial may be had out of his estate, but we are not certain. But DeKalb will have to pay Steuben $3,125 35, which Steuben has had to pay in costs of the suit. Total cost will be over $5,000.

REPUBLICAN papers are just now approving Senator Hill high tariff talk running like this:

If it costs $2 for labor to produce a certain manufactured article in foreign countries, while it costs $4 to produce the same article in this country, then we favor a tariff of $2 on that article in order to equalize the difference in wages.

Now what we wish to ask is this: Will republicans be willing to accept a tariff rate that just covers the difference in labor cost between this country and foreign countries? Dont all speak at once.

Butler Review: Elsewhere will be found favorable comments from Auburn papers on the selection by the school board of H. E. Coe, for superintendent of the Butler schools. We are glad that the board has taken the advice of the the Review and to all appearences selected a good man, and we hope hope that the assistants to Mr. Coe will prove to be worthy and able instructors. Too many times school boards in selecting teachers elect some to positions that they know the teacher is not qualified for, only because of the influence of friends or because they may think the teacher needs the help that the salary may bring. This is, of course a very bad thing to do for the school and the Review hopes that the Butler school board will not be guilty of such practices, that they will make it a point to secure first class instructors that Butler schools may be noted as the best in Indiana.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND vetoed the bill for coining the silver seigniorage, chiefly, he says, because it would bring gold to a premium and make it scarce, and also because it provides for calling in the original silver purchase certificates that are payable in either gold or silver, and issuing in their place certificates payable in silver only, and not clearly legal tender. He may be right but we are sorry the bill had not been passed in a shape that it could become a law.

Funny errors sometimes creep into even well regulated papers like the COURIER. Last week, in speaking of the "Guarantee Tickets" at the Cyclery, we allowed ourself to say they cost $500. At this price no one but a newspaper man could buy one. The guarantee tickets cost just $5, no more, no less. Call on Cobb at the Auburn Cyclery, and see if we have not got it right this time.

John Lowe of Franklin writes another very sensible letter to the Butler Record. He claims to know that in factories, mines etc, the laborer may get a little more pay in this country but that his living will cost him more, so that he saves up less money after all. Besides, Mr. Lowe calls attention to the fact that many of our mills and mines are filled in with cheap foreigners, while our people are crowded out.

We publish this week a notice of the candidacy of C. W. Wellman, of the Sullivan Times, who will ask his fellow democrats over the state for their support at this summer's state convention. Mrs. John Hebel entertained the two Chautauqua societies at her home last Friday evening. The ladies and their husbands, to the number of over fifty, enjoyed the occasion, which was a very pleasant one. It is the rule of these Chautauqua clubs to have no regular work on the fifth Saturday of the month, when such a date happens, and so this date was made the occasion for the entertainment of the clubs.

The COURIER a short time ago published a letter from Zeanith Stamets, then at the medical college at Ft. Wayne, speaking of the unfortunate man who had both feet frozen there, and who later died of his injuries, without telling his name. It now turns out that he was Samuel H. Hammond, of Fond du Lac, Wis., a once prominent attorney. He was a son of the Surgeon General Hammond, so prominent in the late war.

Rollie Tefft, who had been arrested at Allegheny City for stealing jewelry in Washington as noted in the COURIER recently, escaped from the jail there by sawing off the bars with a saw sent him by his wife. He was chased over the country by detectives, but managed to keep a little ahead of them, till Saturday night, when he stepped off a Michigan Central train in Chicago, when he was arrested and taken back to Allegheny City.

Miss Annie Garvin of Ft. Wayne starts back this week to her missionary work at Tokio Japan. She had been there about ten years, till her return about a year ago. She has sent back ahead of her own return, a fine Rambler bicycle, she having become a good rider since her return to Ft. Wayne. She will probably give the old fogies in Tokio, some new ideas, for although it has 400 000 people, we believe a bicycle was never seen on their streets.

Judge McClellan and Mr. Penfield returned last Thursday, at the conclusion of the Deeters trial, both pretty tired and glad it was over. It was perhaps the hardest fought legal battle, as well as the longest ever seen in the district. Every step was contested, and all the attorneys engaged have been highly complimented for their part in the great case. With such men as Penfield and Barr for the defense, it is but just to Judge McClellan to say he has won a great victory. The people at large, as far as we have heard, are pleased with the verdict won under such circumstances. We hope in common with all our people, that so terrible a crime will never again be committed in this county, and that our county will not again be called on to meet such a heavy expense. Mr. Shuman, Mr. Baxter and Prosecutor Butler, are also highly complimented by those who attended the trial.

THE Interior: Mr. Stead has signalized his departure by leaving for publication a guide-book to the brothels and other places of evil resort in Chicago. The very worst that can be said of Chicago is that such a man made his way into church circles and attracted public attention.

WHAT are we to think of the apparent extraordinary apathy manifested by the British Government toward its interests in Rio? The other day the Admiral of the British fleet refused succor to a British merchantman, whose captain accordingly found relief under the stars and stripes. More recently the masters of all the British steamships in the harbor joined in a cable message to a member of Parliament representing that "our navy refuses assistance in landing our sick and supplying water," and that the American navy was acting instead. England has not been used to neglect her merchant marine—quite the contrary—nor, from her breach of the treaty of Amiens downward, to stand upon nice questions of international comity when her ocean interests were involved. Has a blight fallen upon the foreign office?

PRESIDENT PEIXOTO is working himself into an unnecessary perspiration over the escape of Admiral da Gama. He is acting foolishly. What he should do is to grant the rebel leader a full pardon and invite him back to Brazil. Nothing so destroys the prestige of a would-be revolutionist as to strip him of the halo of martyrdom. Da Gama proscribed and outlawed, proclaiming his woes and the woes of Brazil in Portugal and throughout Europe generally, is an object of more or less interest, and of more or less danger to the republic. Da Gama pardoned and pursuing the peaceful vocation of running a ferryboat at Rio de Janeiro, for instance, is not a romantic subject at all. He would be absolutely innocuous. President Peixoto should hunt up the case of the United States and the late Jefferson Davis, and when found make a note of.

CURIOUSLY enough the first person of consequence who expressed the opinion that the Premier of England ought to be a member of the House of Commons was the great Duke of Wellington. On the overthrow of the Melbourne Ministry in 1841, acting on the advice of the outgoing Minister, the young Queen sent for Wellington and asked him to form a Cabinet. The Iron Duke declined the task, told the Queen that the Premier should be a member of the popular assembly, and advised her to send for Sir Robert Peel. Peel was then counted one of her enemies by Victoria. She wept a day over the matter, then Peel was summoned and became Premier. The precedent established then of taking the Premier from the House of Commons has been frequently disregarded, however, as in the case of Lord John Russell, Lord Aberdeen, Lord Derby, Lord Salisbury, and also in the case of Lord Beaconsfield's last administration.

SOME miscreants, who had gotten into the Yellowstone Park, have chased and exterminated the last of the herd of buffalo which had been preserved within its precincts by the United States Government at such trouble and expense. Unless there be some still left north of our Canadian border, this interesting bovine animal is now wholly extinct. The millions that populated our Western prairies are gone. The white man found the quadruped easier to kill and eat than the Indian, and it has disappeared even in advance of the disappearance of the red man. Here and there some domesticated buffalo are preserved, which may perpetuate in captivity a race which exists no longer in a wild and natural condition, but these are all of the bison Americanus that now survive. The Indian no longer feeds on buffalo hump. He lives on a reservation, and his government agent brings him at such and such intervals so many cattle to slaughter and eat without the trouble of hunting them. He has abandoned the chase and betakes himself to civilized roast beef and fried chicken. The diet of the wigwam changes the habits and manners of the aboriginal people.

"BIFF" ELLISON, the cowardly New York bully, wants to get out of Sing Sing, and petitions for his pardon are being circulated in the clubs. "Biff" evidently has a press agent at work in his behalf also. One New York paper declares that "to a man of his birth and early associations the passing inside the walls of Sing Sing and his incarceration there for a month would be as severe a punishment as would ten years' imprisonment to an ordinary criminal." This sort of dollar-a-line slobber is not likely, however, to cause Governor Flower to forget that "Biff" assaulted and beat nearly to death a feeble old man; that he had frequently been mixed up in similar affairs before, and that his "birth and early associations" did not prevent him from acting like a brute and a blackguard toward a woman whom he professed to love. No; "Biff" should remain in Sing Sing—that is, if the "ordinary criminals" don't object to associating with him. In that case it might be well to electrocute him. But in any event he ought not to be turned loose on society again.

THE Brazilian revolution was one of the best conducted on sanitary grounds that we ever heard of. It possessed prophylactic qualities of a high order. Almost as many people are killed by falling down-stairs in Chicago as lost their lives in the "bastiles" in Rio harbor. There was a great deal of wild shooting of guns—and mouths—but most of the fatalities were caused by accidents. Surrender is the outcome of Admiral Benham's stand with regard to the attempt of Da Gama to institute a blockade. Up to the time when the American sailor denied the right of the insurgent to designate the unloading place for two American merchantmen there had been no interference with what was practically a blockade. Hundreds of ships lay out in the harbor unable to discharge cargo. But when Benham notified the rebel that he must not hinder American ships all the merchant fleet loosed and moved to the piers. The episode marked the end of the rebellion, for Da Gama's only hope of success lay in his ability to destroy commerce with Rio. His downfall will be unregretted, for the opinion is strong that he was a disguised royalist working for the restoration of the old empire.

RELIGIOUS controversy is, after all, the bitterest and most wrath-provoking of all forms of argument. At a Vanceburg, Ky., prayer meeting the other night Deacon Lawhern was powerfully uplifted and prayed with great strength and eloquence. After the services he was congratulated upon his effort by Deacon Dills, who, however, ventured to call his attention to what he deemed a flavor of heresy in a certain part of the prayer. Deacon Lawhern repelled the insinuation; Deacon Dills reiterated his assertion; Deacon Lawhern felt it his duty to say that Deacon Dills was a falsifier; Deacon Dills retorted that Deacon Lawhern was another; Deacon Lawhern seized a stone and hit Deacon Dills in the neck; Deacon Dills clinched with Dacon Lawhern and bit his thumb off; Deacon Lawhern drew a slungshot and caved in Deacon Dills' head and would have dispatched him to his heavenly home altogether if the pastor had not interfered. The whole affair was most unfortunate, and as it turns out, utterly useless, because at last accounts Deacon Lawhern still maintains his orthodoxy, while Deacon Dills still proclaims him to be a heretic. There is no more use disputing about doctrine than there is in disputing about tastes.

THE recent death of John T. Ford is a striking reminder that this country is not so far away, after all, from the time when the curtain closed on the great tragedies of the war. Ford was a successful theatrical manager at Baltimore and Washington previous to the war and while it was in progress. Since its close he has continued in the same business, and he was a very wealthy man at the close of his career. Many of the noted actors of the last forty or fifty years acquired distinction under his management, some beginning the practice of their profession under his direction and tutorship. Among them were John S. Clark, John T. Raymond, Stuart Robson, John W. Albaugh, George C. Boniface, Robert Emmet Graham, Oliver D. Byron, C. B. Bishop, Mary Anderson, Maggie Mitchell, Minnie Palmer, and the Chapman sisters. John Wilkes Booth was a member of his Baltimore company, and Edwin Forrest, W. J. Florence, all the Booths, Joe Jefferson, Macready, and other stars often performed on his stage. He was the owner of Ford's Theater in Washington, where the assasination of Abraham Lincoln occurred. The theater never opened again as such. Ford was arrested for complicity in the crime, but was soon discharged.

Troublesome Initials.

Some years ago several wealthy men of Memphis, Tenn., built a steamboat, and named it after one of their best citizens, Charles B. Church. But in painting the name on the paddle-box, as they wanted the letters large, they put simply the initials, so that the name read "C. B. Church."

When the colored people first caught sight of the boat they puzzled themselves not a little over this name. Such of them as could read reasoned about the matter at great length.

"What kind ob church am dat C. B. Church?" they queried. "What does de C. B. stan' for? Dat's what we want to know."

At length a bright thought struck one of them, and he exclaimed joyfully, "I know what dat ere stan' for! Wonder I didn't see it 'fore! Dat C. B. stan' for Colored Baptis'—it's de Colored Baptis' Church, dat's what it is!"

The steamboat went by that name for some time, until the owners, in desperation at the jokes about it, erased the initials, and had Charles B. Church painted in full.

THE INDUSTRIAL "COLD SNAP" IS OVER.

And the Protectionists can't keep their Snow Man from rapidly melting away.

—Puck.

BY ORGANIZED GREED.

THE PEOPLE'S REPRESENTATIVES ARE OPPOSED.

For This Reason the Work of Tariff Reduction Has Been Slow—Prosperity Without Protection—The Sugar Trust on Top—Making Republican Votes.

Relief in Sight.

Those who are disposed to criticise the Democrats in Congress for not rushing through a bill lowering duties need to be reminded that it is vastly easier to increase than to diminish tariff taxation. The moment that it is proposed to lower duties, the interests whose "protection" would be disturbed flock to Washington and by argument, cajolery and threats endeavor to prevent action. A powerful lobby is maintained by those who profit by the taxation proposed to be diminished. It is insistent and persistent. It will yield nothing of the enormous profits its employers enjoy.

The Republican Congress in 1873 experienced this opposition. A commission it had appointed, and composed of protectionists at that, after months of inquiry and deliberation made a report to Congress recommending reductions of duties averaging 20 per cent., "not only as a due recognition of public sentiment and a measure of justice to consumers, but one conducive to the general industrial prosperity." But the greedy "protected" interests cared nothing for "public sentiment" or "justice," and straightway the capitol swarmed with their lobbyists. And the result was, a Republican Congress ignored the recommendations of its own commission, and instead of reducing duties actually increased them in a number of schedules!

What the Republican Congress in 1883 experienced, the Democratic Congress in 1894 has experienced. The "protected" interests, no more willing now than then to give up anything to consumers, have bitterly and stubbornly resisted reduction of tariff taxation. The People's representatives have been opposed by organized greed and selfishness at every step, and progress necessarily has been slow. But there has been progress. Unlike the Congress of '83, that of '94 will give consumers some relief—not so much as they are entitled to, but relief in some degree. That this has not been accomplished sooner and is not greater in extent, is because of the unyielding opposition of interests that for more than thirty years have dominated Congresses and dictated legislation. It will not be so difficult in future to obtain consideration for the people.—Catskill Recorder.

Prosperity Without Protection.

Protection never had any legs to stand upon. The United States has been the only highly protected country that has enjoyed a reasonable measure of prosperity for any considerable length of time. Such prosperity as we have had has been due to the fact that we have free trade from ocean to ocean and from gulf to lakes. Nowhere else on the globe is there such freedom of exchange between so many progressive producers with such opportunities of production.

In Europe protection's record is bad. The most highly protected countries, like Italy, Germany, Russia and France, are clearly behind England and Holland, where trade is most nearly free.

Australia was making good progress until its different colonies began to adopt protection tariffs about ten years ago. The disease spread rapidly, and soon all of the colonies were laid up with it. In 1892 a panic occurred, from which Australia has not yet recovered, and from which it is not likely to recover until its colonies again open trade with each other and with the rest of the world.

In 1891, one of the Australian colonies—New Zealand—concluded to experiment in another direction. It cut off most of its tariff duties and began to tax large land holders. A graduated tax was laid on the owners of land worth $25,000 or more. The larger the holding, the larger the tax. Twenty per cent. extra was assessed on all lands in the hands of absentees. Improvements to the extent of $15,000 were exempted from taxation.

John D. Connolly, our Consul at Auckland, has just made a report on "Land Taxation in New Zealand." Advance sheets of his report published by the State Department on March 15, are most interesting reading to all who are anxious to improve the conditions of mankind. Mr. Connolly begins by saying that "in the matter of taxation, New Zealand excels as compared with the other Australian colonies, and perhaps with many older countries;" instead of the country being ruined financially, as most of the moneyed men there said it would be, its "credit is better to-day on the London money market than is that of any other colony of Australia." Large holdings of land are diminishing and opportunities to employment are thrown open to the people. Thousands are flocking there from protection-ridden Australia. In short, New Zealand is prosperous, and prosperous at a time when not only her nearest neighbors are in a most wretched condition, but when all of the rest of the civilized world is in the dumps.

There are no effects without causes. It will pay our citizens to study the causes of New Zealand's unusual prosperity.—Byron W. Holt.

Sugar Trust on Top.

After weeks of delay, filled with ugly rumors of scandalous proceedings in the Senate, the Wilson bill has emerged to the public view, but so badly mutilated that it resembles William McKinley about as much as it does William Wilson.

By far the worst-looking patch on it is the protection duty on sugar, put there at the instigation of the Sugar Trust and the sugar-growers of Louisiana. If the proposed bill becomes law about $55,000,000 sugar tax will be collected from the people. About $40,000,000 will go to the Government, $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 to the sugar-growers and $8,000,000 or $10,000,000 to the Sugar Trust. The protection to the sugar-growers is about 1.2 cents per pound, most of their sugar testing 94 degrees to 96 degrees by the polariscope. The protection to the trust is about ¼ of a cent per pound on sugar testing from 94 degrees to 96 degrees, as three-fourths of our imports now test; 1-6 of a cent on sugar testing 90 degrees; and slightly more on sugar testing less than 90 degrees.

If the proposed bill is passed the trust will be well repaid for all of its outlay to get sugar taken from the free list where the House left it and put back into the dutiable list. But the trust, nevertheless, will do its utmost to defeat all tariff legislation, because it now has something better—the ¼-cent per pound net protection left by McKinley and Aldrich. This is worth $20,000,000 a year to it and will be retained as long as possible.

It is a shame that Democratic Senators can be found dishonorable enough to sell themselves to any trust, but we might as well look the facts in the face. We have a few traitors in camp and they are officers—the more the pity. Just as victory is assured these officers order a retreat and our ranks are disorganized and confidence is destroyed. We must shoot down these traitors before we proceed to battle again.

Senator Hill's Attitude.

Senator Hill said in a recent interview that he is "in favor of a tariff high enough to enable American manufacturers to compete with foreigners, as far as the difference in wages is concerned."

The Wilson bill does this. For this reason we have called it a protective—even a highly protective—measure. The average rate on dutiable goods in the Wilson bill is 35.52 per cent. and in the Senate bill 34.19 per cent. Either of these is as high as the duty recommended by the Republican Tariff Commission of 1883. There is not a schedule for manufactured goods in the Wilson bill in which the duties do not fully cover this difference in the labor cost. On most of the articles it is probable that the proposed duty is equal to the entire labor cost on the manufactured articles.

Senator Hill is, of course, aware that wages and labor cost are not the same thing. What Secretary Blaine wrote in 1881 of cotton goods is true of most of the competing articles. "Undoubtedly," he said, "the inequalities in the wages of English and American operatives are more than equalized by the greater efficiency of the latter and their longer hours of labor." It is a well-known economic fact that high wages generally yield the cheapest product. They are the highest not because they are protected but because they are the most productive.

Senator Hill ought to be too good a Democrat to favor a tariff for bounties to manufacturers. That is McKinleyism. He ought to be too shrewd a man to accept the statement of the beneficiaries of the McKinley tariff as to the amount of duty they require to "protect labor." He ought especially to be too honest a statesman to support duties on refined sugar, on iron and coal, which are simply a tariff for campaign contributions or for the enrichment of individuals.—New York World.

Making Republican Votes.

The Democrats in the Senate are making the very serious mistake of assuming that they can fool with the tariff as long as they like with impunity.

Already the Democratic members of the Finance Committee have spent more time in preliminary tinkering with the Wilson bill than the House took to pass it, and the delay in the future bids fair to be more intolerable than that which has already tried the patience of the country. That this has been disastrous to trade and business is well known. That it will prove damaging to the Democratic party is more than likely.

The way things are going now a vote on the bill can hardly be expected before June. It may even be the first of July before the bill becomes a law. Meanwhile public sentiment will be growing against the Democrats and votes without number will be lost to the party almost daily. Thousands and thousands of votes have already been lost in consequence of popular disgust with the failure of the party to give the country prompt relief.

It may not be too late to turn the tide, but the Democratic leaders give little promise of doing this.—Boston Herald.

Senator Gorman and the Tariff.

Senator Gorman of Maryland feels called upon to read a proclamation to the press of the country expressing his supreme displeasure with its course in urging the Senate to hasten the passage of the tariff bill. He informs us that such conduct on the part of the press is an insult to the dignity of the Senate, which body ought to be left to do its business in its own way and in its own time, and will do so, despite the impertinent and unwarrantable comments of the newspapers. Mr. Gorman is suffering from a complication of delusions. One of them is that the Senators have any business which is not public business or any authority which is not delegated. The making of a tariff is not the Senators' business, but that of the country which the Senators are hired to perform, which they are bound to perform in the interest of the country, and which the people have a perfect right to watch over and criticise the Senators' conduct in it. Another of his delusions is that the press of the country does not reflect public opinion, whereas in the long run and on great matters it clearly does so, and far more accurately, and honestly than the Senator from Maryland.

Still another of his delusions is that the tariff is safely or properly to be treated with reference to the political or business investments of individual Senators or groups of Senators. He can apparently see no reason why Senators interested in coal mines, or having friends so interested, should not block the progress of a measure the settlement of which is of the greatest importance to the business of the whole Union in order to get advantages for themselves. That is a view which makes the post of Senator much the same as that of a Rhine baron whose castle commanded the passes of trade, and who got his fortune from levying toll upon it simply because he was able to enforce the payment. It is a view which a Senator from a small State, secure in his grip on a powerful and compact machine, can hold for a time; but it is a most unworthy view, and one which Senators cannot generally afford to act upon. As for the dignity of the Senate, Mr. Gorman's course, with the motive that apparently guides it, is the most offensive insult to it that could well be offered.—New York Times.

Gorman's Bluff.

And so Senator Gorman thinks he has discovered an organized attempt on the part of the press of the country to belittle and degrade the Senate of the United States. Senator Gorman is too shrewd a man to deceive himself with this sort of talk, and he ought to appreciate the fact that he cannot make the public believe it. It is an insult to their intelligence.—Boston Herald.

Senator Gorman will probably think twice before he presumes again to read the riot act to the press and people of the United States. He ought to reflect that it is a delicate matter for a Senator to tell the people that any manifestation of im atience or interest even on their part in regard to a matter which concerns them so nearly as the tariff is a piece of impertinence which the Senate and individual Senators like himself have a right to resent.—Baltimore Sun.

Cause and Effect.

For more than thirty years the United States has maintained a high protective tariff. This for the last decade, at least, has been claimed by its friends to have been for the benefit of labor. The McKinley bill was heralded as the home of wisdom and perfection. Yet, is it not strange after so much has been done for labor that the public charitable soup house has to be resorted to in order to keep the alleged beneficiaries of the tariff tax from starvation? Isn't it a beneficent system of protection? But soup is a thin diet. Nearly as thin as a protectionist's argument.—Pomeroy (Ohio) Democrat.

Stirring Up the Senators.

"SENATOR HILL seems to have forgotten his speeches of two years ago in which he showed with great elaboration that protection was unconstitutional and undemocratic," says the St. Louis Post-Dispatch (Dem.).

THE Galveston News (Dem.) thinks that "if Democratic Senators had been bought up for campaign purposes and set to work by the Republicans, they could not possibly do more than they are now doing to help along the Republican party."

"THE only way to get the Senate to act on the tariff bill promptly is to attack that body vigorously," says the Savannah News (Dem.). "By adopting that course the Senators may be spurred on to greater efforts to reach a final vote on the bill, notwithstanding their assertion that they have no regard for public clamor.

"THE Democrats," says the Macon Telegraph (Dem.), "should expect no help on a purely party question like the tariff from their opponents. They must get together or they must expect to be defeated in the Senate and their party to be defeated in the country. They cannot shirk the responsibility, which rests upon them collectively as well as individually."

Sugar in the Senate.

"SUGAR" seems to be a big thing in politics.—Atlanta Constitution.

SWEET are the uses of adversity. In the midst of his county's troubles the United States Senator finds an opportunity to buy and sell sugar.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

THE advice of the Times to its subscribers and friends is to avoid speculation in sugar trust certificates unless they have trustworthy connections in the United States Senate.—Chicago Times.

COMPETITION is gone. The sugar trust has an absolute monopoly. To-day any duty on refined sugar aids the trust. It cannot establish an industry. Yet the duty is imposed. The trust gets what it wants. The duty on both raw and refined gives its vast capital an overwhelming advantage over small concerns.—Philadelphia Press.

A LANDLADY was complaining that she couldn't make both ends meet. "Well," said a boarder, "why not make one end vegetables?"

BLAND BILL VETOED.

PRESIDENT DECLINES TO INDORSE THE MEASURE.

Bill Is Returned to the House Without His Approval—Seigniorage Might Be Coined on an Issue of Low Interest Bearing Bonds.

Would Rob Us of Our Gold.

President Cleveland has vetoed the Bland bill. Long before the House was called to order Thursday morning the news had spread over the floor that the seigniorage bill had been vetoed, and later, according to a Washington dispatch, when the positive announcement was made it caused little excitement. The President's objections to the bill, in brief, are that the bill is loosely drawn and would rob us of our gold. He says he believes the coinage of the bullion seigniorage might be safely and advantageously done provided authority were given the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds at a low rate of interest. He expresses a hope for a comprehensive adjustment of our monetary affairs in a short time in a way to accord to silver its proper place in our currency.

In his veto message the President says: "My strong desire to avoid disagreement with those in both houses of Congress who have supported this bill would lead me to approve it if I could believe that the public good would not be thereby endangered, and that such action on my part would be a proper discharge of official duty.

"Inasmuch, however, as I am unable to satisfy myself that the proposed legislation is either wise or opportune, my conception of the obligations and responsibilities attached to the great office I hold forbids the indulgence of my personal desire and inexorably confines me to that course which is dictated by my reason and judgment and pointed out by a sincere purpose to protect and promote the general interests of our people.

The financial disturbance which swept over the country during the last year was unparalleled in its severity and disastrous consequences. There seemed to be almost an entire displacement of faith in our financial ability and a loss of confidence in our fiscal policy. Among those who attempted to assign causes for our distress it was very generally conceded that the operation of a provision of law then in force which required the Government to purchase monthly a large amount of silver bullion and issue its notes in payment therefor was either entirely or to a large extent responsible for our condition.

This led to the repeal, on Nov. 1, 1893, of this statutory provision. We had, however, fallen so low in the depths of depression and timidity, and apprehension had so completely gained control in financial circles, that our rapid recuperation could not be reasonably expected. Our recovery has, nevertheless, steadily progressed, and though less than five months have elapsed since the repeal of the mischievous silver purchase requirement a wholesome improvement is unmistakably apparent. Confidence in our absolute solvency is to such an extent reinstated, and faith in our disposition to adhere to sound financial methods is so far restored as to produce the most encouraging results, both at home and abroad.

The wheels of domestic industry have been slowly set in motion, and the tide of foreign investment has again started in our direction. Our recovery being so well under way nothing should be done to check our convalescence, nor should we forget that a relapse at this time would almost surely reduce us to a lower stage of financial distress than that from which we are just emerging.

I believe that if the bill under consideration should become a law it would be regarded as a retrogression from the financial intentions indulged by our recent repeal of the provision forcing silver bullion purchases; that it would weaken if it did not destroy returning faith and confidence in our sound financial tendencies, and that as a consequence our progress to renewed business health would be unfortunately checked and a return to our recent distressing plight seriously threatened.

Ill-Advised and Dangerous.

I am convinced that this scheme is ill-advised and dangerous. As an ultimate result of its operation, treasury notes which are legal tender for all debts, public and private, and which are redeemable in gold or silver, at the option of the holder, will be replaced by silver certificates which, whatever may be their character and description, will have none of these qualities. In anticipation of this result, and as an immediate effect, the treasury notes will naturally appreciate in value and desirability. The fact that gold can be realized upon them, and the further fact that their destruction has been decreed when they reach the Treasury, must tend to their withdrawal from general circulation, to be immediately presented for gold redemption or to be hoarded for presentation at a more convenient season. The sequel of both operations will be a large addition to the silver currency in our circulation and a corresponding reduction of gold in the Treasury.

The argument has been made that these things will not occur at once, because a long time must elapse before the coinage of anything but the seigniorage can be entered upon. If the physical effects of the execution of the second section of this bill are not to be realized until far in the future this may furnish a strong reason why it should not be passed so much in advance; but the postponement of its actual operation cannot prevent the fear and loss of confidence and nervous prostration which would immediately follow its passage and bring about its worst consequences.

GIVE UP IN DESPAIR.

POSTOFFICE DETECTIVES ABANDON SOUTH BEND.

Mail Robberies Continue Unabated in Spite of the Efforts of Postal Inspectors to Find the Thieves—Stealings Said to Amount to $10,000.

Pilfers Their Mail.

Mysterious mail robberies, inscrutable detectives who cannot find the thieves, and hundreds of angry correspondents whose money has gone astray, have lately been making life miserable for certain venders of patent medicines and cosmetics at South Bend, Ind. More than $10,000 is said to have disappeared in some mysterious way from the letters sent to South Bend, and, notwithstanding the efforts of the postoffice inspectors, the leak has not been discovered. Federal detectives have prowled around the postoffice in the Indiana town and have sent decoy letters through the mails. The thief or thieves declined to handle the decoys, and this scheme of catching the pilferers failed.

The sudden disappearance of the inspectors caused a ferment among the sufferers. When they learned that the detectives had given up the job in disgust the medicine men threw up their hands and wondered whether they would have to go out of business—complexions were being ruined irretrievably and there was no possibility of suing for damages. But the hardest loss is said to have fallen on the Indiana Traveling Men's Accident Association, which has its headquarters at South Bend. Secretary E. B. Russell reports the loss of 1,000 letters, each containing $2 or more. Angry members claim they cannot be held responsible for the continuous theft of their dues and the association has suffered severely. Still the pilfering goes on. It reached its height when the inspectors had just warmed to their work.

Audacity of the Robberies.

However worked, the scheme of the thieves is one of the most audacious in the history of postal robberies. Every employe in the South Bend postoffice has been watched and tested. Over the entire case an impenetrable shroud of secrecy has been flung by the postoffice departments. Though complaints were filed in Washington months ago and inspectors had been sent down to South Bend, nothing else was apparently done. Letters are still being purloined and robbed of the currency they contain. Money orders never reach their destination and are evidently torn up by the thieves, as the presenters would be instantly detected.

South Bend is the home of the patent medicine man and the fair but elderly vender of cosmetics. The latter is usually the wife of the former. Chief of Police Rose claims that there are 175 patent medicine and cosmetic factories in South Bend. The mail sent to the city is enormous, letters containing remittances being forwarded from every State in the Union and from Canada.

Where the letters have been diverted from their intended destination is part of the mystery surrounding the thefts. Four postoffice inspectors have failed to discover at what point the letters drop out of sight.

Traveling Men Robbed.

It was not until late in the fall of 1893 that the Indiana Traveling Men's Accident Association began to miss the dues sent in by members. Dues for September failed to reach the secretary's hands, but he did not notice it until the next month's payment fell due. Then he notified the delinquent members and in reply he received a bushel of letters from indignant members who declared they had sent in their September dues. Secretary Russell wrote to Washington and was referred to the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General. Three weeks ago he went to Washington and pressed the investigation. Two inspectors had already been sent to South Bend, but their mission had soon become known and they had to return to Cincinnati. Shortly after Mr. Russell's visit to Washington Chief Inspector Salomon, of the Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky division, went to South Bend and looked over the ground. Soon afterward Inspectors Fletcher and Holden established themselves in South Bend. Fletcher had 200 decoy letters sent to himself under the name of Wilson, but not one of them was touched. It was said more letters, however, were stolen while the detectives were at work than ever before.

SENATOR COLQUITT DEAD.

Georgia Statesman Passes Away Surrounded by Family and Friends.

United States Senator Alfred Holt Colquitt, of Georgia, died at his residence in Washington Monday. Around the bedside when he passed away were Senator Gordon and daughter, Mrs. Jones; Senator Colquitt's private secretary, his nephew, Mr. Bunn; his son, Mrs. Colquitt, three unmarried daughters, and his daughter, Mrs. Marshall, of Chicago. Senator Colquitt was stricken with paralysis in July, 1892, and from that time forward was unable to walk around without assistance.

Senator Colquitt was born in Walton County, Georgia, the son of the Rev. Walter T. Colquitt, an eminent minister in his day, April 20, 1824. He was graduated from Princeton college in the class of 1844 and admitted to the bar in 1845. During the Mexican war he served as a staff officer, with the rank of major. He was a member of the Georgia Legislature in 1859 and was elected to the House of Representatives in the Thirty-third Congress. He was a member of the secession convention of the State of Georgia, and later entered the Confederate service as Captain and was soon promoted to be Colonel of the Sixth Georgia Infantry. Later he served as Brigadier General and was commissioned as Major General. He was elected Governor of Georgia in 1876, served four years, and was re-elected under the new constitution for two years. At the expiration of his term as Governor he was elected to the United States Senate for the term commencing March 4, 1883, and was re-elected in 1888.

Appetite and Health Restored by Hood's Sarsaparilla

Mr. Charles Steele
St. Catherine's, Ont.

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:
"For a number of years I have been troubled with a general tired feeling, shortness of breath, pain in the back, and constipation. I could get only little rest at night on account of the pain and had no appetite whatever. I was that tired in my limbs that I gave out before half the day was gone. I tried a great number of medicines but did not get any permanent relief from any

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Sold by all Druggists.

TARDY REWARDS OF GENIUS.

Millet's Widow and His Greatest Painting, "Death and the Woodcutter."

A few days ago, writes the Paris correspondent of the Philadelphia Telegraph, there passed away from a troublous life the widow of the great artist, Jean Baptiste Francois Millet. It is rather a commentary on the strange ways of this world, the fact that the man whose picture, "l'Angelus," brought so fabulously high a price, sold that and many other masterpieces for sums ranging from $50 to $200 a piece, and after toiling miserably and hopelessly in the vain effort to earn money enough to keep the wolf from his shabby door suddenly broke down under the strain and died of a malady brought on by anxiety and privation, not knowing that his fame would speedily be lauded to the skies.

His family survived to see the apotheosis of his glory; but whether the fact of "The Angelus" bringing at a sale over $100,000 consoled the artist's widow for the fact that, within a week after this amount of money had been paid for her husband's work, she herself, then in the depths of poverty, was ejected from her little house at Barbizon by the foreclosure of a mortgage for $2,000 and, had it not been for the charity of her son-in-law, would have been reduced to begging her bread, is an unsolved mystery.

Millet's greatest work remains in Paris; it is the property, I think, of Mme. Charcot, widow of the great physician, who inherited it from her father, the celebrated millionaire tailor, Laurent Richard. It is called "Death and the Woodcutter." The grisly form has laid one bony hand on the shoulder of the old and weary man, bending under his load of wood; and the worn, haggard face is raised in absolute ecstacy to meet the summons. One hand is loosening the cords that binds his burden of branches and the other is laid willingly in the welcoming clasp of the Great Consoler. It is not an illustration of Lafontaine's fable; it is merely the utter weariness of life of an unsuccessful and wretched man, translated and transferred to canvas with the intensity of personal expression that transforms talent into momentary genius and renders genius transcendent.

NORTHWEST PASSAGE FOUND.

A Harpoon Sticking in the Body of a Whale—Placed There Long Ago.

One of the most interesting things to be seen in Washington, says the Post, is an old, battered harpoon head, branded with the letters "Mon T." The history of the relic is remarkable. It was found bedded deep in the body of a whale killed by the fleet after a terrific fight in the Comras grounds, off the northwest coast, some years ago. It was a great swivel-headed spear, well preserved, except where the shank of iron had been eaten away by the salt water down to the whale's body. From the brand on the iron its history could be traced. The mark was that of the steam whaler Montezuma, which was formerly a British man-of-war, and nearly sixty years ago was purchased by the Nantucket whalers and cruised in the North Atlantic. During the late war the Montezuma, which was then a worthless old hulk, was purchased by the Government and sunk as a part of the famous stone fleet to cage in the blockade runners at Charleston. From all the facts in her history it must have been nearly fifty years ago that she lost the harpoon in the great whale in the Atlantic, and as the humpback whale never goes south past the tropics this one must have worked his way over through the northwest passage and under the ice floes to the Compas grounds off the northwest coast, where he was killed by the San Francisco fleet nearly half a century later. This harpoon was long in the office of the whaling company in San Francisco and was presented by Senator Perkins to the National Geographic Society of Washington.

A Musical Gander.

Mr. Whymper tells a story of a bird that no one would expect to show musical taste: "At an old farmhouse in Wiltshire geese were kept in the orchard, and the gander would frequently enter the kitchen, the door of which was usually open in the summer time. The old bird was a general pet, and took advantage of the fact. One day the farmer's sister was playing on the piano in a room near the kitchen, when she felt something touch her, and, looking down, discovered master gander with his head resting on her knees, listening with great attention. When the music ceased, he stretched his wings, gave a quiet cackle, and walked off; but, the play recommencing, Tom—for that was his name—returned to his old position by the piano, nor could he be persuaded to leave till the music ceased. From that time, whenever there was music in the house, the gander would do his best to be one of the company. It was not supposed that he had a preference for any particular tune; but he took no notice whatever of the village brass band, which numbered among its instruments a drum of large size, beaten by a very powerful miller."—Boston Transcript.

A Cry for Help

In the stillness of the night is sufficiently startling. What if no aid be at hand or we know not whence the cry comes? This is not the case with that mute appeal made to the resources of medical science, ever ready, ever available by disease on every hand. A prompt means of self help for the malarious, the rheumatic, the dyspeptic, the bilious, and persons troubled with impending kidney complaints, is to be found in Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, an ever "present help in time of trouble" for all such hapless individuals. They should not delay a moment in seeking its aid. Experience has shown its wide utility, the recommendation of eminent physicians everywhere sanction its use. Nervous, thin, debilitated invalids gain bodily substance and vigor by a course of this fine invigorant, which is eminently serviceable, also, to the aged and convalescent.

A Curious Drum.

A drum in use among the Najas of India is formed out of the trunk of a large tree, hollowed, elaborately carved and painted in front, after the manner of a figurehead of a ship, and furnished at the other end with a straight tail. The drum is raised from the ground on logs of wood. It is sounded by letting a heavy piece of wood fall against it and by beating it with double-headed hammers.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 WALL ST., NEW-YORK.

Heavy Editorial Work.

New York uses about 100 barrels of paste daily. The manufacture was established in this city about thirty years ago; before that time the bookbinders, paper hangers, bill posters, shoemakers, paper box manufacturers and others using paste made their own; there are now about six paste factories in the city. Flour and water form the basis of paste; other ingredients are used, but what they are, and the process of manufacture, are trade secrets. The trade in paste is local; New York paste, for instance, is sold in this city and suburbs; there are now paste manufactories in the various larger cities which support the local demand. Paste sells at about $2.50 a barrel.—New York Sun.

Steam Engines for Farm Use.

Farmers ought to understand the management of all machinery, and especially the running of steam engines. Steam, wherever it can be available, is a much cheaper power than that of the horse. When the farmer has a steam engine with proper attachment he can do many things by steam power where he now has to use hand labor. He can also profitably employ the engine in winter working up wood for summer use, and on many farms working up a quantity for sale, also. In this way the wood lot may be made to yield a profitable return, and by judicious selection of the timber to be cut, it may be made better at the same time.

Found Diamonds in a Bale of Rags.

Miss Bridget O'Neal is a pretty girl who sorts rags at the Knowlton Brothers Paper Mill in this city. The other day she found two rings, which she put in her pocket and went on about her work. Thinking that they might be valuable, she told a male employe of the mill, and he took them to a jewelry store. The jeweler said one was a cluster of fifteen diamonds and valued at $150, and the other contained one diamond, a garnet, and a turquoise. No person has yet claimed the rings.—Utica Herald.

Discretion.

Two burglars broke into the house of a merchant who was generally considered to be very rich. After herculean efforts they managed to open the safe, but who can describe their disappointment when they found that it was empty and all their labor in vain? At that moment the master of the house, awakened by the noise, appeared on the scene. For a moment all three stood there as if turned into stone. The merchant was the first to come to himself.

"Gentlemen," he said, "let us all maintain a discreet silence over this incident. And now permit me to show you the door."

Deafness Can't Be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Phantom City of Glacier Bay.

For the past eight or ten years a curious phenomenon has been occasionally observed at Glacier Bay, Alaska. It always occurs immediately after the full moon of June and at no other time during the year, and is said to be a beautiful mirage of some unknown city suspended in the rarified air directly over the bay. A Juneau, Alaska, photographer has taken pictures of it on four different occasions, but so far no one has been able to identify a single one of the ghostly buildings outlined on his plates.—St. Louis Republic.

Is Life Short or Long?

If life is so short as some think it is, it may be made to seem much longer and sweeter by a better care for our comforts. Minor troubles are much magnified by neglect and delay. We give too much time to hunting up causes when we ought to deal promptly with effects. This is much the case with pain, which should be cured at once and cause looked into afterwards. Miss Ida M. Fleming, 7 S. Carey St., Baltimore, Md., states that for years she was subject to frequent attacks of neuralgia, and tried any number of remedies without avail. She was given quinine, which she says affected her nervous system. She suffered night and day during these attacks until she tried St. Jacobs Oil, which finally cured her.

The lady whose portrait heads this article is Mrs. Mary F. Covell, of Scotland, Bon Homme Co., S. Dak. She writes to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Chief Consulting Physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y., as follows: "I was sick two years with 'falling of the womb' and leucorrhœa previous to taking your medicines. I took six bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and was entirely cured of both in six months; it is four years this month, since I was entirely well of both those diseases and have never had any signs of their appearance since and I am satisfied the 'Favorite Prescription' saved my life, for I could hardly walk around when I commenced taking that medicine and I think it is a God's blessing to me that I took it.

I was pronounced incurable by the best doctors here in the West. I gave up all hopes and made up my mind that I was to be taken away from my husband and baby of two years old. I was sick all of the time—could not eat anything at all. In one week, after beginning the use of the 'Favorite Prescription' my stomach was so much better that I could eat anything: I could see that I was gaining all over, and my husband then went and got me six bottles; I took three of them and my stomach did not bother me any more.

We sent to you and got the People's Common Sense Medical Adviser, and found my case described just as I was: we did what the book told us, in every way; in one month's time I could see I was much better than I had been; we still kept on just as the book told us, and in three months I stopped taking medicine, and to-day, I can proudly say I am a well woman, yes, am well, strong and healthy.

When I began to take your medicine my face was poor and eyes looked dead. I could not enjoy myself anywhere, I was tired and sick all the time. I could hardly do my house-work, but now I do that and tend a big garden, help my husband and take in sewing."

The following will prove interesting to feeble women generally, and especially so to those about to become mothers. Mrs. Dora A. Guthrie, of Oakley, Overton Co., Tenn., writes: "I never can thank you enough for what your treatment has done for me; I am stronger now than I have been for six years. When I began your treatment I was not able to do anything. I could not stand on my feet long enough to wash my dishes without suffering almost death; now I do all my housework, washing, cooking, sewing and everything for my family of eight. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best medicine to take before confinement that can be found; or at least it proved so with me. I never suffered so little with any of my children as I did with my last and she is the healthiest we have. I recommend your medicines to all of my neighbors and especially 'Favorite Prescription' to all women who are suffering. Have induced several to try it, and it has proved good for them." Yours truly,

Dora A. Guthrie

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate leucorrhœa, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions and irregularities, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness of the ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a scientific medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness or nausea, due to pregnancy, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use will prove very beneficial.

Dr. Pierce's Book, "Woman and Her Diseases," (168 pages, illustrated), giving successful means of home treatment, can be had (sealed in plain envelope) by enclosing 10 cts., in one cent stamps, to pay postage, to the Doctor, at his address, as given at the beginning of this article.

The Angola Papers.

The Angola papers deserve a high compliment for their enterprise in reporting and publishing the details of the Deeter's trial, the most noted and hard fought trial ever known in this circuit. Their notes were fuller and more complete than seen in any daily except the great city papers when a noted case is on trial like the Pendergast case, or the Coughlin case. And it pays the great city daily, while in this case, we presume it has been only a bill of expense to the papers at Angola. We have no doubt the people of that county appreciate such newspaper enterprise, for it is rarely excelled. The COURIER at this late day, takes this occasion to thank the Republican, the Herald and the Magnet for favors in this connection and for the very liberal use we have made of their columns.

A STRANGE CASE.

How an Enemy was Foiled.

The following graphic statement will be read with intense interest: "I cannot describe the numb, creepy sensation that existed in my arms, hands and legs. I had to rub and beat those parts until they were sore, to overcome in a measure the dead feeling that had taken possession of them. In addition, I had a strange weakness in my back and around my waist, together with an indescribable 'gone feeling in my stomach. Physicians said it was creeping paralysis, from which, according to their universal conclusion, there is no relief. Once it fastens upon a person, they say, it continues its insidious progress until it reaches a vital point and the sufferer dies. Such was my prospect. I had been doctoring a year and a half steadily, but with no particular benefit, when I saw an advertisement of Dr Miles' Restorative Nervine, procured a bottle and began using it. Marvelous as it may seem, but a few days had passed before every bit of that creepy feeling had left me, and there has not been even the slightest indication of its return. I now feel as well as I ever did, and have gained ten pounds in weight, though I had run down from 170 to 147. Four others have used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine on my recommendation, and it has been as satisfactory in their cases as in mine."—James Hane, La Rue, O.

SUPREME COURT CLERK.

C. W. Welman, Editor of the Sullivan Times and County Superintendent a Candidate.

[Terre Haute Gazette]

C. W. Welman, of Sullivan, is a candidate for the democratic nomination for Clerk of the Supreme Court, and will be a strong candidate. He has a large acquaintance over the state, and is in every way fitted for the position. He is editor of the Sullivan Times, and is prominent and popular in newspaper circles. He is president of the Indiana Democratic Editorial Association, and a member of the Southern Indiana Press Association; was a delegate to the National Editorial Association at Detroit in 1889, Boston in 1890 and Chicago in 1893; and is also County Superintendent of Sullivan county and is a member of the County Superintendents' Association. He is a brilliant writer, a forcible, eloquent speaker and has done good service for his party.

Mr. Welman was born in Crawford county, Indiana, Sept. 18, 1858; removed with his parents to Gibson county, where the latter still reside, in 1860. His grandfather was a pioneer of Indiana, and his father was born in Orange county in 1816. He attended the High school at Fort Branch and the Northern Indiana Normal school at Valparaiso, and taught school in Gibson and Vanderburgh counties from 1878 to 1885; engaged in the newspaper business, editing various local papers, and took charge of the Sullivan Times in 1888, which paper he continues to ably edit. He was elected county superintendent of schools in 1891 and re-elected in 1893.

At the first meeting of the county superintendents after his election, he electrified the association by a brilliant defense of the superintendents against an attack by a speaker. He is held in high esteem by school officers and other educators in the state, with whom he enjoys a large acquaintance. He is prominent, locally, in secret work, and is a member of the Masonic fraternity, the Knights of Pythias and Improved Order of Red Men. The nomination of Mr. Welman will add strength to the ticket, especially in this district where Sullivan county must furnish the majority to elect a congressman. The Gazette wishes him success."

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for April.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for April is a typical number of this favorite periodical, which, for timely interest, variety and animation, stands easily first amongst contemporary illustrated magazines. The opening paper is a delightful account, by Charles Bradford Hudson, of the Mecca of students, the Latin Quarter of Paris; illustrated with fourteen drawings by the author, including a page picture of the fantastic Mid-Lent Carnival in the Place du Pantheon. Other illustrated descriptive articles are "The Bermudas," by Dr. J. B. Mattison, and "Logging in Northern Wisconsin," by W. H. Stead. The element of personality is abundantly represented in this number by two notable papers: "A Generation of the New York Bar," by Alvan S. Southworth, and "Three Actresses: a Symposium," by Champion Bissell, the two involving a score or so of interesting portraits. Martha McCulloch Williams writes charmingly, as ever, about the Image Makers of New York, which picturesque subject Hencke has illustrated in his best style. The complete stories include a characteristic one by Count Tolstoi "Ivan the Fool;" and a second installment is given of the promising new serial, "The Silver Shafts." Other contributors to this number are, Elaine Goodale Eastman, Charles H. Crandall, Minna Irving, Judith Spencer, Lilian Whiting, Ethel Hatton Lestner Neude A. Andrews, Nora K. Marble, A. Oakey Hall, Dorothy Deane, Virginia R. Coxe and George C. Hurlbut.

Surprised Him.

The residents of St. Johns and vicinity met at M. L. Hoffman's last Saturday evening, and repaired from there to C. H. Baber's. They found Charlie in the sugar camp making molasses. One of the boys was dispatched to tell him that an accident had occured which required his immediate assistance at the house. He started off at a Maud S gait, arriving at the house all excited and out of breath. After he had been laughed at for an hour or so the crowd finally regained their equilibrum, and Charlie concluded he had witnessed quite a birthday surprise, it being his thirty eighth birthday. The evening was spent in games etc. Just before supper, which was indeed a bountiful one, Mr. Baber was presented with a beautiful hanging lamp. By his reply, they all knew how dearly he prized his present. After supper all went home well pleased with the evening's entertainment. The following were present with their wives: W. H. Fair, P. Noel, Geo. Beever, D. Rinsholdt, Miles Embry, Mark Kutzner, M. L. Hoffman, R. Dudley, Ed. Hippenhammer, Josh Miller; Mrs. Effie Hogue; Misses Florence, and Flossie Noel, Emma, Anne and Carrie Heitz, Louise Hoffman; I. N. Terry, J. Manges, J. I. A Crying Need.

Hon. J. B. Stoll makes the following practical suggestions in the South Bend Times which will injure no party to heed: "The probabilities are that the next house of the general assembly of Indiana will be politically close. In view of this, leaving untouched other considerations, democrats and republicans alike ought to take pains to see to it that good, intelligent, thoughtful men are nominated. Above everything else care should be exercised that very few, if any, rattle-brained, loud-mouthed, swaggering political blusterers are chosen by either party. Such fellows are a nuisance in a legislative body, and invariably bring reproach upon the party with which they are identified. There are plenty of good, level-headed men in this state who would make creditable and reputable members of the legislature, hence there is no occasion or necessity for drawing on those of the swashbuckler or yawper persuasion."

FARMS FOR THE MILLION.

The marvelous development of the States of Minnesota, South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, and Wyoming, within the last few years, has attracted attention in all parts of the world. It is not necessary, however, to search far for the causes of this wonderful growth, for this entire region, which is penetrated by The North-Western Line, teems with golden opportunities for enterprising farmers, mechanics and laborers who desire to better their condition. Here are lands which combine all varieties of soil, climate and physical feature that render them most desirable for agriculture or commerce. Rich rolling prairies, capable of raising the finest quality of farm products in luxurious abundance, can still be secured at low prices and upon most liberal terms, and in many cases good productive farms can be purchased for scarcely more than the yearly rental many eastern farmers are compelled to pay. Reaching the principal cities and towns and the richest and most productive farming districts of this favored region The North Western Line (Chicago & North-Western R'y) offers its patrons the advantages of ready markets, unexcelled train service, perfect equipment and all the comforts and conveniences known to strictly first-class railway travel. Maps, time tables and general information can be obtained of ticket agents of connecting lines, or by addressing W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent Chicago & North-Western R'y Chicago, Ill.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

LITERARY NOTE.

Napoleon Bonaparte a Contributor to the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

The singular good fortune has fallen to the lot of the Cosmopolitan Magazine of presenting one of the most remarkable pieces of fiction ever written—remarkable because of its author and remarkable because it has remained unsuspected and undiscovered for more than a hundred years, only to be given to the world at last in an American magazine. During a recent call at the office of the editor of The Cosmopolitan, he mentioned that he had on the presses in the April number a literary treasure, and asked me to guess the name, saying that it was written by a most distinguished person. After a moment's thought, I ventured:

"President Harrison?"

"Greater than he," was the reply.

"Guess again."

"Blaine?"

"Greater than Blaine."

"Gladstone?"

"Greater than he."

"Bismarck?"

"Greater than he."

"Emperor William?"

"Much greater."

"Pope Leo XIII?" I guessed wildly.

"Greater than he."

Then I was at a loss and hesitated.

"You must not confine yourself to living men," he interrupted.

"You say it is a piece of fiction and by a man greater than Bismarck, Gladstone, the Emperor William? I confess you puzzle me."

"Well, suppose I say it was a Corsican story."

The riddle was out. A story was actually in existence by Napoleon Bonaparte. The manuscript had survived the vicissitudes of war and exile. Had remained locked up for a hundred years and was now about to be brought to light in America. It appears from the researches made by the French Napoleonic scholar, Frederic Masson, who vouches for the fact over his own signature, that Napoleon, when a young lieutenant, wrote a Corsican story. The manuscript of this he confided to his uncle, Cardinal Fesch, then Archbishop of Lyons. When Cardinal Fesch died in 1839, his papers were intrusted to his Grand Vicar, Abbe Lyonnet. Napoleon's manuscript was sold by the abbe to Libri, a member of the Academy and inspector of French libraries. Libri sold this and some other manuscripts to Lord Ashburnham for $40,000, and from 1842 to a recent date Napoleon's manuscripts slumbered in Ashburnham Castle. The Cosmopolitan maintains staff editors in both London and Paris, men of wide acquirements, who spend their time exclusively for what is likely to be of great value to the readers of the magazine. To the Paris editor belongs the honor of securing for an American periodical the interesting manuscript from the pen of the world's greatest personality.

UNITED HOSPITAL AND DISPENSARY,
Boston, Mass.
ALLEN C. SMITH, Pres.,

The Centaur Company, 77 Murray Street, New York City.

WATERLOO.

Frank Beidler moves his family to Auburn this week. Mr. Beidler's business keeping him in Auburn almost compels this change. Their departure will be regretted and their absence felt generally, not only in the church, of which Mr. and Mrs. B. are members, but by many other friends and acquaintances.

Saturday evening Mrs. Dell Locke and her daughter Lucile arrived in Waterloo from Decatur, for a brief visit with her numerous relatives and friends. They returned home Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Dell Locke are much pleased with Decatur and the people there, and especially with their prospects. Business is lively with them.

Mr. Kagey has rented and will at once take possession of Frank Beidler's house, vacated by him.

Rev. Dr. Fry preached an exceedingly interesting discourse Sunday morning to a very good audience. The attendance has considerably increased there lately.

The L. M. C. hold their next session Tuesday, April 10, at the home of Mrs. Mary Boozer.

Last Friday evening, and until after eleven o'clock at least, the northern sky presented a beautiful sight. Long rays of light spread out from a central point, over a background of dark blue; these rays remained fixed. The heavens in that part, this side and far below the light rays, seemed filled with white clouds of thin smoke, constantly moving and changing form, while back of all, the sky was continually changing from light to dark, making the walk, if on an unlighted street, light one instant and dark the next, and so continually. It was a curious and unusual appearance.

We learn that last June May S. Dilla, of Jackson, Mich., sued for a divorce, then came with her children to her parents. Soon after F. E Dilla came and made such concessions as she thought would justify her going back, which she did. But last Wednesday she again filed a claim for a bill of divorce, then packed up her and her children's clothing, bedding, etc., and returned to the home of her parents, where she has the respect of all.

The April meeting of the Agricultural society is held here next Tuesday, April 10.

The late Geo. Wareham has a splendid monument just put up in the cemetery. It was made by Madden Brothers at Auburn, and will add greatly to the beauty of our lovely cemetery.

Miss Edith Farrington, daughter of Dr. A S. Farrington, who has been at Jamestown, N. Y., for the past year, returned home Saturday. Her many friends are glad to welcome her back, and to see her looking so well and happy.

Born to Mr. and Mrs Will Randall, a son. To Mr. and Mrs Earl Abbey, a daughter. To Mrs. Libbie Buss, a daughter.

Mrs. J. C. Boyer and Mrs. Prentiss Gill attended the W. C. T. U. meeting at St. Joe last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Kelley and Mrs James O Blake have been in Chicago a few days, visiting the family of F. K. Blake.

Judge McClellan and little granddaughter, Helen, were in town a few hours on Tuesday

Dr. and Mrs. Adams, of Auburn, Mrs L. J Blair and daughter, spent the Sabbath with Mr. Levi Brandaberry and wife.

Mr. A. V Sinclair, in trying to lift a keg of nails, sprained his back so badly as to be confined to the house for some days.

Mrs. Emma McFarrand, nee F[illegible] has returned home to Ft. Wayne.

David Seery, an old resident, died at his home north of town on Friday and was buried Sunday afternoon. He was 82 years old. The funeral services were held in the U. B. church.

Miss Sarah Trail has left the farm, purchased a house, and become a resident of the town. We extend a hearty welcome.

WATERLOO.

LAST WEEK.

J. C Boyer returned from Chicago the latter part of last week He was confined to the house for several days with a severe cold after his arrival home, but was on the street again Monday.

Some of the traveling men say they see many indications of good times. One, a very gentlemanly and intelligent man, thinks a year from now there will be nothing to show that we have hard times.

Easter services were generally observed in the churches.

The W. C. T U. gave a tea Tuesday evening to a few invited guests, each member inviting one This organization keeps up their interest and seems to be increasing in numbers.

Eggs are down to five cents, now that Easter is over

The members of the Ladies' Missionary Society of the Presbyterian church gave a tea Easter eve at the home of Mrs John S. Jackman, to which a few guests were invited. The supper was very inviting to look at, and tasted as good as it looked. A large ornamental standard dish was kept heaped with beautifully tinted eggs, each one present taking one home as a reminder of the occasion. A cute feature noticed was, on the very top o' the piled up eggs was perched a young spring chicken. The feast partaken of and a pleasant evening spent.

Mrs. Ford returned home to Chicago Friday, after a visit of nearly two weeks, with her sister, Mrs. J. C. Boyer and Mrs Henry Williss.

Difference in Taxes.

The following letter from Senator Mills so tersely and plainly explains the difference between specific and advalorem tariffs that we publish it entire, thinking it may be of more than passing interest to those who have given tariff taxation but little thought:

"In response to your request for my reasons for advocating advalorem duties in imposing rates on imported articles I give you this hasty note. There are two opposing policies about tariffs. One is that the principal object of the duty should be to protect the domestic product against foreign competition. The other is that the duty should be laid for revenue, and for that alone. Those who have advocated the protection theory have clung with tenacity to the specific duty, or the duty on quantity, as yards, pounds, tons, dozens, etc. etc. The friends of the revenue policy have clung to the rate of values, or advalorem as it is called. The advalorem system informs every citizen of the amount of tax imposed on each article. The specific system conceals it. Horses may be taxed $30 per head. If the horse were worth $10, it would be 300 per cent and an unreasonable tax, which would bring no revenue because such horses could not be imported, but it would protect the domestic raiser of such stock. We have that tax now under existing law and it excludes many things and the government loses the revenue it would get with a revenue duty. The tax on the quanity—the specific article—conceals from the people the fact that it is 300 per cent on the value. These instances might be extended indefinitely, I will give one more instance. Pearl buttons are taxed 2½ cents per line. Who knows what the tax is on this little necessary of life by this description? It is on all the clothing of all the children of the poor. The specific duty is over 143 per cent. Who would have had the effrontery to have written down in the tariff law a duty of 143 per cent on pearl buttons? Protectionists cling to the specific duty because it is the most efficient instrument of exhorbitant taxation, and for the same reason Democrats oppose it. Again, it discriminates against the poor by charging higher rates on cheap articles that the poorer people must buy. A duty of 50 cents on a yard of cloth worth $1 will be 50 per cent; on cloth worth 50 cents per yard it would be 100 per cent, and on a yard of cloth worth 25 cents it would be 200 per cent. It is therefore, an unequal and an unjust tax. This discrimination runs through the whole system from top to bottom Again, if the specific quantities had the same value at the time of imposing the duty the tax burden grows heavier as the years roll on, because the invention of machinery that multiplies production and lowers its cost, which is going steadily on, is increasing the tax all the while. A tax of 25 cents on a yard of cloth that costs to-day $1 would be 25 per cent. If the cloth falls to 50 cents per yard the tax rises to 50 per cent, and if the cloth falls to 25 cents per yard the duty rises to 100 per cent. Prices have been falling for sixty years, and to a considerable extent within the last thirty years, and nothing is better understood among protectionists than that falling prices make rising duties for the benefit of the domestic producer. Every one understands the advalorem rate. All the taxes in all the states, countries and cities are advalorem. All the commercial business of the world is carried on by value. Every purchase and sale of goods is by value, and it is the merest trifling with the common sense of the people to say that duties cannot be honestly collected when imposed by advalorem rates. In 1846, when the Democratic party struck boldly out for tariff reform, President Polk urged advalorem duties on congress. Secretary Robert J. Walker pressed upon congress the importance of abandoning specific duties and making a tariff for revenue with advalorem duties. The great tariff of 1846 had not one specific duty in all its schedules. It brought such an excess of revenues to the treasury that in 1857 another tariff had to be made, still further reducing duties, and that, like the tarifi of 1846, was exclusively advalorem. There have always been some Democrats who advocated specific duties, but they are protectionists. They are guarding the interests of certain classes, not the interest of the masses. The Democratic masses to-day are for advalorem duties, and to abandon that policy is to abandon the fight."

Obituary.

Mariah Stoner was born April 12, 1826, and died March 29, 1894, aged 67 years, 11 months and 17 days,

At the age of 21 she married Isaac Jackman, and was widowed April 12, 1872, in which state she remained untill her death. She was a native of Wayne Co., Ohio, and was one of a family of ten children. Two of them survive her, being H. M. Stoner, of Warsaw, Ind., and Mrs. Mary Noel, of Butler township, this county. She enjoyed the blessings of motherhood, and three grown and prosperous children survive her. Mrs. Olive Williams, of Tombstone, Arizona, John S. and Norman T., of DeKalb Co. The silent messenger overtook her at the home of her daughter. Her disease, that of paralysis, overcame her after a duration of three hours, her death being peaceful and painless. Just that morning she had expressed a wish that death might be sudden. Mrs. Williams accompanied the remains on the long journey to the home of John S. Jackman, of Waterloo, that they might lay the body to rest where her enviable history had been made, and that the sacred spot in Waterloo cemetery may be tenderly cared for by the stalwart sons and surviving friends. Early in life she espoused the christain faith, and her character and actions have ever been consistant with her profession.

The obsequies took place in the afternoon of April 5, all the living relatives being present.

FARMS FOR THE MILLION.

The marvelous development of the States of Minnesota, South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, and Wyoming, within the last few years, has attracted attention in all parts of the world. It is not necessary, however, to search far for the causes of this wonderful growth. for this entire region, which is penetrated by The North-Western Line, teems with golden opportunities for enterprising farmers, mechanics and laborers who desire to better their condition. Here are lands which combine all varieties of soil, climate and physical feature that render them most desirable for agriculture or commerce. Rich rolling prairies, capable of raising the finest quality of farm products in luxurious abundance, can still be secured at low prices and upon most liberal terms, and in many cases good productive farms can be purchased for scarcely more than the yearly rental many eastern farmers are compelled to pay. Reaching the principal cities and towns and the richest and most productive farming districts of this favored region The North Western Line (Chicago & North-Western R'y) offers its patrons the advantages of ready markets, unexcelled train service, perfect equipment and all the comforts and conveniences known to strictly first-class railway travel. Maps, time tables and general information can be obtained of ticket agents of connecting lines, or by addressing W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent Chicago & North-Western R'y Chicago, Ill.

It May Do as Much for You.

Mr. Fred Miller, of Irving, Ill, writes that he had a severe kidney trouble for many years, with severe pains in his back, and also that his bladder was affected. He tried many so called kidney cures but without any good result. About a year ago he began the use of Electric Bitters and found relief at once. Electric Bitters is especially adapted to the cure of all kidney and liver troubles and often gives almost instant relief. One trial will prove our statement. Price only 50 cents for large bottles at Robbins & McCord's drug store. 6

A Correction.

A few weeks ago, we spoke pretty severely of affairs at the Beard schoolhouse in Richland, when referring to the trees in the school yard there. Our informant believed he had the correct understanding of the matter, having passed by there, and seeing the trees with the bark hanging in strips, very naturally supposed they had been purposely injured. We have since learned from the people there that the trees died last season, and therefore were utterly valueless. So the boys peeled them. We are glad to make this correction, as we should indeed feel sorry to know that any wanton destruction of shade trees or other school property would be allowed, or that any pupils would do such an act of vandalism. We are all the more certain that the school property there will be cared for, as this is the school that has been for several years in charge of a very able teacher, Mr. N. B. Hathaway. We have, too, always encouraged the school patrons to beautify and care for their school grounds, and we feel pleased to know that this is being looked after. And, right here, we wish to say again, what we have often said, that our people cannot show their interest in schools in a better way than to care for and beautify the grounds around the school house. They have paid large sums of money to get these school houses and grounds, and they should be preserved and improved. Nothing speaks better for the intelligence and enterprise of a community than the appearance of their school property. And he is a very dull and indifferent man who does not notice these things as he is driving by. Is there any work to be done on the school grounds this spring? If so, let us do it before the busy season opens.

Big Sale.

Ex-Auditor C. C. Walter will sell off all his personal property at public sale, April 17, at his home across the river, northeast of St. Joe. It will be a big sale, as there are blooded horses and cattle, a great variety of almost new farm machinery, a platform scales, hay fork ropes and pulleys, stoves, fence pickets, water tank, bees, potatoes, etc. See the bills for a list of articles. Remember the date, April 17.

A Readable Woman's Magazine.

Edward Bellamy tells a singularly interesting story in his account of "How I Wrote 'Looking Backwards'" in the April Ladies Home Journal, and adds to the interest by describing how the idea of Nationalism first occurred to him. Not less personally interesting is Mr. William Dean Howells in the fifth article of his literary autobiography, "My Literary Passions." The clever woman whom Robert Louis Stevenson married, and is now his wife, is presented in a portrait and sketch, as is also the wife of E. S. Willard, the actor. Practical in its letter-press and beautiful in illustrations is an article on "The Care of a St. Bernard Dog" by Alexander Mackenzie-Hughes, manager of the New York St. Bernard Kennels. Madame Blanc, under her nom de guerre of "Th. Bentzon," straightens out some "American Mistakes About French Women." A love ballad, very musical, by George Woodill, entitled "Tell Me," is given in its full piano score. Mrs. S. T. Rorer tells of "Wedding Breakfast;" Robert J. Burdette defines the attitude of the father towards a son; Palmer Cox has his "Brownies" in Florida; a full page of four articles tells women how to open bank accounts, keep household expenses, and how to make a will; the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage points out what are the chief "Enemies of Our Happiness"; Edward W. Bok answers the peculiar questions of "Four Uncertain Young Women"; while all through the other articles runs that peculiary readable and popular quality which make this magazine so eagerly sought for and widely read. The Journal is published by The Curtis Publishing Company of Philadelphia, for one dollar per year, or ten cents per copy.

A LITTLE HEROINE.

An Indiana Girl to Receive the Cross of the French Legion of Honor.

A Columbus, O., special says: Jennie Creek, a 9-year-old girl of Millgrove, Ind., is the little heroine for whom the Society of Humanity in far-away France has been searching to present her with an emblem of recognition for saving the lives of so many passengers on a railway train in America. The French society mentioned sent a communication to Gov. McKinley, asking for the name of a child who stood on a railroad track in front of a burning bridge, and, tearing off her little red petticoat, waived it before an approaching train until she succeeded in bringing it, by waiving, to a standstill on the brink of the threatened calamity.

Not one of the executive department remembered the name of the child, nor just when, nor where the affair occurred. The communication was turned over to State Railroad Commissioner Kirby's department for investigation, and the other day the mystery was solved. Mrs. Arthur Owens, of No. 333 North Fourth street, this city, called upon Capt. Ed Archer, chief clerk of the Railroad Commissioner's office, and presented evidence showing that the child was her niece, Jennie Creek, of Millgrove, Ind. The heroic act occurred at that place September 9, last, on the Pittsburgh, Chicago and St. Louis road. The tribute of the child's bravery is a beautiful cross of the Legion of Honor of France.

Took French Leave.

Buenos Ayres special: One hundred and twelve Brazilian insurgent officers and sailors, who escaped from the Portuguese warships Mindello and Alfonso De Albuquerque, have landed at the Buenos Ayres quarantine station. Admiral De Gama who was repoited to be among those who escaped, is now said to have refused at the last moment to leave the Mindello. The plan for the escape of the Brazilians was concocted in this city by Brazilian refugees. When the United Press correspondent called at the Portuguese Legation to inquire what action would be taken by the Portuguese Government in view of the escape of the fugitives, the Legation officials refused to give any information beyond saying that the two Portuguese men-of-war had sailed for Montevideo.

Business Block Destroyed.

The Frothingham Arcade, one of the finest four-story business blocks in Scranton, Pa., was completely destroyed by fire. This structure was occupied by stores and offices principally, Weichel's jewelry store, Sank's shoe store and the Columbia bicycle agency, the stocks of which were totally ruined, the loss will reach $100,000. The several individual losses and the insurance has not yet been ascertained The Odd Fellows' hall was on fire several times, but the watchfulness of the firemen saved the building, as well as the Frothingham new theater and other adjoining property. The Westminster Hotel adjoining was filled with smoke, and the guests were hurried from the rooms into the street. The fire is believed to have been of incendiary origin.

Dynamite Explosion.

Berlin special: A disastrous explosion of dynamite occurred near the town of Boemitz, in Mecklenburg Schwerin. While a number of workmen were engaged in the manufacture of that explosive in a dynamite laboratory outside the town a quantity of the dynamite became ignited and the works were blown to pieces. The bodies of three of the workmen were literally blown to the winds, while five others were so terribly mangled that they cannot live. The wreckage of the buildings was strewn about the adjacent fields, some of the debris being carried away half a mile.

A Hoosier Town Excited.

Much excitement was created at Brazil, Ind., recently, by Chief of Police Louderback, receiving an anonymous letter signed "Anarchist." The writer declared that he was a practical bomb maker and has several of the deadly weapons in his possession and had determined to blow up the coal operators if they attempted to cut the miners' wages. He also warned the moneyed class to take warning and not affiliate with the operators.

Cafe City Wrecked.

News is brought to San Francisco by the Belgic that the British barkentine Cafe City has been wrecked in the north China sea while on her way from Chee Foo to America. The vessel is a total loss. Half her crew, including Capt. T. A. Rodney, was drowned.

Prendergast Again.

Prendergast, the assassin of Mayor Harrison, assaulted a guard recently. The prisoner was badly wounded before he was returned to his cell.

Agreed to.

The Wolcott resolution for coinage of Mexican standard dollars in United States mints has been agreed to before the Senate.

Strikers' Families Starving.

Grove City (Pa.) special: Many families of the striking miners at Chestnut Ridge are starving. For the past month they have been receiving aid from the farmers of Southern Mercer County, but now the latter refuse to aid them further because they think the men should accept the reduction and return to work. The operators say that the old wages will be paid when trade brightens up, and they do not want their men to accept the reduction as permanent.

Smuggled Opium.

St. Louis special: J. C. Wilhite, a feed dealer at Benton Station, a suburb of this city, was arrested for dealing in smuggled opium and placed under $1,000 bonds. He acknowledges handling the contraband drug and says he sold fifty packages of it to a Chinaman here and shipped ten packages to his son, J. E. Wilhite, in Chicago, who sold the consignment there. The Chicago man is also under arrest. United States officers have trailed his opium from Vancouver, B. C., where it was converted from the raw material into the refined article and smuggled across the border. This arrest has placed the officers on the track of a large smuggling combination and other arrests will follow. The Chinaman who bought the drug here has disappeared.
